Editorial

Let us put by some hour of each day
For holy things!—whether it be when dawn
Peers through the window pane, or when the noon
Flames, like a burnished topaz, in the vault,
Or when the thrush pours in the ear of eve
Its plaintive monody; some little hour
Wherein to hold rapt converse with the soul,
From sordidness and self a sanctuary,
Swept by the winnowing of unseen wings,
And touched by the White Light ineffable!
—Clinton Scollard.

"Do you see anything lacking in this imperial show?" said one citizen to another in the midst of the splendors of a Roman festival. "Yes," said the other, it lacks permanence." That is the trouble with all the pride, pomp, pleasures, and possessions of the world—they do not last. Only spiritual riches and joys may be kept forever.

A writer in The Methodist Times, of London, in referring to the European war, says: "The present trouble has helped to create a new spirit of prayer in many directions. People who have long neglected family prayer are now trying to revive the laudable custom of having an altar in the home." This is merely history repeating itself. In days of prosperity men and women are disposed to feel self-sufficient; but when overwhelming troubles come they realize their need of the assistance of a higher power. But why should people wait to be scourged into seeking the help of the gracious Heavenly Father?

A contemporary says: "One of the greatest dangers to which religious leaders and speakers are exposed is that of misplaced emphasis or exaggeration. It is a fault which can be easily acquired, but which is very difficult to correct." This is very true. The fact that such speakers are not answered by other speakers, as are lawyers and politicians, makes it especially incumbent upon them to be exact and fair in all their statements. The habit of strict loyalty to the truth in his discourses is a valuable one for a minister to form. It tends to win the confidence of his audiences and to give weight to his utterances.

It is all right to be an optimist, provided one feels the obligation to make the world better and keeps busy trying to discharge it. But the easy-going man who talks cheerfully because he is getting on well himself and doesn't specially care how others are faring, is not a character to be admired. Hopeful serious men, who carry the burdens of society on their hearts and who toil and struggle to uplift humanity, are the main reliance and true benefactors of the race. Life is never a gala-day for those in whose ears ceaselessly ring the cries of earth's needy millions. The British Weekly speaks of these light-hearted persons who never concern themselves much about grave things as "'cork souls,' who float lightly whither the breezes will, averting their attention from tragedy, and making as if burdensome things do not count." Renan is set down as having belonged to this class.

THE CHURCH'S HARVEST SHOULD BE CONSTANT.

Many people seem to think that success in spiritual work is largely a matter of supernatural caprice, and that it is beyond the power of Christian workers to achieve it with any degree of certainty. This is very far from being true. To be sure, we must have the assistance of the Holy Spirit to accomplish anything worth while for the Master, but when the conditions are rightly met the Holy Spirit may always be counted upon to descend upon us. A spiritual harvest, like a material one, comes as a result of a faithful compliance with certain antecedent requirements: there must be sowing, cultivation, and the refreshing rain and dews from heaven. The trouble with many workers is that they want to thrust in the sickle and reap without the necessary previous preparation for a crop. What we need is churches that will keep busy the whole year through planting, and cultivating, and watchfully harvesting the precious grain as soon as it ripens. The notion that the harvesting must take place all at once is an utterly mistaken one; it ought to be ever maturing and being constantly brought into the garner. The ideal congregation of Christians is one that is always alert, active, expectant, and steadily bringing souls into the Kingdom.

The following statement by Bishop J. H. Vincent, one of the most spiritual leaders in American Methodism, for which we are indebted to the Northwestern Christian Advocate, bears pertinently on this point:

"The best evangelist for a Church is the pastor himself. With this thought in mind he should preach and visit. He should pray for some additions to his church every week. The church should be reminded of this at every prayer meeting; and the prayer meeting is the place for the first declaration of a purpose to begin the religious life. The pastor's emphasis on this, and the open door every Sunday and at every prayer meeting should cause one, two, or more persons every week to report themselves as candidates for church membership. He should hold a conversation hour for inquirers summer and winter and should not wait to open the doors of the Church on some particular Sabbath. There should be in every church a candidates' class and at every prayer meeting and public service persons should be invited to unite with it as a first step toward church membership. In the ideal Church somebody makes a start toward the Kingdom every week.

"This candidates' class should secure the presence at the weekly evening prayer meeting of inquirers who want to begin now, and week after week during the entire year the doors of the spiritual Church should be open for incoming disciples and inquirers. When we are in downright earnest, candidates will come to us as inquirers. Let the Church be in downright earnest all the time."

There are but three steps to heaven—out of self, into Christ, into glory.—Rowland Hill.

VALUE OF PRAYER MEETINGS IN A REVIVAL.

The North American of December 29 contained a message from Billy Sunday, the renowned evangelist, to his prayer meeting workers, which is of more than passing interest. It shows how much reliance this man, who is perhaps the greatest soul winner of this age, places upon this simple, old-time agency in reaching men and bringing them into the Kingdom. The Message is as follows:

"Gentlemen: One of the most inspiring things I have heard about the preparatory work in Philadelphia is these prayer meetings that are being held in the homes, and the magnificent way this committee seems to be managing this feature.

"I would no more think of attempting a campaign in any city without the co-operation of God's people in the neighborhood prayer meetings than I would try to play a game of baseball without a ball.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of these meetings. I regard them as absolutely indispensable in producing a spiritual atmosphere and arousing interest in God's cause throughout the community. Not only do the people meet to pray, but this plan which we have gives opportunity for reaching every individual in every neighborhood.

"The object of these prayer meetings is twofold. First, to get every Christian to praying and working; and, second, to try and reach with the gospel every unsaved person."

RACE GAMBLING IN NEW ORLEANS.

The races have begun in New Orleans and it is stated that they will continue for more than a month. It has been announced that there will be no "bookmaking," but that individual betting will be allowed. Mr. C. C. Luzenburg, the District Attorney, is quoted as having made the following statement, which was published under his name in the New Orleans Item of December 30:

"Individual betting is not prohibited in this State. No matter what plans are published or submitted to me, the actions on the race track are what I will act on. I have no reason to believe that the plans, if actually adhered to and used only as a means for individual bets, will violate the Locke law."

Thus it would seem that license for this kind of gambling has been officially given, and we may expect it to go on openly in this city upon a large scale for the next thirty or forty days. And this form of gambling is morally just as wrong as any other. We hope that our ministers and the Christian and more moral people of the city will speak out vigorously against this pernicious and indefensible evil. The moral sentiment of the community should be thoroughly aroused against it. We do not know whether individual betting is against the law in Louisiana or not; but if it isn't, it should be, and we ought to address ourselves industriously to the task of securing some new and better legislation that will make it so. Laws that leave a place for any kind of gambling are a reproach to any people in this enlightened age.

THE POWER OF INTERCESSION.

"The weary ones had rest, the sad had joy
That day; I wondered how,
A plowman, singing at his work, had prayed,
'Lord, help them now.'

"Away in foreign lands, they wondered 'how'
Their single word had power;
At home the Christians, two or three, had met
To pray an hour.

"Yes, we are always wondering, wondering 'how.'
Because we do not see
Some one, unknown, perhaps, and far away,
On bended knee."

LIBERALIZING THE SABBATH.

Liberalizing in doctrine sooner or later results in liberalizing in practice. The erratic cults begin with errors in teachings, but end in errors of living, which often go from one step to another, until they become corrupt and vicious. Just now, the tendency to liberalize and secularize the Sabbath grows apace. The Russellites consider themselves free from all commandments, and hold that they were made for the Jews, and the Fourth Commandment goes with the others. The Christian Scientists, by their spurious idealism, recognize no law outside their own mind. But the most notable modification of the Sabbath at present arises in connection with the so-called liberals connected with evangelical bodies. An Episcopalian clergyman recently announced that if the men would come and say their prayers with him on Sabbath morning, he would go and play tennis and golf with them on Sunday afternoon. A prominent Bible class spent part of the day in the study of the Bible to suit their own ideas, and then spent the balance of the day according to their own pleasure.

Now comes the report in a daily paper of two Congregational pastors in the suburbs of New York who have instructed their people to give part of the day to certain secular amusements and recreation.

These people are all subject to one great and mischievous blunder; they all think that man is to make the Sabbath according to his own will. But if a man believes the Bible, he will find that God made the Sabbath; he made it as it is appointed in the Bible, and he made it for man. When we read, "The Sabbath was made for man," we seem to think that it was made for man to use just as he pleases. This is erroneous. When we say a coat was made for a man, we mean it was made to fit him, and to meet his need for clothing. It does not mean that the man made it himself, or that it was to be used for a pillow or a foot-mat, as he chose. It was made to clothe him, and to use it for anything else was to misappropriate it. So God made the Sabbath, and that for man and for a specific purpose. The proper use and nature of the Sabbath is therefore determined by the Word and will of God. In the words of the institution of the Sabbath, it is declared that God sanctified or made holy the Sabbath. The Fourth Commandment calls us to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. According to the Scriptures, that is holy which is separated from common use, and devoted to the direct worship and service of God. The classical passage upon the Sabbath is found in Isaiah 58: 13-14—"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

This passage, like the words of institution and the commandment, make the Sabbath a divine, holy institution. In all three of these instructions the Sabbath is also a rest day, but the rest element is subordinate to the holy character of the day. It is a holy resting. Man, for whom this Sabbath was made, needs just such a day. Owing to his fallen nature, and the sin of the world in his daily intercourse, he is under temptation, and subject to contamination, and he needs a regular time when all common things are shut out, and he has a season with his God. No man and no nation ever has, or ever can, maintain a strong religious life who neglects the Sabbath or makes it a common day. Neither can such a nation or such a man maintain high morals when the Sabbath is neglected, for with the decay of religion comes also the decay of morals.

Man needs the holy rest of the Sabbath. Such holy rest will send him forth into the next week full of mental, moral and physical vigor; his nerves and mind at their best; while a frivolous, slothful pleasure-seeking Sabbath exhausts the man, sends him forth on Monday, mentally, morally and physically in a worse condition than he was on Saturday night. If the rest simply becomes indulgence iin idleness and sloth and pleasure, then the day becomes a curse, instead of a blessing. The slothfulness itself breeds vile humors, pleasure breeds frivolity, and so the day paasses from a holy day to a holiday; the man and nation sinks to frivolity, and then passes on to corruption.

The passage iu Isaiah intimates that the Sabbath is a bond or sign between God and man. In another Scripture it is boldly asserted that it is such a sign. The breaking of this sign is a mark of departure from God, with its consequent loss and curse. Had the Germans and British not forgotten their heritage, had they kept this covenant day with God, they would not to-day be spilling each other's blood in this cruel, crushing war.

Let America take warning. Let her return to God and his Sabbath, and God "will give her the heritage of Jacob, for the Lord hath spoken it." The religious teachers who defile the Sabbath, put their minds against God's mind; they oppose their will to his, and they are responsible for the dishonor of God, and for the destruction of men.—The Presbyterian (Philadelphia).

THOUGHT, THE REVEALER OF CHARACTER.

By Robert Edwin Meek.

The power to think is one of the chief distinctions between man and beast. Its possession makes man a free moral agent; its absence frees the lower animals from moral obligations and restraints. When we consider the fact that man is the only animal capable of thinking and that character presupposes the ability to think and act for one's self, we become fully aware that the term character is only applicable to a rational human being, to one that is capable of attaining to the highest perfection or of sinking to the lowest depths of infamy and shame. The body is a machine; the mind is the lever by which that machine is operated and controlled.

The Bible wisely says: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." This sets down the principle that a man's thoughts and his character must correspond. Low and vulgar thoughts tend to pollute a man's life and thus to soil his character; on the other hand, lofty and noble thoughts tend to strengthen his character by elevating his conduct. Men, unless restrained by force and the fear of punisbment, usually carry out those desires which they have formed in the recesses of their brain. It would seem to a casual observer that the mind is a kingdom whose secrets remain forever hid until they appear to shape the conduct of their master, but such is not the case. They leave their mark imprinted upon his face and often it is an easy matter to tell their trend. Let no man say his thoughts are his own. Men were formerly of the opinion that the mind was free from judgment or impeachment of any kind, but Christ taught that in all cases the motive counted for as much as the actual deed itself. The man who wills and plans to do a thing is as guilty in the sight of the Lord as the man who suits his actions to his unworthy thoughts.

If men were to go through life without ever expressing their thoughts either orally or in writing, we could judge their thoughts only indirectly by their deeds; but it is safe to say that no great man has ever lived, or is likely to live, who will be so taciturn as to not at some time clothe his ideas in the garb of words either in conversation, upon the lecture platform, or upon the printed page. The fact is, no man is great unless he has lofty thoughts, and if he has them he is not likely to want to hide them from his fellowmen. Many are the famous men that we have never seen and yet if we are given their writings to peruse and study we can form a pretty accurate estimate of the character of the authors if they were sincere in what they wrote. Take for example the Apostle Paul. By reading his epistles we can tell that he is an earnest, determined and sincere man. We see that he is thoroughly consecrated and that he puts his whole soul into his work, whether as an enemy of Christianity or as a sufferer for Christ's sake.

Many men have become illustrious and left their mark upon the world by simply being true to those convictions which their reasoning faculties have arrived at by the process of silent meditation. Socrates thought that ignorance was vice, and so he set out to teach those with whom he came in contact, thereby endeavoring to destroy ignorance and superstition. He spent his life groping after truth; he meditated upon and discoursed to his disciples concerning the immortality of the soul day and night, and though his philosophy was incomplete and consisted of truth mixed with error, it sustained him in the trying hour of death. John Wesley considered the whole world as his parish and this thought governed the whole of his eventful life. Knowing as we do that repeated acts go to make up our daily conduct and that that makes our character, if we are wise we will listen to the dictates of reason and allow our faculties to dwell only upon the best thoughts. Concerning this, St. Paul says: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."—From the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

A PLAN FOR PAYING THE DEBT ON GRENADA COLLEGE.

Dear Brother Meek: Brother Countiss has asked the North Mississippi Conference to raise $4000 on the second Sunday in January, with which to meet a note due on January 15, 1915. If I am in order, I will state through the Advocate the thought that came into my mind Christmas morning before I got out of bed. It is this: there are fifty-four pastoral charges in our Conference that paid their pastors in 1913 salaries ranging from $1,000 to $2,200, or an approximate total of $70,000. The $4000 asked for is approximately 6 per cent of this total. Would it not be an easy matter for these fifty-four charges to raise the small amount of 6 per cent of what they pay their pastor and meet this note?

I called my stewards and others together immediately after the service on the 27th inst., stated my proposition to them, and they readily agreed to accept their pro rata, which is $60. Coldwater is at the bottom of the scale mentioned, paying its pastor $1,000; and now if the other brethren will sound the scale up to the highest note, each chord being duly struck, the amount will be realized.

This is not intended to leave out the weaker charges by any means; their amounts will be needed to supplement those that miss the mark, and to pay interest, etc. H. G. ROBERTS.

GOD'S WAY.

A friend of mine made a visit to Harvard University. Harvard had just purchased a new astronomical instrument, and the object of his visit was to see how the instrument worked. The professor and his assistant told him that according to the astronomical calculations, a star was due at 5:20 p.m. At the appointed hour the instrument was directed to the star. It was agreed that when the star, which came swinging along the heavens, crossed the spider-web line stretched across the lens of the instrument, the professor who looked through the instrument should pronounce the word "Here," and that the assistant, who watched the second hand of the clock, should let the hammer which he held in his hand fall upon the marble table the instant the clock registered 5:20 p.m.

The man who was to speak the word "Here" could not see the clock; he was looking at the star. The man who was to let the hammar fall could not see the star; he was looking at the second hand of the dial plate. There was an impressive silence for a time. The clock was quietly ticking here in the observatory, but out there, in the heavens, millions of miles away, God's star was rolling in on time, as God bade it ages and ages ago. As the waiting was prolonged, the silence became almost painful. Thus it was when suddenly two sounds broke the stillness. These two sounds were the voice of the professor and the rap of the assistant's hammer. The two sounds, the "Here" and the "rap" were positively simultaneous, for God's guidance of the stars according to the testimony of science, is perfectly accurate.

That professor had a magnificent opportunity to speak a word for God. If, as a man of God, he had opened the Bible and read: "He hindeth the sweet influence of the Pleiades. He looseth the bands of Orion; he bringeth Mazeroth in his seasons and he guideth Arcturus with his suns. He telleth the number of the stars and calleth them all by name; great is our Lord and of great power, his understanding is infinite;" and if he then had solemnly and reverently said: "Young men, let God who guides the stars so successfully guide you; pray to him as I pray to him," there would have been a score of new prayers offered to God that night, and that scientific evening spent with the eleescope would have been a religious influence to the end of many a life.—Current Anecdotes.

THE EVANGELISTIC MESSAGE.

By Rev. George R. Stuart, D.D.

In every effective evangelistic gospel message there is a fitness of time and a power of unction. The hour for the work and a call to the work determine the character of the message. The Bible clearly teaches an evangelistic season and an evangelistic call. There are "seasons of refreshing;" times "when the pool is troubled;" times when "the fields are white unto the harvest." As in the natural world, we have seed time and harvest, so in the spiritual world there is a time to sow and a time to reap. The revival season is not more definitely taught in the Book than the fact that God has called men to the ministry of the Word, who have a variety of gifts—"He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men, and he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." As the harvesting season is short and the harvester has a special commission, the message should be intense and of peculiar inducement.

The special gifts in the full presentation of the gospel message are set forth in the offices of apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor, and teacher. Each of these commissioned ministers presents the gospel with a different anointment; each, therefore, presents it differently. The apostle publishes the tidings, makes known the message, pioneers the truth. The prophet of the gospel message is not a foreteller, but a teller-forth of the message. He opens, explains, sets forth the message. The evangelist impresses and applies the message and urges to immediate action. The pastor and teacher leads, feeds, and guards those who have heard, understood, and received the message.

In the divine arrangement the evangelist stands between the apostle and prophet on the one hand, and the pastor and teacher on the other. This divine arrangement sets forth the peculiar duty and responsibility of each minister of the Word. The work of the especially called and endowed evangelist here set forth is to find the subject after he has been reached by the apostle and prophet, and proclaim unto him the message of the feast—"Come, for all things are now ready."

The evangelistic message should be confined to the essential doctrines of salvation—the call, conviction of sin, repentance, confession, faith, justification, pardon, witness of the Spirit, peace. These doctrines should be explained, rather than homiletically discussed; they should be impressed by the use of the strongest, tersest language and the most effective illustration. The burden of the message should be to awaken the sinner, arouse the conscience, point the way of life, and judiciously answer all objections which arise in the human heart (prompted by the devil) against the immediate acceptance of the truth. The Saviour's parable of "The Great Supper" and the invitation refused gives a divine indication that objections will arise. The message should be plain, pointed, and individualizing. Nathan's "Thou art the man," fixed the arrow in David's heart.

Efforts to display learning, wisdom, or natural abilities should yield to the earnest, honest effort to render the message effective in the salvation of sinners. The effort to settle theological difficulties, to expound abstruse passages of Scripture, to deliver homiletic masterpieces, to open up new fields of thought, to demolish the critic,—higher or lower,—may all be worthy efforts on appropriate occasions, but will not be found effective in special evangelistic work. Quarreling, scolding, and raving are to be distinguished from pungent and straight warning and reproof. Belligerent and hair spitefully waiving the brands of hell fire into the face of an audience is to be distinguished from a sympathetic but courageous declaration of the divinely revealed doctrines of the retribution of sin and the utter ruin and damnation of all who reject Christ. The evangelistic message should at all times be as a storm cloud, charged with the doctrines of sin and reprobation; and at others as a morning sky, aglow with the warm, soft light of love. The oft-repeated sentence: "He had compassion on him, her, them," should be the key to the message. No one can be a successful evangelist who has not a deep love for men. This love will temper all of God's warnings and soften all of his pleadings.

The most effective method of presenting the gospel truth to the masses is by illustration. The eye is the most used, the best developed, and the largest and most accessible way to the brain. The picture is the most attractive, most intense and graphic way of presenting thought. "Without a parable spake he not unto them." The most effective illustrations are those that are in themselves interesting, the while setting forth the truth to be impressed. Illustrations connected with personal experience and observation are most effective. Paul made Felix tremble by the recital of personal experience. It is true that the use of personal experience often subjects one to the charge of egotism; yet the evangelist cannot afford to surrender his most useful and interesting field for fear of criticism. Evangelistic work naturally brings out a large number of interesting incidents and many that are truly remarkable. Such illustrations are effective if properly used in evangelistic discourses.

It must be remembered that any gospel truth, stated in any form, without the accompanying power of the Holy Spirit, will be utterly ineffective. The simplest statement of gospel truth, accompanied by the Holy Spirit, will accomplish results.

CONCERNING THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

To the Committees of Examination of the Patronizing Conferences of the Seashore Divinity School:

Dear Brethren: I am taking this method of requesting that you communicate with Doctor H. H. McNeill, Dothan, Ala., dean of the Divinity School, at once, regarding your work in the undergraduate classes, that he may assign you the books that you are expected to study with the classes this summer. You will readily see the importance of this being done as early in the year as is possible.

If any committee failed to elect a representative at the close of the Conference session, you will please to attend to this at once, and notify Doctor McNeill at your earliest convenience.

I am glad to say that we have Doctor J. E. McFadyen, Toronto, and Doctor Geo. L. Robinson, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, who was with us three years ago, in prospect for this year's session. We are working on the program, and hope to have it completed so as to make a certain announcement of it in not a great while.

Yours very sincerely,

ROBT. SELBY, President.

Brookhaven, Miss., Dec. 28, 1914.

A WORD FROM BROTHER DORMAN.

Dear Doctor Meek: Having seen the criticism of Bishop Waterhouse quoted in your issue of last week, I take this opportunity of saying that, so far as my observation went, I have never met with a more courteous, considerate Christian gentleman than he. I was during the session of our last Conference closely associated with him, as a member of his cabinet, and it gives me genuine pleasure to assert most positively that it has never been my privilege to meet and work with a more brotherly and unostentatious General Superintendent than Bishop Waterhouse. Personally, it will give me great pleasure to have him superintend the interest of our Conference, for as long as the College of Bishops may see proper to assign him to us. I endorse your call for the proof of the above mentioned charges.

The work of the District is beginning auspiciously.

Fraternally,

J. W. DORMAN.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 28, 1914.

A GREATER WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

During the past four years, the president, trustees, friends and patrons of Whitworth College have been working for some much needed building improvements. These first plans have been carried to completion.

Now the president and faculty of the College, the trustees and the Mississippi Annual Conference, which owns the College, have all most heartily endorsed the larger plans of raising funds sufficient to build an "Industrial Home" for the poor girls, and to provide an "Endowment Fund" of $100,000 during the next five years.

This work ought to be done; it can be done, and I believe it will be accomplished through the co-operation of our pastors and laymen within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis is America's statesman-preacher. His weekly sermons as reported for the Brooklyn Eagle display a wealth of information concerning historical and current matters that is perhaps not equaled by any other minister in the United States. Dewitt Talmage or his illustrious predecessor, Henry Ward Beecher, but in the amount of promiscuous knowledge imparted in his discourses he is the peer of either of them.

The great revival to be conducted by Billy Sunday began in Philadelphia, which has a population of 1,600,000 on January 2. This meeting has been largely promoted by The North American, one of the foremost daily papers of that city. This is perhaps the most extensive revival campaign ever undertaken in the United States, and Christians everywhere should remember it in their prayers.

The following statement is going the rounds of our Church press: "The presentation of actual missionary scenes is one of the most interesting and helpful ways to stimulate interest. 'Wang May—a Chinese Peach Blossom,' a little play based upon a story written by Dr. John D. Trawick, has just come from the press. It requires twelve characters and may be given in an hour. Full directions for costumes and decorations are given. They are simple enough to be possible for any church." We advise our Church people to have nothing to do with this effort to introduce theatricals into our congregations. In our opinion our missionary workers had better find some other way to stimulate interest.

Bishop Denny's presidency measured up to a high standard at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. He is unexcelled as a presiding officer and his sermon on Sunday morning was a strong and inspiring utterance. The one word that would best characterize his administration is the word "efficient." He has the confidence of the public in what respect the word is capable and knows how to administer in all such points. So far as we have heard, his appointments gave general satisfaction.

Through the courtesy of the author, Bishop W. F. Mallalieu, we have received a copy of his lately issued little volume entitled "The Personality and Message of the Preacher." This is the Bishop's Matriculation Day Address at the Boston University School of Theology, and a noble message it is—clear, strong, spiritual and heart-searching. One cannot read it without being strengthened and stimulated to nobler impulses. It was issued by the Abingdon Press (New York and Chicago), and is daintily bound and beautifully printed. The price is 75 cents.

A writer in the Pacific Methodist Advocate of December 19 in giving some notes from Los Angeles says: "Bishop Waterhouse has returned home after two months spent in Mississippi, North Carolina, and Florida, holding the Conferences of the Third Episcopal District. He is in fine health and seems delighted to get back to Southern California." The Midland Methodist in speaking of Bishop Waterhouse in a recent issue says that he may come back to the Holston Conference to live. He ought to make his home in New Orleans. His influence would be widely felt in that great center of commerce and population.

Dear Doctor Meek: The following cash amounts have been received on the Centenary special collection for maintenance. I shall be glad to have you publish these gifts from time to time:

Rev. A. C. Holder, Shreveport	$25.00
Rev. W. Schnide, Monroe	25.00
Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, Indian Bayou	25.00
Rev. J. F. Foster, Amite	50.00

Thanking you for your generous assistance to our cause, I am, cordially yours,

R. H. WYNN.

LOAN FUNDS AND WAR TIMES.

At the close of business on this, the thirty-first day of December, 1914, our books show contributions to the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension amounting to $54,543.07. This increase has been made since the close of the last fiscal year, March 31, 1914, and therefore covers nine months.

The largest annual increase during the history of the Board was shown at the close of the fiscal year in 1913, and was $66,222.66. We must reach the $100,000 mark during the present fiscal year.

It may be of interest to know that the increase of $54,543.07 shown above for the three-fourths of the present fiscal year represents 250 contributions, the largest of which was $10,000, and the smallest of which was 65c—an average contribution of $202.01.

MRS. D. M. COGDELL DEAD.

Mrs. J. S. Richardson, of Mineral Wells, Texas (formerly Miss Mary Ames, of Starkville, Miss.), kindly sends us the following account of the death of Mrs. D. M. Cogdell, the widow of the late Rev. David M. Cogdell, who many years ago was a member of the North Mississippi Conference, which is taken from the Memphis Daily Citizen:

"Mrs. D. M. Cogdell of this city died last evening Dec. 28, 1914, at 6 o'clock at the home of her son, Mumsey Cogdell, at Arlington. She had been while Mrs. Cogdell had been in poor health and quite early last week went to Arlington with the hope that the change would be beneficial but to no avail came. The following children survive: Mumsey, R. G., Willard, Ernest and Mary Sue of Arlington, Holland of Hamlin and Earl, of Kansas City. The remains accompanied by the sorrowing children will reach this city at 4 p. m. today and be taken to E. H. Latimer's chapel. The funeral will be held at 3 o'clock tomorrow morning from the Methodist Church, the services being conducted by Rev. M. S. Hopkins. The interment will be at Elmwood Cemetery, the body being laid to rest beside that of her husband, Rev. D. M. Cogdell, who passed away a couple of years ago. Mrs. Cogdell was a lady beloved by every one for her rare Christian virtues and sweet motherly way. She was always a devoted wife, and mother accepting the trials of life with great Christian fortitude. Mrs. Cogdell was a devout Christian and member of the First Methodist Church of this city. Her many friends mourn today with the bereaved children."

We regret to learn of the death of this excellent Christian woman and extend sympathy to the bereaved. Rev. D. M. Cogdell was a brother of Rev. D. L. Cogdell, of Shelby, Miss., who is now on the Honor Roll of the North Mississippi Conference.

KEEP THE TONGUE.

Keep it from unkindness. Words are sometimes wounds. Not very deep wounds, always, and yet they irritate. Speech is unkind sometimes when there is no unkindness in the heart, and unintentionally pain is caused.

Keep it from falsehood. It is easy to give a false coloring, so as make a statement that it may convey a meaning different from the truth, while yet there is an appearance of truth, that we need to be on our guard. There are very many who would shrink from telling a lie, who yet suffer themselves to give such inaccurate, or greatly one-sided statements that they really come under the condemnation of those whose "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

Keep it from slander. The good reputation of others should be dear to us. Sin should not be suffered to go unrebuked, but it should be in accordance with the Scripture method: "Go and tell him of his fault betwixt thee and him alone." And it should be borne in mind that what is too often considered as merely harmless gossip runs dangerously near, if it does not pass, the confines of slander. A reputation is too sacred to be made a plaything of, even if the intent be not malicious.—Rural New Yorker.

The United States Government on December 28 vigorously protested to Great Britain against her treatment of American commerce upon the high seas, warned her that she would be held financially responsible for the losses resulting, and insisted that this unwarranted interference with our foreign trade must cease. As France has adopted essentially the same rules of action as her ally, the statement of our Government is understood as being a warning to all the members of the triple entente. This communication is reported to have created considerable excitement in England.

The nominal authority of the Sultan has been overthrown in the land of the Pharaohs and Great Britain has taken full control; so that after waving over that country for nearly four hundred years the Crescent has given way to the Union Jack, the flag of a Christian power. This territory embraces about 6000 square miles and has a population of approximately 6,000,000. Since Great Britain began to exercise a partial control of its affairs about thirty years ago, its imports have increased from $10,000,000 to $185,000,000, and its exports have gone from $64,000,000 to $175,000,000.

It is stated that 80 per cent of the nickel produced in the world is found in Canada, and that most of it is exported, having gone heretofore principally to England, the United States, and Germany. The Christian Guardian says: "While there are many uses for pure nickel, the metal is mostly used in the production of alloys, and chiefly in the manufacture of nickel steel. The value of this steel for armor plate is well known, and without it battleships would lose their chief protection. Unwillingness to have Canadian nickel used against the British Empire by its foes has led the Canadian Government to forbid its export to all foreign ports in Europe except to those of France, Russia, Spain, and Portugal; but this would appear to be of little importance, from the simple fact that Canadian nickel has never gone direct to Europe, but has been refined in the United States and exported from there to the most profitable market."

"THE CHIEF CORNER STONE."

An Attempt to Lull Methodists Into False Security.

"The volume which bears the above title is intended to reassure the faith of Methodists, but it lacks some of the necessary qualities for the accomplishment of its task. Faith will only be reassured by that which is definite. Great reassuring facts are required for faith. This volume is thoroughly indefinite. From start to finish there is hardly anything to lay firm hold of. Its writers have not decided what position they themselves are to occupy. They grope amid the mists for a message. At present they cling desperately to the old message, because they know no other. A bruised reed is so much better than no support at all! But the essays make it so very manifest that there is no basis in their misty premises for the old triumphant certainties; and faith is not likely to be reassured. It describes itself, with characteristic indefiniteness, as 'Essays toward an exposition'; but something with far more definiteness and grip is required in dealing with unsophisticated men."

"Moreover, it is not clear where it starts from. Nowhere does it attempt to give those 'assured results' of the 'Higher Criticism' which make it necessary to re-cast our views of the Bible. Those new views of the Scripture which the book assumes are based upon something. What are the 'assured results' from which they start and which necessitate the new views?"

"And again, whither are the writers seeking to lead their public? They do not say what revised views of the Bible and of our Lord and of the Christian Faith they actually hold. What is their view of Scripture? What use would they continue to make of it? If Deuteronomy would by unacademic lips be called a forgery, would they still use it for solemn lessons in the Sanctuary? If, as Mr. Wiseman suggests, the view should prevail that Abraham never existed, does it help us to be told that one's profit in reading and confidence in expounding the lovely story is not lessened? What conceivable view of the Bible justifies this remark? Or if the New Testament is correctly described by Mr. Holdsworth as 'the literary remains of the first century of our era,' what measure of reverence is it to receive? Or, if, as Dr. Moulton holds, St. Paul's mistakes are such and his ways of using the Old Testament so peculiar as to make him largely impossible for us, what is the true position of his Epistles? Are they or are they not part of the veritable Word of God to mankind to be used in solemn acts of public worship, and so forth? This volume does not tell us the position it starts from, nor even the new position to which it desires to lead us. It lacks either light or courage, and both these qualities are needed to justify its existence. Great numbers of Methodists are just awakening to the true state of affairs. They begin to realize the tragedy which has overtaken us. This volume is intended to lull them into a false security." The Journal of the Wesley Bible Union, October, 1914.

This book is reviewed at length by the new Secretary, Dr. H. C. Morton, and the Editors, Dr. W. Spiers, and Dr. G. A. Bennetts. The selection above is by the Secretary, Dr. Morton. The Essays are studied in detail and by quotations shown to be what the book is called by Dr. Morton, "An Attempt to Lull Methodists into False Security." It is interesting to note that "The Chief Corner Stone" has just been issued by the Methodist Book Concern in this country. Is it a part of the general campaign throughout Methodism? Is it offered as a sedative to American Methodism? "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird."—The Bible Champion.

NOTHING BUT A GRAVE.

A Chinaman who had watched carefully the work of William Chalmers Burns, the famous Christian missionary, said, after the latter's death: "His story must have been true. He got nothing for coming here—nothing but a grave." To the Chinese the mere fact that a man dies away from his fatherland and is buried in a foreign land has a particular pathos. The Chinese, when they die in Europe or the United States, very often have made arrangements for the transmission of their bodies to China, that they may rest in native soil. "He got nothing but a grave." The sentence reminds us of the Master, who, when the people would not hear him, but cried, "Crucify him," was buried in the tomb of another man.—Canadian Churchman.

RICHARD WATSON JONES.

Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

So sang Charles Wesley of the Rev. George Whitefield after his death. These words could hardly have been improved upon yet the truth therein expressed is fair as applicable to other lives. Dr. R. W. Jones was a great leader for his church in war and in peace, and above all he was a great servant and soldier of the Cross.

The subject of this sketch was born on May 16, 1857, in Greenville County, Virginia. At the early age of eighteen he was the honor graduate of Randolph-Macon College. About this time death claimed his father. Though still a boy in years, he was made executor of his father's estate. The presence of children kept him from pursuing his studies further just then, but as soon as the affairs of the home could be left in order he entered the University of Virginia and in two years more the Master's degree. He was an honor graduate in that institution also.

He answered the call to arms at the beginning of the Civil War, immediately raised a company and entered the service as a captain. During the entire four years of that bloody strife he fought for the cause he loved and thought was right. From time to time he was given deserved promotion because of his ability and fidelity to duty, and at the close of the war held the rank of a major. He ever loved the principles for which he fought and it was indeed appropriate that he should be laid to rest dressed in his suit of Confederate gray and in a beautiful casket of the same color lined inside with the flag he had followed so faithfully.

On January 6, 1881, he was married to Miss Bettie Sue Spratley. The golden anniversary of this happy event was celebrated on the 6th of last January. In attendance at this sacred service, marking a half-century of holy wedlock, were the five sons, now leaders in their various lines of work, with their families, and the only daughter, with her husband and two sweet children whose home is back in the Old Dominion so near the childhood scenes of the father and mother. In just a little less than a year the loved ones are called to bid farewell for awhile to the father. But what a blessing to have had his counsel and godly example for so long!

Dr. Jones' life from the close of the war until just a brief while before his death was spent in educational work in the leading colleges of Virginia and Mississippi. Before coming to Mississippi he had been the president of several institutions in Virginia. He was the first president of the Mississippi Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, Miss. There can be no doubt that much of the success of that great institution is due to the solid foundation he laid during the years of its early history.

But possibly he is better known to us to-day by the long and excellent service rendered at the University of Mississippi. For more than a quarter of a century he held the Chair of Chemistry in that institution. He resigned his position in 1905 to move to Laurel, Miss., where with his son, S. M. Jones, he was interested in the Gulf States Investment Company. At the earnest solicitation of President Duncannon, then Chancellor of the University, he later decided to return to that famous school as a professor, but failing health forced him to give up the work just as the session was drawing to a close. His last work there was to make out the examination questions for the boys in his department. Since that time he has held the honored position of a Professor Emeritus of the University. For more than twenty-five years there was possibly not a man in all the South better known and loved as an educator than was Dr. Jones.

For some years he honored the Mississippi Historical Society as its president. But to enumerate all of the important positions he held would require not merely space, but it is to say that no [illegible] was ever given him to which he [illegible] and upon. It was always [illegible] and the position he held [illegible] the attention of others.

In [illegible] he was distinguishingly great: as a student, as an instructor, as a home builder, and as a child of God, for verily his position in all other walks of life was made greater by this last fact.

As a natural student he was unsurpassed. God had graciously endowed him with a wonderful capacity to grasp knowledge. This capacity he constantly developed. Throughout his life he was a leader, a student, delving into the most difficult problems, and holding on until he had solved them. The fact that it was the honor graduate in each of the great institutions he attended is but a faint description of his studious life.

As an instructor he undoubtedly had but few peers. Dr. R. H. Mayo aptly stated his position as an educator well in grouping him with such men as Garland, John N. Waddel, A. B. Longstreet and James H. Carlisle. Simple and unaffected, he was always able to make clear his thoughts in such a way that the pupil could not only grasp but retain them. Long will he live in the lives of the many men and women who came under his tutelage.

[illegible] he was a loving husband and model father. His was ever a meager salary; but as he was able he was able to give to each of the children in the home the very best opportunities that the land afforded to equip them for their life's work. The reason for the greatness of his home life is not hard to find. God's Word was his constant companion and guide. And after he was too weak to read it for himself, he enjoyed having it read to him by some member of the family. The church papers were weekly visitors in the home and they were read with keen interest. The family altar was an institution whose value was always recognized and never neglected. When too feeble to conduct his home devotions himself they were kept up by the faithful and devoted wife even to the day of his death.

But greater than all else in the make-up of this splendid man was the simple, abiding faith that made him the child of God. How sweet to talk with him about holy things! When but a youth he gave his heart and life to the service of the Master. And for him the way grew brighter all along and the service more joyous. For some weeks before his death there seemed to be very little in which he was interested, but the sight of God's Word or the prospect of prayer would always change his whole attitude. His face would light up with a holy light. He always grasped every word and would respond with a hearty Amen to some familiar passage read or sweet petition in prayer. His only request regarding the Golden Anniversary of his marriage was that his pastor should read a portion of God's Word and lead the assembled guests in prayer.

He loved the Methodist Church and all her institutions. In his library is to be found the standard Methodist literature of the past and present. A casual glance at these books will show that they were not there for ornament. Though for some time before his translation he was too feeble to come to the church regularly, he would be in his place on communion days and the elements were carried to him at his seat.

About 10:30 o'clock on the evening of December 19 the angels bore his spirit to a fairer land. For seventy-seven years and seven months he had bravely met life's responsibilities. His going was as gentle and sweet as the falling asleep of a tender babe—not a pain, not a shudder of fear, but quietly bidding farewell to the tenement of clay, he mounted to brighter worlds on high. We will not sorrow as those who have no hope, for though he cannot return to us we can go to him.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer on Sunday afternoon, December 20, and the body was carried to Portsmouth, Va., to be laid away to await the resurrection morning. Surely we can say with the sweet singer:

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.
The voice at midnight came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame;
He fell, but felt no fear.
The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last.
His soul is found in peace.
Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy."

J. L. NEILL.

WORLDLY PASTORS.

(The following is taken from a number of the New Orleans Advocate issued when Holland N. McTyeire was the editor, and may have been written by him, though it is not certain that it was. Containing the pure gold of truth, it is yet well worth reading and reflecting upon.—Editor's note.)

Do not some pastors neglect the essential thing in their visiting, and thereby diminish their own influence and bring discredit upon the office they hold? Such an omission on their part is more noticeable, and for that very reason more blameworthy than a similar neglect by a private Christian. A brief anecdote will illustrate: In conversation to-day with a man of business I inquired, "How do you like your new pastor?" "I like him well," was the reply. "He is smart in the pulpit, and smart out of it. He seems to be posted up in all sorts of business. He visited at my house the other afternoon, and we had a good deal of talk. He knows all about railroads, and where good business locations are. He has a great notion of going West, because, he says, he can get twelve per cent for his money there. But he didn't say a word about religion all the afternoon." Whether pastoral visits of this character do good or hurt, deserves to be considered.

NOT YET ADOPTED.

Written many years ago, this question put by Oliver Wendell Holmes reads as though it had been phrased specifically for our times: "Can any man look round and see what Christian countries are now doing, and how they are governed, and what is the general condition of society, without seeing that Christianity is the flag under which the world sails, and not the rudder that steers its course?" Surely that hits off the situation in the nominally Christian nations of Europe plunged in war. But need we turn our eyes so far to find an illustration of such inconsistency?—New York Christian Advocate.

The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influence of the Bible.—Robert Moffat.

THE BRAVE LITTLE GIRL.

A brave little girl (perhaps 'twas you)
Once thought she met a bugaboo—
As large as any ever seen,
Quite as cross, and twice as green!
It seemed to be just—standing there,
With something between a grin and a glare.

But this little girl said to the bugaboo,
"Oh, pooh! I don't believe in you!
There is no need for you to stay,
So—scat! You'd better run away!"
And just as sure as sure can be,
That bugaboo changed to the stump of a tree!

Then the brave little girl just nodded her head:
"I see it's true as Mamma said—
That the bugaboo isn't even an elf;
It's only a 'when-you-scare-yourself.'
If you just keep cool and say, 'O, pooh!'
It puts an end to the bugaboo!"

—Tudor Jenks, in St. Nicholas.

THE BALTIMORE ORIOLE.

"O, just see that yellow blackbird!" cried the twins.

Mr. Baltimore Orlole laughed as he swung on the high elm bough. "Not a bad name for me," sang he, "for the blackbird is my cousin."

"But you're prettier," declared Little Girl Twin, which pleased the oriole very much, for he was proud of his orange-and-black suit.

"What is your name, please?" asked Little Boy Twin politely. "I've never seen you before."

"Well," sang the gay little fellow, "some call me golden robin, firebird, or hang-nest; but I'd rather you'd call me Baltimore oriole."

"You are the color of gold or fire," agreed the twins, "but you're smaller than the robin."

"How did you get the long name that begins with B?" asked Little Girl Twin.

"My orange and black were the colors of the livery of the first Lord Baltimore. You'll read about him in your history some day," explained the oriole politely.

"And the hang-nest?" asked the puzzled Little Girl Twin.

"Just look on the other side of the elm," whistled the oriole, "and you'll see why. That hanging nest is my last year's home."

"I've seen that nest, but didn't know it was yours. We never steal nests," said Little Boy Twin proudly.

"That's nice of you," whistled the oriole. "But you may have ours. We never use last year's nest."

So Little Boy Twin took the long apple picker pole and at last got the nest down. Such a pretty, soft nest it was!

"How nice and fine you wove it!" said the twins admiringly.

"It was my wife that made it," said Mr. Oriole proudly. "She is called one of the best nest builders in the world. Don't you know the rhyme,

"'Of all the weavers that I know,
The oriole is best;
High on the branches of the elm
She hangs her cozy nest?'"

"What do you make it of?" asked the children.

"Milkweed and horsehair and grass and strings. It is lined with soft feathers and grass. I gather the things, and my mate weaves the nest. She will soon be here. I am a May day bird. I came the first of May. She follows a few days later. There, I must catch that bug. Good-bye till she comes." And off he flew.

Next week Mrs. Oriole joined her gay little mate. But she wore such a sober brown-and-olive suit that the twins would never have known she was an oriole if her mate had not told them.

It took Mrs. Oriole a week to build the cozy little nest, but it was woven so nicely that not a drop of rain could get through it. And it was fastened so strongly to the elm bough that the hardest, naughtiest wind couldn't tear it loose.

Soon there were six little white eggs dotted with black and brown in the nest. Sometimes you will find eight. And now Mr. Orlole stopped his saucy whistle and kept right by his little mate, to guard her.

By and by the baby orioles came. Oh, what hungry mouths to feed! And the number of bugs, grubs, worms, flies, and caterpillars the babies could devour in a single day! Papa Oriole and Mamma Oriole hadn't a single minute for singing or anything else but filling those hungry little mouths till the baby birds were big enough to fly away.—Primary Plans.

NEARSIGHTED POLLY.

Miss Alice had written a set of resolutions for her Sunday school class. Each girl had been given a copy before the old year said good-bye, and on New Year's Sunday they brought back the papers. Five were signed and one was not. The unsigned one belonged to Polly Saunders.

"Oh! didn't you think you would like to resolve with the rest of us?" asked Miss Alice.

"I didn't see any use in it," Polly answered, shrugging her shoulders.

Then Agnes Brent said, "Mamma thought it was so reasonable. She said there wasn't a thing in the list that we ought not to be glad to do."

"Let me read them, and find out which resolution troubles Polly." And then Miss Alice read:

"Resolved, 1. That I will, beginning with the new year, try to be in my class every Sunday.

"2. That I will study my lesson before coming to Sunday school.

"3. That I will be quiet and attentive, always remembering that I am in God's house on his day.

"4. That I will be careful to bring my contribution to the class collection every Sunday.

"5. That I will be very careful to give all I can for missions—"

"There!" Polly interrupted. "I can't see why I should 'resolve' that. I can't see why I should give money for the heathen, and father says so too. I can't see why I owe 'em a single cent."

What ails your eyes, Polly? You keep saying, 'I can't see' and 'I can't see,'" said Lutie Burgess, with a roguish laugh.

"She's nearsighted," said Caddie Brown. "My sister Louise couldn't see the figures on the black-board at school so's to read 'em, and mamma had to buy her some spectacles."

Agnes clapped her hands softly as she exclaimed, "If Polly is so nearsighted that she can't see why we ought to give to missions, let's take a collection and buy her some glasses."

"I can't see as I need spectacles," Polly began half angrily, and the other girls laughed so heartily to hear her favorite expression again that Miss Alice had to check them.

"I think we all need spectacles when we undertake to work for Jesus," she said, as they became quiet. "Our eyes are not strong enough to see as he sees. Things that look very clear to him we can't see at all. One of the things we do not understand is how he is going to enlighten all the people who are so ignorant and so far away from him as the heathen nations are. So we have to go to his Word and there we read, 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.' Now we have a pair of spectacles that shows us 'the figures on the blackboard,' we will say," and Miss Alice smiled at Caddie Brown. "We cannot see how God is to do his part—that isn't our business. But we see what our part is, and that we must either go or help send others. Isn't that clear?"

"Yes'm, yes'm," answered the girls.

"All these duties are plain and simple when we look at them through the glasses God gives us, are'nt they? Now, Polly, can you 'resolve' with us when you look through that text?"

"Why, yes, I'm willing to help, but father says it'll take a million years and I can't see——"

The girls began to laugh again, but Miss Alice said softly, as she clasped Polly's hand, "Lord, open thou our eyes, on this first Sabbath of this new year."—Children's Missionary Friend.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

Rev. A. L. Davis.

Gentle friends, saw ye the Reaper,
Strong and tall with snow-white beard.
Saw ye him thrust in his sickle,
Nothing daunted, not deterred?

Did ye hear the wail of orphans?
Did ye see the tears they shed?
Oh, they grieve for generations—
Generations that are dead!

Father Time, the winged reaper,
Circumambulates the globe,
Mows around in one short hour—
See the ground o'er which he strode.

Oh, the precious darling hours!
See them flitting, flying by;
Let us toil and labor in them—
Shall we drone on till we die?

See that bee on yonder blossom—
She may live but thirty days;
From how many buds now opened
Will she sip while here she stays?

But we kill time, murder hours,
Lo, their specters haunt us now!
Up, arouse us, up and doing,
We must to Time's scepter bow.

Farewell Year, now gone forever!
Could thy history be re-made
We would substitute much evil
With the good which we essayed.

But thou'rt gone—no more returning,
Mercy may atonement make;
Fly, sweet Mercy, Time outstripping,
Plead our cause for thine own sake.

May our future be obedience
To the laws of God and man;
May we ever love each other,
Having love for God supreme;
Then we, gathered to our fathers,
May have life that knows no end.

Jackson, Miss., Dec. 29. 1914.

Editorial

A GOOD WAY TO GET SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Central Methodist Advocate (Lexington, Ky.) suggests the following plan for securing subscriptions to the church paper, which we think is worth giving to our pastors:

"Take a copy of the paper to your pulpit. Discuss the paper, show the variety of its contents, tell the members that they promised to support the institutions of the Church and that the church paper is one of the most important. Say that nearly all families take a secular paper and urge that the Church paper should come first.

"Take a public subscription asking for names; take time to do it right. If you put the paper in in the background you will get no subscriptions. Get some of your leading members to go down the aisle of the church and take names. Stay with it and do something before you quit. It is a worthy cause. You might have some small envelopes for the subscribers to put their names on and the money inside. You can get enough small envelopes for this purpose at a printing office or the store for a few cents."

HELP GRENADA COLLEGE NEXT SUNDAY.

By order of the North Mississippi Conference, next Sunday, January 10, is "Grenada College Day," and every pastor within its bounds is expected to take a collection to meet a note for $3,000 now due on the fine new property recently acquired by that institution. It is to be hoped that not a single preacher or Sunday school superintendent in the Conference will fail to take an offering for this worthy cause. What charge is going to be the banner one? There are single congregations that ought to raise $500 or $1000 for this purpose. If more than $3000 should be secured, it will be used to reduce the remaining part of the debt. Let the brethren as soon as possible after January 10, send the money secured to President J. R. Countiss, Grenada, Miss., and also report the amount of it to Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, the Conference Secretary of Education, at Starkville, Miss. We hope to be able to publish in the Advocate a table showing exactly the sum contributed by every church and Sunday school in North Mississippi.

WHY IT HAS FAILED.

President Thomas, of Middlebury College, Vermont, is reported as having made the following utterance in a recent address:

"Religious instruction in our colleges has failed of its largest effect because it has not been sufficiently religious. In the reaction from unscientific methods in theology, and the uncritical use of Scripture we have filled up our colleges with critlcism and science, and left out the spirit and the soul. We have analyzed the husk and forgotten the kernel."

We do not at all doubt that this affirmation is true. An emasculated and weakened gospel is inadequate to reach and save men. Herein lies the peril of the Church's undertaking to maintain Biblical schools at the seats of the great secular institutions of learning: It is more likely that the teaching of these schools would have infused into it the prevailing unbelief and secularism than that they would Christianize the other departments of the institution. The proof of this is seen in the fact that the Theological Departments of practically all such colleges and universities are hotbeds of heresy—thorns in the flesh to the denominations with which they are in affiliation, as, for instance, those of Princeton and the University of Chicago. To be sure, the Church is under obligation to the students at these great secular schools; but, in our opinion, the best way for her to discharge that obligation is by means of a vigorous evangelism exercised through the local churches. In such an atmosphere is no place for her to undertake to do an extended work of Biblical instruction. That had better be done in her own institutions where she can control all the conditions and make them wholesome. The other course would be pretty sure to result in spreading a corrupted Christianity abroad and in a final wasting of her energies. A religion, "naturalized" to make it harmonize with science, so-called, is about as little needed in the world as anything that we know of.

This statement of President Thomas ought also to be laid to heart by those in charge of our Church schools. The spiritual tone of many of them needs deepening, and the doubt-sowers in clerical garb should be barred from them. The atmosphere about them ought to be kept so thoroughly Christian and evangelical that a young man or a young woman could scarcely attend one of them for four years without becoming a true disciple of the Master.

A COMPLETE MISREPRESENTATION.

Some weeks ago we made in the Advocate the following utterance:

"Some people seem to think that the man who is the most ready to overlook an offense against the authority of the Church, or against the cause of justice and right is the most religious; but this may be far from being true. To be forgiving is, indeed, a disposition to be commended, if the offender is truly penitent; but to 'slop' over in the matter and extend amnesty to persons who do not acknowledge their wrong-doing, to the injury of the cause of righteousness and the Church, is to evince a censurable weakness of character. If God, for instance, were to obliterate his attributes of justice and righteousness and become all mercy, what would become of the moral government of the universe? Doubtless it would soon go to pieces. How then can we expect the Church to escape that fate if such a spirit is to prevail in her governing councils?"

In the Midland Methodist of December 9, Dr. Burrow, the editor, took from the center of this paragraph the following sentence: "To be forgiving is indeed a disposition to be commended, if the offender is truly penitent; but to 'slop over in the matter' and extend amnesty to persons who do not acknowledge their wrong-doing, to the injury of the cause of righteousness and the Church, is to evince a censurable weakness of character;" and having detached this statement, he proceeded to represent us as having taken the position that in his purely personal dealings with his fellow-men a Christian may properly harbor a feeling of ill-will toward them until they are truly penitent.

We scarcely need to say that we never remotely dreamed of taking any such position as this: nor can this language in its original setting be logically tortured into conveying any such meaning. The whole paragraph clearly shows that we had in mind the question as to what should be done for the maintenance of the authority and protection of the welfare of the Church in the case of men who have acted unworthily and betrayed her interests, and that we were reprobating the disposition upon the part of some persons to gloss over grave offenses committed and "extend amnesty" to the offenders and continue to trust and honor them without their ever having shown the least penitence or regret. It was concerning our duty as members of the Church, charged in part with the responsibility of administering its government, that we were writing, and not the question as to what should be the state of feeling of the individual Christian toward such offenders, or his personal bearing toward them. To be more specific, we had in mind the disposition that is being shown in some quarters to regard lightly the spoliation of the Church's property by the most indefensible methods by Chancellor Kirkland and those who co-operated with him and to continue to thrust these men, without the least indicated change upon their part, into places of responsibility and influence in the Church. Does Dr. Burrow think that this position is unsound and unscriptural? If so, let him proceed to show that it is.

The truth is, the Doctor's isolation of our sentence and his effort to read into it a meaning which the context forbade, ranks pretty well with the performance of the preacher of whom Dr. John A. Broadus tells in his admirable work, "Preparation and Delivery of Sermons," who desired to preach against a certain manner of arranging their hair which the ladies had adopted, and was somewhat troubled to find a text. Finally his eye fell upon Matt. xxiv, 17: "Let him that is on the house-top not come down to take anything out of his house;" and he immediately adopted as a text for his discourse the words: "Top-not come down."

We wonder if it can be that Dr. Burrow saw the true purport of our brief utterance and sought to break its force by this indirect and unfair method of attack?

In conclusion, we desire to say that in holding to the real issue and not allowing ourself to be switched off into discussing Dr. Burrow's homily on "Forgiveness," we would not have it inferred that we endorse all that he said on the subject, or that we consider his exposition of the Scriptures cited as wholly sound. Possibly we may have something to say at a later date concerning the views that he advanced in his far-fetched editorial.

HELP DR. WYNN.

We are printing elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate a statement from President R. H. Wynn, acknowledging the receipt of some contributions to the Centenary College Maintenance Fund. Let others send him at once a remittance to be used for this purpose. As is well known, the income of Centenary College is not sufficient to meet its current expenses, and we cannot afford to have our faithful teachers there to go unpaid. A hundred Methodists in Louisiana ought to forward Dr. Wynn a check for $5 or more within the next ten days.

AGAINST "PASTOR" RUSSELL'S FREE PLATE.

The Oxford (Miss.) Independent says: "A number of the newspapers of the State continue to 'kill space' with Pastor Russell's sermons. These papers should have more respect for their readers and should place a higher estimate upon their intelligence than to give space to such 'offensive doctrines as he sets forth. Pastor Russell has been discredited by the different Protestant denominations and the newspapers should 'kill space' in a more judicious manner."

This is certainly wholesome advice and it is to be earnestly hoped that the secular weeklies in Mississippi referred to will heed it. The teachings of "Pastor" Russell are at war with those of all the Protestant Evangelical Churches, and his character has been pretty thoroughly discredited by The Brooklyn Eagle and other papers. Why, then, should any reputable journal strengthen a cause so unworthy by aiding in spreading abroad its unsound and misleading literature?

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. O. Bennett announces that he and his family have met with a hearty reception at Jonesboro, La., having arrived there on the 27th ultimo. He is already at work for the Master and expects a year of progress.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, was in New Orleans last Monday. He was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Lucile Cooper, who was en route to Florida. The Doctor was in his usual good health and genial humor.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard has begun his work auspiciously as pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church of this city. He is residing at 3418 Laurel Street, in a neat home that has been provided for him. This congregation has no parsonage.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, pastor of the Crawford Street Church of Vicksburg, Miss., has our thanks for two subscriptions sent in a few days since. Dr. Holloman is a "high-steepler" who thinks it is worth his time and effort to place the Conference organ in the homes of his people.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, Presiding Elder of the New Orleans District, is now comfortably domiciled at 1014 Cambronne Street and his 'phone number is Walnut 93. His family are affiliated with Carrollton Avenue Church, which Brother Holmes served a few years ago as pastor with great acceptability.

President H. P. Todd, the official head of Stanton College, at Natchez, Miss., has our thanks for a beautiful card, bringing us New Year greetings. Mr. Todd is one of Mississippi's leading young educators and a useful Methodist layman. We wish him great success in his work during the year now beginning.

Writing from Atlanta on December 25, where he has entered the Theological Department of Emory University, Rev. Olin Ray, of the North Mississippi Conference, says: "I am delighted with the work of our new University. There are now enrolled in the Biblical School 68 young ministers, representing 17 States."

Rev. T. J. Hopper, in a note written from Toccopola, Miss., on December 23, says: "I reached my new field on Saturday, Dec. 19, after traveling 70 miles by rail and 15 by mud. I am well pleased with the outlook, except the mud." The mud will soon dry up, and we dare say that Brother Hopper will have a successful year. He has been assigned to a good people.

A card from Rev. J. W. Ramsey of Heidelberg, Miss., bearing date of December 27, reads as follows: "Though it was eleven o'clock when we arrived here last Tuesday night, we were given a cordial welcome, and are now at home in one of the best parsonages in the Mississippi Conference." We trust that Brother Ramsey will be able to achieve much for the Master in his new field of labor.

Rev. J. H. Moore is on the ground at Lauderdale, Miss., and sends a hopeful message as to the outlook. We wish him much success in his new pastorate.

Rev. H. R. McKee is in place at Rose Hill, Miss., where he has been commissioned to labor for the next twelve months, and reports that he is pleased with the prospect.

A card from Rev. G. P. Fikes states that he and his family reached their new home in Laurel, Miss., on Christmas eve and were delightfully received. Brother Fikes is the pastor of our 14th Avenue Church of that city.

Rev. J. E. Gray, accompanied by his family, was in New Orleans on Wednesday, December 30, on his way to his new charge—Logtown and Pearlington (Mississippi). Brother Gray stated that he was pleased with his appointment and hopeful of a happy and fruitful year.

While the pastor, Rev. W. L. Doss, was attending Conference and spending the Christmas holidays with his parents, the pulpit of Epworth Church, this city, was filled by Rev. J. C. Orcutt and Rev. R. A. Davis. Both of these brethren delivered interesting and helpful messages.

We are informed that our preachers who are stationed in New Orleans have agreed to lunch together every Monday, after the Methodist Preachers' Meeting, which is held weekly at First Church. This is an admirable plan and will tend to encourage good-fellowship among the brethren.

On their arrival at Canton, Miss., on Wednesday, December 23, Rev. M. M. Black and family were given a very cordial welcome by the members of his new charge, and the work of the new Conference year has begun favorably. The good women of the church had everything comfortable at the parsonage and an elegant dinner in readiness."

Our Epworth congregation of this city, of which Rev. W. L. Doss is the accomplished pastor, has begun the publication of a neat little monthly of four pages for free distribution among its members. We are pleased to note that the editor of this paper is our esteemed friend, Mr. Paul Renshaw, a son of Rev. J. S. Renshaw, a worthy member of the Memphis Conference.

Rev. R. P. Nebiett reports as follows from Ripley, Miss.: "The people here are unusually cordial, and from every side come words and deeds to cheer. Our first Sunday in Ripley was a great occasion. The house was packed; the congregation was attentive and appreciative, and there was one accession on profession of faith. Our prayer meeting is an inspiration."

During the Christmas and New Year holidays the Editor received cards from many friends bringing him their greetings and good wishes. It is impossible for him to express to each of these friends his appreciation by means of a personal note; but he desires to thank every one of them through the Advocate for his kindly remembrance. Their names are graven on his heart.

We have on our table a catalogue of the Rayne (La.) Graded and Industrial High School for 1913-14. This is a most attractive annual and sets forth most impressively the advantages of this excellent institution, which is under the direction of Principal H. B. Hines and a well-chosen faculty of twleve instructors. This school is fortunate in having Hon. A. P. Hoit as President of its Board of Trustees.

"The town of Coldwater, Miss., is made of fine people. I had a large and inspiring congregation yesterday." So wrote Rev. H. G. Roberts, our new pastor at Coldwater, on December 28. The lines have indeed fallen in pleasant places for Brother Roberts; and the people, too, in this goodly town are highly favored, for they may expect preaching that is sound and spiritual so long as they keep their present pastor.

The work of the Alexandria District has opened well under the wise and aggressive leadership of Rev. W. H. May, the presiding elder. Brother May has made an enviable record in the responsible office that he holds during the past two years, and with the more complete acquaintance that he now has with the field, still larger achievements may be expected in the future. We are grateful to Brother May for the assurance that he will look carefully after the interests of the Advocate in his rounds.

Under date of January 2, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., writes "I am to go for a Sunday school institute for Mr. Pepper, in our First Church, Memphis, on January 13, and remain there until Jan. 15; thence I will proceed to the Fort Worth (Texas) District to spend a month in a series of institutes. Thus the work goes and grows, and a really wonderful work it is." Miss Kilpatrick's many friends are delighted, but not surprised, to see that she is in such demand as a Sunday school worker.

In enumerating some of the things that should be achieved in his charge—First Church, Laurel, Miss.—during the year, Rev. J. L. Neill sets down the following: "The New Orleans Christian Advocate taken in every home and read by each member of the Church." We wish that all our pastors in Louisiana and Mississippi would adopt this as one of the ends to be striven for during the year. Even if they should not fully realize their aim, a faithful and persistent effort to do so would yield gracious results.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Chester, Miss., in a note to the Editor, refers as follows to his charge: "The people have been very kind to us. I have already preached at three of my seven appointments and am due at the fourth one to-morrow, December 27. Pray for us and visit us this year if you can." Brother Gordon is one of the strongest preachers in his Conference and a most affable and brotherly man. We wish very much that we could visit him and have the privilege of preaching to some of his congregations.

We have in hand the "Louisiana Sunday School Success" for December. The editor of this most creditable publication is Mr. Van Carter, who is also the Secretary of the international work in Louisiana. Brother Carter is a son of the late Rev. C. B. Carter, D.D., who for a number of years was the brilliant editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. We note in examining the publication mentioned above that the Louisiana State Sunday School Convention will for the year 1915 be held in Baton Rouge, April 13-15.

Rev. S. L. Pope, of New Albany, Miss., says: "We seem to have started the new year well, and my people are all delighted at the prospect of having the Conference next fall. I have noted what you say in the Advocate about the renewal of subscriptions, and I shall be very glad to make a personal request of each of your subscribers to renew if you will send a list of them to me." This has the right ring. All the interests of the Church would boom in North Mississippi, if every charge could have such a man as Brother Pope, re-enforced by Sister Pope, to serve it.

Two pleasant visitors at the Advocate office last week were Rev. H. S. Johns, of Baton Rouge, Chaplain of the Louisiana State Penitentiary, and his son, Dr. Foster H. Johns, of New Orleans. Brother Johns' work among the State convicts is a very important one and he has discharged it with great efficiency for several years. Dr. Johns is another minister's son who is "making good." Though quite young, he is an associate worker with Dr. C. C. Bass in the Department of Research of the Medical School of Tulane University, of which institution he is an alumnus.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sunday School Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, is in Nashville this week attending the two days' conference that has been arranged there for the Sunday school Field Secretaries throughout the Church. Referring to his aim for the year in a letter to our office, Brother Gladney says: "We mean to bring 10,000 more people into the Sunday school and to have at least fifty schools to attain to the 100 per cent standard. This is a big task, but we have a great God behind us and a great Church that he can use to do this." Brother Gladney expects to make his home at Sardis during the coming year.

Rev. L. E. Alford, of Whitworth College, spent last Thursday in the Crescent City and kindly favored our office with a visit. He was accompanied by his daughter, who came to New Orleans for medical treatment. Brother Alford is delighted with his present work. He teaches in the College during the week and presents its claims for financial support to the people as opportunity offers. He has raised for this excellent school about $9000, during the few months that he has been connected with it. This does not include $6000 that Dr. Cooper has given. See Brother Alford's statement concerning Whitworth which appears on another page.

Rev. W. D. Wendel, of Como, Miss., writes: "We reached our new appointment on Wednesday before the third Sunday in December. We were met and conducted to the parsonage, where we found supper smoking on the table. My predecessor left everything in fine shape. The parsonage has recently been practically made new, with the addition of a bathroom, and is elegantly furnished. The church is modern, comfortable, and beautiful. It is a great thing for a pastor to make such improvements and turn them over in good shape to his successor. Everybody here loves and appreciates Brother and Sister Randolph."

Rev. R. I. Collins, of Courtland, Miss., writes: "I am well pleased with the people here. They met Mrs. Collins and me at the train and took us to the parsonage where everything was so nicely arranged that it at once seemed like home. Fires were burning in the nice rooms and in the pantry were lots of good things to eat. We have one of the best arranged barns for our horse that can be found anywhere. The work is a little heavier than that we had at Cockrum, having on it six churches. Everything seems to point to a good year." Brother Collins states that it is his purpose to try to circulate the Advocate, and we confidently expect our mailing files to show at an early date the results of his efforts in this direction.

REV. W. C. BLACK DEAD.

As we were going to press Tuesday night we received a telegram from Rev. M. M. Black, dated at Meridian, Miss., Jan. 5, which read as follows: "My father (Rev. W. C. Black) died last night and was buried here this afternoon."

FOR VANITY.

Hannah J. Dawtrey, in the Times-Picayune.

I would the scene might flash before your eye
Of bonnie mother birds that bleed and die,
When you with plumage rare
Bedeck your hair,
For Vanity.

I would the piteous cry might haunt your ear,
Of helpless orphan broods that pine in fear,
When you white feathers wear,
Ye ruthless fair,
For Vanity.

I would these sights and sounds of useless pain
Might burn themselves upon your heart and brain,
When you, unblushingly, dare
Such spoils to share
For Vanity.

Who loves the birdlings, gave them the plumage gay
For their own joy,—the God to whom we pray;
Remember when at prayer—
He does not care
For Vanity.

CHILDREN ON SUNDAY.

One of the most potent causes for the falling off of church attendance is the new liberty given to children as to how they shall spend their Sundays. "The little dears!" "How cruel to force them to go to Church when they want to play in the garden; I don't believe in making religion compulsory," cries the fond mother; and she conjures up some dreadful picture of a Puritan Sunday with its gloom and restrictions, by which she appears to suggest she herself suffered in childhood, and declares that her children shall not be set against religion in that way.

I came of a Puritan stock, was brought up in a Puritan atmosphere, had experience of the Puritan Sunday, and yet I bear witness to a happy childhood and to a host of happy Sundays. We had family prayers morning and evening; we went to Sunday school twice in the day and twice to church; we should no more have thought of not going to Church on Sunday than of not having our breakfast on Sunday. It all came in quite simply and naturally, and as a matter of course. It is true, Church and Sunday school and family prayers were not as hilarious as a romping game of tennis; the services were long and often dull, the music would not satisfy a cathedral organist, and yet we looked forward to Sunday with interest and always gave it a welcome.

Certain Sundays spent each summer in the country come back to me in memory like the delicate scent of faded rose leaves—the walk across the cornfields to the little white-washed chapel, the old-fashioned tunes, the white-haired minister, the open window through which came the rustle of poplar trees, the cooing of doves and the "murmur of innumerable bees,"—these things return upon me with a benediction. I have never regretted the drill and discipline of that early religious experience. Nor can I understand the frame of mind which, while it insists on drill and discipline for mental training in childhood, thinks that drill and discipline are not needed for moral and spiritual training. Parents would not dream of allowing their children to stay away from school just whenever they pleased. Yet the moral faculties require just as careful and constant training as the mental.—The London Inquirer.

"Any one can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Any one can do his work, however hard, for one day. Any one can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly, purely, till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means."

GEORGE WASHINGTON TOOTLE.

The subject of this writing was the only child of his parents; he was born February 12, 1844, being a native of Jackson County, Miss. He was married Dec. 23, 1871, to Miss Sarah Jane Dubois. Of this union there was born ten children, all living yet. Brother Tootle departed from this life after much pain and patient suffering, Aug. 7, 1914. He was a consistent member of the Church, always looking after its interests, seeing that everything was in proper shape and well kept. He was a faithful steward, trustee of church property, and the pastor's friend. He was an honored citizen of the county in which he was born and reared, and was one of the first promoters of the New Prospect Camp Ground, and a faithful supporter of the same. His dying request of his wife and children was to be sure to go to the coming Camp Meeting which was only about two months off. In all my visiting at his home, while sick, I never found him growing impatient, but he was meek and humble and trusted in the Master's power to save. In talking to him quite a number of times he always expressed himself as being ready to go, saying "there was not a cloud to darken his heavenly sky." This he affirmed often in talking to me about his future home.

The last time I talked with him before he passed from the walks of men, he said, "Brother Blackwell, if I pass out before you see me again, you will know where to find me." May the God of all grace, and the Giver of all good and perfect gifts, comfort the stricken family in this hour of sadness. Well has the poet written of such Christians:

Their toils are past, their work is done,
And they are fully blest;

MARRIED.

At Bossier City, La., on Dec. 27, 1914, by Rev. W. B. Perritt, Mr. HOMER M. LEAGUE of Arcadia, Ala. and Miss FRANCIS A. ROSENBLATH, of Shreveport, La.

At the home of the bride, at Thomasville, Miss., by Rev. R. E. Rutledge, Mr. D. C. HARPER and Miss NAOMI WILKINS.

COMPLIMENTARY OF MRS. R. H. B. GLADNEY.

At a recent meeting the Woman's Missionary Society at Kosciusko, Miss., took the following action:

Resolved 1, That in the removal of Mrs Gladney from our work our Woman's Missionary Society has sustained a serious loss. Her devotion to every sort of progress, her breadth of intellect, her culture and her enthusiasm made her a factor in our church and social life. The Missionary Society, the Sunday school, and the young people with whom she worked so pleasantly and to whom her comradeship meant so much, will especially miss her.

Resolved 2, That while we as loyal Methodists bow in submission to the will of the Conference, we take this method of expressing our appreciation of Mrs. Gladney's work among us, and though we shall accord to her successor the same loyalty that we gave to her, we desire to place on record this testimonial of our appreciation and our wish for dear Mrs. Gladney pleasant fields of usefulness each succeeding year. She supplements so beautifully her husband's able and consecrated ministry that she must be received with open arms wherever they may be sent.

Signed:
MRS. SAM GILLILAND,
MRS. J. J. ALLEN,
Committee.

ORGANIZED FOR WORK.

The Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Annual Conference for the ensuing quadrennium has been organized with the following persons constituting the Officers and Executive Committee: W. M. Williams, President, Jackson, Miss.; L. E. Alford, Secretary, Brookhaven, Miss.; W. D. Davis, Treasurer, Brookhaven, Miss.

Let all communications relative to the work of the Board be addressed to the Secretary of the Board, Brookhaven, Miss.

L. E. ALFORD,
Secretary of Board.

CLINTON, LA.

Dear Editor: I wish to drop you a few lines informing you that we landed in our new field on Dec. 23rd and found things in splendid condition. I have only preached once, and that was to the Clinton congregation. We had what I pronounce a good service, several coming forward at the close and saying, "Pray for me, that I may be more faithful this year than in any preceding year of my life." This, of course, was a great pleasure and was very encouraging to me. My prayer and aim are to do the will of the Master. I will give you a fuller account of my work later on. With best wishes to you and your paper, I am yours in the work.

C. B. POWELL, P. C.

BOSSIER CITY, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: Brother W. B. Perritt was appointed pastor of the Methodist Church in our little city at the recent Conference held in Shreveport, and the people as a whole are certain that a better selection could not have been made. Up to the present, under the efficient leadership of our much-beloved pastor there have been 19 accessions to our church. The prayer meetings and Sunday school are taking on new life and we are looking forward to great things this Conference year. We are planning to build a new church in the near future, which is very badly needed. We are determined to stand by our young pastor and we believe by our doing this he will be able to accomplish great things for the Master. There are only a few of our people here who take the church paper, but Brother Perritt is going to canvass the membership for subscriptions and many of us will give him our subscriptions.

Girls! Try It! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.
If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.
Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Difficulties—Securing Teachers.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

One of the first difficulties encountered in grading a Sunday school is the problem of securing suitable teachers. In an average Sunday school, numbering from 150 to 200 students, the working force usually numbers ten or twelve officers and teachers. But when an attempt is made to grade this same school, supposing the departmental method is adopted—and it is by far the best—at least twenty officers and teachers will be needed for the classes composing the Cradle Roll, Beginners' Department, Primary and Junior Departments, if there are separate rooms, or seventeen, if there is only one auditorium with screens and curtains. The number of teachers needed for classes above the age of twelve, will depend largely upon how far the graded spirit has pervaded the school. Where are all these teachers to come from? Here is a problem indeed, and no inconsiderable one.

In answering this question, I wish to say that from an experience running through several years, I am convinced that this is a problem of the head rather than of fact. Our churches have scores of men and women willing to teach in the Sunday school or work elsewhere as they may be needed, provided some one will tell them what to do and how to go at it. If the church leader, be he pastor or Sunday school superintendent, will only intelligently outline the work to be done, and then sympathetically encourage and help those chosen to assist, he usually can get all the workers he needs. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," is largely the explanation of the Church's apathy.

This fact should never be lost sight of. Grading is a process. It cannot be done in a day. Time must be taken for it, or difficulties insuperable will be encountered. But if the work be done slowly, systematically, and prayerfully, they will dwindle into insignificance. The first officer to be chosen, is the elementary superintendent. She is the key to the situation. Under her all elementary superintendents and teachers must work. To her they are amenable, while through her, the Sunday school superintendent controls the department. A suitable selection here solves half the teacher problems of the whole school. She, with her intelligent appreciation of what is to be done, learned either from past experience or by diligent study, and her wider acquaintance with the women of the church, meeting them in the social circle, the church societies and at other functions, is eminently qualified to select her associates, and she will do it.

Now let us see how this will work. The superintendent realizes the imperative need for more and better teachers. The pastor has a bird's-eye view of the whole church, as well as of the school. The elementary superintendent appreciates the need of her department and knows the capabilities of the women of the church, while these very women, and men too, are only waiting for some one to point out something for them to do for their Lord and his Church. You have the work, the men and women waiting to do the work, and the intermediaries to bring the workers and the work together. The problem is solved. Of course, these helpers are not going to be found in a week. One at a time is the unwritten law. Possibly, yea probably, two years will pass before the full quota of helpers will be at work.

Again, mistakes will in all probability be made. What of it? It would be surpassingly surprising if they were not made. The pastor perhaps will make mistakes in the selection of a superintendent for the school, but will keep on until he finds the right one. The Bishop and his cabinet may have made mistakes in the appointment of pastors. But they did not abandoned the work because mistakes were made. Each took the first opportunity to correct the error, and so in the selection of sub-superintendents and teachers, mistakes will in all probability be made, but they can easily be changed until the right ones are found.

A few years ago, a Sunday school with an attendance of approximately 200 and a working force of only thirteen, began grading at the beginners' department. In a few months the primary department was added. In a short time the first years in the junior department were organized. There the work stopped. Additional classes were created by promotions. After only two years thirty-two men and women were at work in that school, an increase of nearly 300 per cent. To-day some of the most progressive and intelligent Sunday school workers of that church are men and women, who, at the beginning, were stricken from the list of possible assistants because of their apparent unconcern about church affairs. Another school with an attendance of 150 and twelve officers and teachers, began its grading and to-day enrolls thirty workers, having had much the same experiences as the one above mentioned. Other instances could be given if needful. I repeat, the teacher question is not the problem it is supposed to be if gone at in a careful, intelligent and prayerful spirit.

If nothing else could be said in favor of grading our Sunday schools than that it created a place where our people can work for the Church, it would outweigh all objections to the scheme.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Ends Dry, Hoarse or Painful Coughs Quickly

A Simple, Home-Made Remedy, Inexpensive but Unequalled

The prompt and positive results given by this pleasant tasting, home-made cough syrup has caused it to be used in more homes than any other remedy. It gives almost instant relief and will usually overcome the average cough in 24 hours.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any drug store, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This makes a full pint—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy at a cost of only 54 cents or less. You couldn't buy as much ready-made cough medicine for $2.50. Easily prepared and never spoils. Full directions with Pinex.

The promptness, certainty and ease with which this Pinex Syrup overcomes a bad cough, chest or throat cold is truly remarkable. It quickly loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes a painful cough in a hurry. With a persistent loose cough it stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the annoying hacking.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol and is famous the world over for its splendid effect in bronchitis, whooping cough, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

To avoid disappointment in making this, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., 235 Main St.

DR. HOLLOMAN WELCOMED.

A large audience was at Crawford Street Methodist Church Sunday morning, Dec. 27, to greet their newly-appointed pastor, Dr. T. B. Holloman.

A pleasing coincidence is connected with the Doctor's return to this city. He is the only minister who has ever been returned to serve the church, and he stated to the congregation that it is his first re-appointment to a charge once served.

The Doctor read for his text these words, found in the 29th verse and 11th Chapter of Matthew: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me," emphasizing the character of Jesus as a great teacher.

Man, he said, was the only creatnre confronted with the whence, the why and the whither, and that the mission of Jeesus was to settle these questions. Chronological tables and family trees had no place in the solution; the question of all questions was "Why am I here, and what shall be the end of my living?" He expressed a fear that in our Christmas festivities we overlooked entirely the great significance of the occasion, as it celebrated the birth of the Savior of a fallen world, and the world's wisest and greatest Teacher.

Jesus was the only infallible Teacher. Moses had erred. St. Paul erred, and others less noted had erred, but the most critical had not found an error in him as a master teacher. Even his enemies have agreed that never man spake like him and no philosophy yet written was comparable to his teachings for moral guidance.

Humility in worship, brotherly kindness, domestic felicity, family happiness, were all made the surer by adhering to the teachings of the lowly Nazarene and the "well done good and faithful servant" would crown the life that was built upon the teachings of the Christ.

At the close of the services the Doctor received an ovation from his friends and parishioners who gathered about him at the chancel.—Vicksburg Herald.

DANGER FROM LITTLE WOUNDS.

A little cut or wound that looks trivial frequently develops into a serious and possibly fatal case of blood poisoning. Don't take any risk. Apply a little Gray's Ointment,—it speedily heals the wound and leaves you safe and sound. Gray's Ointment is the time-tested cure for sores, boils, carbuncles, cuts, bruises, burns, and all skin abrasions and eruptions. It was discovered in 1820—for nearly a century an indispensable household remedy the country over. Keep a box in the house. It heals the little troubles and prevents the big ones. Only 25c a box—at druggists—and it will save you many an ache and possibly a life. Get a free sample by writing W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

At a meeting of the Laymen's Missionary Movement held this day in the auditorium of the First Church at Shreveport, the following business was given attention, viz:

Van Carter was elected secretary of the Laymen's Movement and of the Board of Lay Activities of our Conference.

The following standard of efficiency was adopted:

1. A Lay Leader for every Church.
2. A Charge Leader for every charge.
3. Monthly distribution of literature to every family.
4. A Missionary Committee for every church.
5. A service every Sunday in every church.
6. The adoption of the Duplex Envelope System and a simultaneous Every-Member Canvass in every charge every year, between January 1st and March 1st.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Whereas, in our Discipline "It is urged that, as far as possible, the missionary offering in the Sunday school go as a freewill offering and is not to be used to meet the Missionary Assessment upon the Congregation;" therefore,

Be it resolved by this Laymen's meeting of the Louisiana Conference that every effort be put forth by the presiding elders, pastors and laymen in each charge to encourage the movement to turn the Sunday school missionary offering into the channel directed by the Discipline.

On a motion, duly seconded, Brother W. S. Holmes was nominated for Conference Lay Leader, and there being no further nominations, he was declared elected.

VAN CARTER, Secretary.

IN APPRECIATION OF DR. JONES.

Whereas the Sunday School of the Southern Methodist Church at Oxford, Miss., has heard with deep sorrow of the passing away of our beloved former superintendent, Dr. Richard Watson Jones, we desire to express our admiration of him as a man, a teacher, and a Christian gentleman. Versatile in many walks of life in which he was active, for over twenty-five years the honored professor of chemistry in the University of Mississippi, for an almost equal period superintendent of our Sunday school, and a member of the board of stewards, and on several occasions a member of the General Conference, during all this time he went in and out among us as an encouraging example of what a good and great man may be and do. We feel that we owe to him the foundation that has resulted in the splendid spirit and bright future of our school, and we esteem it our privilege to do honor to his memory.

Resolved by our Sunday school, that a copy of this testimonial be published in the local papers and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy forwarded to the family of Dr. Jones in Laurel, Miss.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS.

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

A Nervous Woman Finds Relief From Suffering.

Women who suffer from extreme nervousness, often endure much suffering before finding any relief. Mrs. Joseph Snyder, of Tiffin, O., had such an experience, regarding which she says:

"Six months I was bedfast with nervous prostration. I had sinking spells, a cold, clammy feeling,—could not stand the slightest noise. At times I would almost fly to pieces; stomach very weak. My husband insisted on my taking Dr. Miles' Nervine, and I began to improve before I had finished the first bottle until I was entirely cured."

MRS. JOSEPH SNYDER,
262 Hudson St., Tiffin, Ohio.

Many remedies are recommended for diseases of the nervous system that fail to produce results because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven its value in such cases so many times that it is unnecessary to make claims for it. You can prove its merits for yourself by getting a bottle of your druggist, who will return the price if you receive no benefit.

COMB SAGE TEA IN LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look young! Common garden Sage and Sulphur darkens so naturally nobody can tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

FOOCHOW METHODISM.

"We have just closed a splendid session of our Annual Conference," writes Rev. W. A. Main from Foochow. "The ministers, on behalf of their churches, subscribed $23,000 toward a forward movement fund, and it is anticipated that this amount will be considerably increased."

SOME REFLECTIONS.

Conference is over and once more we are fairly started on the pathway of the year. The gate of the old year has closed softly behind us and another has opened.

As I sit here in a comfortable chair by a nice warm fire, writing and thinking of all the preachers and their families in the happiest and cheeriest way possible (which is the right and only way to think, you know, if one desires happy and cheery thoughts in return, as I surely do), I am wondering just what we are going to do, you and I and everyone, to make 1915 a better year than any that has gone before. We have a responsibility in the matter—a responsibility that we cannot shirk if we would. It is individual thinking and saying and doing that make up the record for good or ill, and my part and yours are no less important than any other.

Let us consider this, and make up our minds, once for all, to eliminate, to wipe out without leaving a single trace, the negative habits of thought that may bring us to anything except to the fulfilment of our honest and reasonable desires.

There are a few things that it would be well for us to cut out: unhapiness first, because when we are unhappy and put on a long face we not only suffer ourselves, but our people have to suffer too; for what congregation is it that wants to listen to a preacher who wears a long face and is restless and unhappy. And there isn't a bit of need of it, you know, because we really have so much to be happy about, if we would only think so.

Then there is uncharitableness, ungraciousness, unreadiness — perhaps this should come first, because we are so apt to put off things that we ought to do.

Then come ingratefulness, unbelief, unfaithfulness, untruthfulness! Ah, there is a whole flock of them to get rid of; but at least one we should want very much to keep. I know you can guess what it is, because we have such a habit of thinking we ought to have the best of things. It would be well worth our while to cut the acquaintance of another flock of ne'er-do-wells, chief of which is discouragement in well-doing. May the Lord cheer and bless and keep every preacher and his family through the strenuous days that are to come during the year 1915!

May all things true in the world seem truer,
And the better things of earth seem best;
May friends be truer, nearer and dearer,
And love be all as our sun dips west.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Through every minute of this day,
Be with me, Lord!
Through every day of all this week,
Be with me, Lord!
Through every week of all this year,
Be with me, Lord!
Through all the years of all this life,
Be with me, Lord!
So shall the days and weeks and years
Be threaded on a golden cord,
And all draw on with sweet accord
Unto thy fullness, Lord,
That so when time is past
By grace I may at last
Be with thee, Lord!

THE JUNIORS OF NATCHITOCHES.

Since January 1, 1914, I have had the honor of being first vice-president in our Natchitoches auxiliary. I count it a privilege to be a leader of God's little ones. They are always eager to learn and are responsive to every demand made upon them.

During the year 1913 there were 75 children on the roll, and children from all denominations were members. Last year other Protestant Churches realized that they needed their children and have organized in their churches, societies similar to our Junior Missionary Society. For this reason we have only 43 children in our Junior division. We meet twice a month; at one meeting we have the program in the Year Book and business, and at the other meeting we have the study book, and after the lesson light refreshments are served.

We are training our children to be leaders, and it is beautiful to hear their childish voices read the Bible lesson and lead in prayer. Many mothers and fathers here have been brought closer to our Savior through the influence of their little ones.

We have a public program once each quarter, and our church is always filled on this occasion with eager listeners. Our Sunday school is impressed with the work of our Junior Missionary Society and generously consented to let our offering of the third quarter, in the Elementary department, be used for the Junior work in home and foreign lands.

We have an invisible wire stretched across the back of the pulpit, and each class is represented by white, yellow, blue, and red ships hung on this wire. Each Sunday the classes are eager to hear the financial report, and know if their ship is ahead in the race.

Our men and women are realizing more and more the importance of training the children in missionary work and my prayer is that there will soon be a Junior Missionary Society in every church in our Conference. As leaders of God's children; let us never tire, never grow cold, but be patient, loving and faithful.

I cannot close without a tribute to our Conference First Vice-President, Mrs. R. H. Harper. She labored faithfully four years with our children here, and "Mrs. Harper"—that name means everything that is good, loving and true to our Natchitoches boys and girls. Her every thought is to lead some little one to Christ.

That all of our boys and girls may reach Home safely, and that we may have the joy of meeting them before His throne, is my prayer.

Mrs. W. T. CUNNINGHAM.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Missionary Society will be held in Columbia, Miss., Feb. 5-9. It is our earnest desire to have a delegate from every auxiliary in our Conference. Begin to plan now to send your delegate.

Our new Constitution goes into effect and some changes among the officers must be made. As it is such an important meeting we ask a large attendance, as well as earnest prayers for its wise conduct, that all may be done for God's glory.

GOD CARES FOR HIS MISSIONARIES.

Prayer is power. God's power is available, and it is through intercessory prayer that the Church may unlock the resources and forces of the unseen world. In a marvelous manner we have been guided in the establishment of our Congo Mission at Wembo-Niama. We had not been on the concession one week with our six missionaries—Brothers Mumpower, Bush, Stockwell, and their wives—before a leopard, which had been prowling about the premises, sprang upon the back of one of our sentinels during the night and wounded him in twenty places. The man recovered under Dr. Mumpower's care. We had been sleeping by open windows and within twelve feet of the spot. At the breakfast table next morning, as we lifted our voices in prayer and praise, we thanked God for special preservation and for the many Christian friends in the United States, Brazil, and in Africa itself who had pledged their daily prayers in our behalf.

Now comes a letter from Brother J. A. Stockwell, in which he speaks of the destruction of the house in which the three missionary families had spent the time between our arrival at Wembo-Niama in February and the date of their moving into the temporary houses which they had put upon the concession. Within three weeks from the removal of the last family a terrific storm came which might have ended their lives. So once more we would express our profound gratitude to Almighty God for the mercies and protection vouchsafed this heroic little missionary band standing out there in the heart of the Dark Continent. I know that my request will not be made in vain when I ask that renewed intercession be made in their behalf during this terrible war in Europe, which has crippled Belgium, and, as far as we know at this writing, has cut off all means of supply both to Wembo-Niama and to our Presbyterian missionaries, who have been so kind to us. Let them be included as well in these prayers.—Bishop W. R. Lambuth, in Epworth Era.

NOTICEABLE THINGS IN AFRICA.

The following are extracts from a letter written by Brother J. A. Stockwell, who, we understand, was recovering from a severe attack of fever. We know that the Church will rejoice over his recovery, and that they will pray that his life may be spared for many years to be used in the Master's service:

"One of the most noticeable things in Africa is silence. None of the thousand and one things that make noise in a civilized land are here, and natnre takes things very quietly. The birds, as a rule, make no note: African dogs do not bark; and the only things that make a noise are the people. Of course, if one has a hundred or so around him, as we have now most of the time, he does not find the silence particularly oppressive; but out on the road you may strain your ears as you will and you cannot hear a sound. Even in the forest it is the same—as silent as the tomb.

"Another thing is the lack of old people. We do not know the age of any of the natives, as that is something they know nothing about, but I have seen very few gray heads in the Congo Belge.

"But the worst and most appalling thing of all is the condition of the women of this Batetela country. If it is true, as I have often read, that a people cannot rise above its womanhood, then these people must do a great deal of climbing before they can take their place among respected people, for degraded and immoral as the men undoubtedly are, I believe it is a fact that the women are much more so. Even the native women from Luebo, who came with us, were shocked at their condition."

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Is Harmless To Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour, bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless, doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Sunday School Board of the Mississippi Conference for the coming four years is made up of the following: preachers—H. F. Tolle, chairman; W. A. Hays, secretary; J. L. Decell, treasurer; J. V. Bennett, C. M. Chapman, J. C. Chambers, W. G. Henry; Lay members—E. E. O'Neal, Dr. A. K. Barrier, J. B. Bridges, V. D. Youngblood, J. B. Holland, J. R. Banes, R. A. Maddox. The last-named is also the Field Secretary for the Conference. As soon as the Board was organized after its appointment, the Executive Committee was authorized to contract with the Field Secretary for the year 1915, and this was completed at a meeting of that Committee at Newton, Miss., on Dec. 19, 1914. The Board has planned great things for the cause this year, but their plans will be a failure without your help and co-operation and THIS MEANS YOU. I will give you some of the plans, as follows:

The Board wishes the Field Secretary to spend six weeks in each presiding elder's district, holding an institute in each pastoral charge instead of trying to reach every Sunday school in each charge. Let the workers come together at some one church and there hold an institute for two days and nights. This will add greatly to the efficiency of the work. Also a district institute will be held at the District Conference if the presiding elder will give one day for it; otherwise it will be held at some other time.

Rev. H. F. Tolle, was elected as the Financial Agent of the Board, and the following were selected to look after the Five-Cent Assessment and Fifth Sunday Collections in their respective districts: Brookhaven District, Mr. V. D. Youngblood, Wesson, Miss.; Hattiesburg District, Rev. J. C. Chambers, Sumrall, Miss.; Meridian District, Rev. J. L. Decell, Waynesboro, Miss.; Newton District, Mr. J. B. Bridges, Laurel, Miss.; Port Gibson District, Dr. A. K. Barrier, Rolling Fork, Miss.; Seashore District, Mr. E. E. O'Neal, Saucier, Miss.; Jackson District, Rev. W. G. Henry, Jackson, Miss.

You are very kindly asked to please take the Five-Cent Assessment as soon as you can and forward it to the member of the Board in your district, whose name appears above. We have FAITH in your doing this.

It was ordered by the Board that the Field Secretary should look after the applications for help from needy schools. Rev. H. F. Tolle, chairman, is to have in charge the matter of Children's Day, programs, etc.

We are indeed glad to note that the number of Sunday schools for the year 1914 increased from 446 to 481, giving us 35 new schools, with an increase of 2294 more pupils than we had last year, and 266 more officers and teachers; but we yet have 89 societies without Sunday schools, and about 30,000 church members out of the Sunday school. But we hope to have a greater increase for the year 1915 than we did for 1914. Let us all pray for that.

The Field Secretary is now ready to take up work in the field, and now is a good time to get your workers lined up for the year. Then all will not want the SUMMER SUNDAYS and work the secretary nearly to death for about five months. Really, now is the best time to have the Field Secretary to visit you. By getting things well in hand now you will have the whole year ahead of you for work.

NOTICE.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

Dear Brethren: If any of your members come to the hospitals of Shreveport please write me a card and I shall be glad indeed to see that they have the proper pastoral care while in the city.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA

NOT an object of charity; not a veneering plant; not a place to cram; not a short-cut affair; no place for triflers or ne'er-do-wells; not a reformatory.

An institution run on business principles; expects and demands honest effort and strict obedience; offers courses in variety under splendidly equipped, trained, experienced and Christian teachers from the best Colleges, Universities and Conservatories. Graduates are among the elect women of the country. Normal graduates "make good."

Income nearly doubled in two years. More than Four Thousand Dollars spent in improvements and accommodations in the past two years. Has a right by every token to demand the earnest consideration of every Louisiana Methodist (we do not poach on the territory of any other Conference). Scores of friends and patrons of other faiths.

We want ten more earnest, ambitious girls at the beginning of the next year—Jan. 4, 1915.

Mansfield is on the map. Suppose you look it up. It is best to come and see.

R. E. BOBBITT, President.

LORD ROBERTS ON MISSIONS.

At the present time, when the whole nation has mourned the death of Lord Roberts, it is worth recalling a letter that he privately addressed to army officers, in conjunction with two other distinguished generals, on the subject of missions. "You will most certainly come into contact with the representatives of various Christian missionary societies," said this communication, "whose special work it is to show to non-Christian peoples the love of Christ whom we profess to serve. We commend these missionaries to you as a body of men and women who are working helpfully with the government, and contributing to the elevation of the people in a way impossible to official action. Some object to Christian missions in ignorance of their real value. We would suggest that you will use all opportunities of making yourself personally acquainted with the work they are doing, and the character of the converts. Most missions will bear looking into, and we are convinced that if you will do this you will never afterwards condemn or belittle them."—British Weekly.

MORE POTASH COMING.

American crops and soils are still as hungry for Potash as before the outbreak of the European War, which curtailed the Potash shipments.

Some of the Fertilize Companies are trying to induce farmers to buy the one-sided low Potash or no Potash fertilizers of a generation ago. This means a fertilizer that is profitable to the manufacturer, but not the best for the farmer. When the Syndicate in 1910 started the direct sales of Potash to dealers and farmers at reasonable prices, Potash sales increased 65 per cent in one year, a clear proof that farmers know that Potash Pays. They know that Potash gives good yields, good quality and resistance to plant diseases.

Many of the Fertilizer Manufacturers are willing to meet the farmer's wishes and sell him what he thinks he needs. These manufacturers are now willing to furnish as much Potash as they can secure. They offer goods with 5 per cent and even in some cases 10 per cent Potash, if the farmers insist on it.

Shipping conditions are improving, more Potash is coming forward although the costs of production and transportation are higher. The higher price of fertilizers is not due wholly to the slightly higher cost of Potash. Much of the Potash that will be used in next Spring's fertilizer had reached America before the war started.

There is no substitute for Potash.

We can no more return to the fertilizer of twenty years ago than we can return to the inefficient farm implements or unprofitable livestock of that period. H. A. HUSTON.

THE VISION OF GOD.

The constant vision of God is needed for one who is going successfully to resist temptation, triumph over obstacles, and perform duty. The capacity of seeing God at every turn of the road, at every newly opened door, through every stress of circumstances, in all hours of trial is the only thing that will keep one steady and true at all times. To see him is to know that he is there, that—

"Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow keeping watch above his own."

When we see God there is beauty everywhere; all the world becomes transfigured. Every sound becomes music, from the chirping of the cricket in the evening stillness to the roar of the storm and the crashing of the thunder in the midnight solitudes. The heart filled with the sense of God, hearing his voice, and noting his footsteps is ready alike for high achievement or for patient suffering. Inspired with a noble courage there is no Red Sea, no wilderness, no Jordan that it may not cross, no sons of Anak, no armies, no walled cities that will check its advance.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Positive proof from oldest Records that John baptized by Sprinkling. 68-page book, only 16 cents in stamps. Mahaffey Co., Box 8, Bateshurg, S. C.

AFTER THE WATCH-NIGHT SERVICE.

Decisions were made at midnight which must be confirmed at dawn. The church which is satisfied with merely instigating good resolutions will secure meager results in action. January is a strategic month for evangelistic programs. Let them be put into effect with hopeful energy. There is one supreme advantage which the soul-seeker enjoys above every other worker—he is certain that God has anticipated his approach to any human being he may desire to win for Christ. The Holy Spirit always speaks first.—New York Christian Advocate.

Blessed are the living who live in the Lord.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Ida Whitaker,
Associate Teacher in the Jackson School.

A mighty river rolling to the South,
A time-worn building, old; but massive still,
Between the two, upon a horse of bronze,
The image of the man of iron will.
Around, the flowers bloom bright in Jackson Square—
Forget-me-nots of memory and of fame;
And Jackson Street, and the old Jackson School
Where minds grow strong, perpetuate his name.
Adown the highways of a hundred years,
Echoes of victory are floating yet,
Echoes that woke when Jackson forced his foes
And drove them from the field of old Chalmette.
Again the cannon boom; the banners wave;
Drums beat; quick marching ranks move to and fro;
And Jackson's name is borne from mouth to mouth,
Just as it was a hundred years ago.
Honor him for the victory he won!
Was it a useless battle? Nay, not so.
It showed the nations that the Western World
Could hold its own against the mightiest foe.
Since then, a bridge of peace has spanned the sea
O'er which have walked a hundred years of trade.
'Tis from such deeds a country's glories grow,
Of such, the world's foundation-stones are made.

OUR CENTENNIAL PEACE CELEBRATION.

In the city of Ghent, Belgium, on December 24, 1814, the treaty which put an end to the War of 1812—the last War between the United States and Great Britain—was signed, though the conflict did not actually terminate until after the Battle of New Orleans had been fought two weeks later, the opposing forces in this section, because of the slow method of communicating news in that day, still being ignorant that peace had been declared. Since that time, though they have had frequent disagreements, the two great English-speaking nations have been able to adjust all their differences without an appeal to arms. The conception of having the two countries to celebrate the passing of a century of peace between them was a beautiful one, and but for the outbreak of the present collossal war in Europe, which is taxing the energies of Great Britain to their utmost, the ceremonies of the occasion would doubtless have been on a scale that would have forcibly impressed the whole civilized world. But though restricted, this unusual centennial has not been allowed to pass by without having its large significance strongly emphasized. The leading journals of both the United States and England have had much to say on the subject, and it has been fittingly commemorated in various other ways.

It was but natural that New Orleans and the State of Louisiana should feel a deep interest in this celebration, as the greatest battle of the War of 1812 was fought here. A year ago the State Legislature appropriated $10,000 toward defraying the expenses of ceremonies suitable to the occasion, and preparations looking to this end had been under way for months. Beginning on January 8, the exercises lasted three days and were participated in by the Governor of the State, the Mayor of New Orleans, a large number of Louisiana's foremost citizens, representatives of both the English Government and ours, and many distinguished visitors from other commonwealths of the Union (those of the North as well as of the South) and from Canada. There were parades, banquets, receptions, orations in and out of doors, and appropriate religious services. The statues of Andrew Jackson and Henry Clay, who was one of the signers of the Treaty of Ghent, were decorated with flowers, and a monument that had been erected on the Chalmette battleground, where the last fateful struggle between the troops of the two countries took place, was unveiled.

Both Great Britain and the United States have grown immensely in resources and power since they sheathed the sword a century ago. They are easily the two most influential nations on the globe, and if they will but stand together and co-operate, they can in the future largely shape the destinies of the world. And why should they not do this? They are knit together by many ties that ought forever to keep their relations friendly and close. They have a common language, a common literature, a common religion, and the same blood courses in the veins of the controlling elements of their populations. So, let them work together, not for their own selfish interests, but to civilize, Christianize, and lift upward toward the light all the peoples of the earth. May the peace that has so long prevailed between our land and the Mother Country never again be broken, and may its coming achievements be such that they will make the proudest triumphs of war pale into insignificance!

A DISCREDITABLE RECORD.

The lynching record of Mississippi and Louisiana for the year 1914 has been summed up, and it one of which we should be heartily ashamed. The figures show that in the former State seven persons were lynched, and eleven in the latter, all of them negroes. In each State only one victim was accused of committing rape. Of the other six lynched in Mississippi, two were for murder, one for a murderous assault, two (one of them a woman) for burning a barn, one for biting off a man's chin, and one for stealing a mule. In Louisiana the other ten victims were charged with murder.

We take the following from the Times-Picayune: "Louisiana can boast of having inaugurated a new system of administering justice via the lynch law, as in the case of a Slidell negro who ran amuck after indulging too freely in bad whiskey, attempting to shoot up the town, and killed a police officer. A rope was tied about the man's neck and the other end attached to the rear axle of an automobile and the throttle opened. Death resulted almost instantly." Nothing, it seems to us, could be more cruel and barbaric than this, unless it is possibly to burn a victim.

Surely these facts ought to make the better people of Louisiana and Mississippi think seriously and arouse them to the importance of rising up and stopping this demoralizing and indefensible lynching evil. The negro is a human being, and if he is accused of a crime, is entitled to a fair trial in the courts of the land. In most of the cases referred to above the unusual provocation incident to rape cannot be pleaded as an excuse. A form of lawlessness so frequent and so grave is a shameful reproach to us as civilized people. There can be no possible justification for it. If our courts are too slow in their operations to mete out the swift justice that seems to be needed in criminal cases that are specially aggravated, we should reform them and remedy this defect. To say that we cannot do this, is to confess that we lack the capacity for intelligent and righteous self-government.

A TIMELY UTTERANCE.

By special permission, we are printing this week a sermon entitled "Tolerance and Intolerance," which is a most suggestive and impressive utterance, and which is well worth reading and thinking over carefully. As we have often had occasion to say in our columns, there are things about which it is quite commendable to be tolerant, and there are others for which it would be traitorous not to contend firmly. We cannot afford to compromise the fundamental teachings of our holy Christianity. Dr. Goodell sets forth this view in a most admirable and convincing manner. Particularly would we call attention to what he has to say about the jealousy and watchfulness of love. We have never been able to understand how any Methodist minister could treat in a careless and indifferent manner the efforts to strip Christ of his divinity and mutilate the Holy Scriptures which testify of him, as if these questions were merely academic and of little importance. Such was certainly not the attitude of St. Paul. When the Galatians were beset by those "who would pervert the gospel of Christ," he wrote to them the ringing words: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

In introducing Dr. Goodell's able sermon, the Editor of the Bible Magazine, made the following statement, which we take pleasure in passing on to our readers:

"If liberty sometimes becomes license, so tolerance overdone may degenerate into mere truckling. Many a person, under the impression that he is showing great liberality of view, is only shouting with the crowd. He is incapable of true independence of will or of a fine indifference to criticism. We are afraid too often that we may be branded as bigots if we rebuke wrong tendencies that have not yet become full-grown evils. We are glad Dr. Goodell has given us a sermon on this theme. There is a very urgent need of preaching of just this sort now. It is time the limitations of Christian thought and conduct were more clearly indicated."

TOLERANCE AND INTOLERANCE.

By Charles L. Goodell, D. D., Pastor St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

(This sermon is reprinted by permission from the January issue of The Bible Magazine, copyright.)

He that is not for me is against me.
—Matthew 12:30.

In matters of church and social life these are days of wide tolerance, of co-operation and federation. We congratulate ourselves that the Churches are getting together, as we say. Recently I was present at a representative meeting of clergymen called in connection with the Tercentenary of New York. Side by side at the head of the table sat a Roman Catholic and a Methodist. Next to the Methodist sat a Baptist and next to the Roman Catholic sat an Episcopalian; next to the Baptist sat another Roman Catholic and next to the Roman Catholic sat a Jewish rabbi. A Dutch Reformed, a Universalist, a Lutheran, and a Presbyterian followed, and so, around the table, Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, orthodox and heterodox sat side by side on terms of happy fellowship and a united purpose for the civic good. With propriety we ask ourselves: Why should it not be so? We say that it is in harmony with the spirit of democracy.

The world feels that the Church has no right to exist simply to perpetuate a ritualistic or theological oddity. The popular attitude is not that any denomination should go out of existence, but that the waste incidental to denominational zeal should cease. We look about and see many things in which we are entirely agreed and can stand shoulder to shoulder. For instance, when we see a fire engine rushing up our streets everybody is conscious of a common danger, and everybody is interested in putting out the fire. We do not ask whether the man who lives in the house is a Jew or Gentile, rich or poor, Protestant or Catholic, agnostic or liberal. If a Christian should refuse to put out a fire because the man who lived there was an agnostic the whole community would feel outraged.

So when nine o'clock in the morning comes the children throng from the doors of our homes as if Browning's Pied Piper were playing upon his pipes. Young men and women, happy-hearted little children, rich and poor, Greek and barbarian, white and black, throng the doors of our public schools. A Protestant may have a Jew for his seatmate or a Jewess for his teacher, but they are all united in meeting a common need.

When we think the matter over we say to ourselves: As the fire bell arouses us to a common danger and all men make response, ought we not, when we see men consumed with the fires of passion and appetite, to unite in doing all that is necessary to put out the fire? Ought we not to co-operate in work against moral and spiritual dangers that menace society as we would unite against fire and flood and epidemic?

In matters of education we are all agreed that certain specialties and hobbies may be taught where people go to specialize, but that the fundamentals of knowledge should be taught to all alike; that with broad tolerance we should unite in these great questions, remembering not our differences but our harmonies.

What is true in regard to these matters of public service has been extended in manifold directions and lays hold of what may be called the fundamental differences of intellectual and spiritual life. If we ought to unite in public service, some are telling us we ought also to unite in private devotion; if we are tolerant in action, we ought to be tolerant in belief. This idea of toleration has been applied in matters of spiritual life until the attitude of many seems to be that a mantle of charity should be cast over all differences of belief and practice.

Once these differences were clearly marked and rigidly maintained. Things were either white or black, but now everything is a dull gray. The truth is not so true as we once thought it was, and error is not so wrong as it once seemed. Good men are not so good as they think they are, and bad men are not so bad as they might be. We are sometimes forced to ask ourselves: Is there any standard to which we may attain? Is there any law of religion and practice, or is it true, as in the time of Israel's wanderings, prophetless and Godless, every man is a law unto himself? "One has only to grow old to become tolerant," is an oft-repeated motto.

One can always be sure of a hearing when he sings the praises of tolerance, but if one were to undertake a thesis in defense of what is sometimes called intolerance he would be likely to divorce himself from the sympathy of his audience. But it is time that we assured ourselves that some things are right and some things are wrong, no matter how tolerant or intolerant men may be; that the moment one becomes tolerant to error and intolerant to the truth he commits moral and intellectual suicide. Nay, more, it is every man's business to know the truth, to pay the price of knowing it, and to stand by it to the happy or bitter end.

There is an intellectual and moral indifference which some call tolerance. One of the leading literateurs in our city was recently asked:

"What do you think about the importance of Sabbath observance?" and he answered:

"I do not think; I sleep. The whole question is one I do not concern myself about in the least. Men may go to church or to the golf links or to the club; I go to bed."

"But you are certainly interested in matters of Biblical criticism and interpretation. As a man of literary parts you must desire to know what scholars are saying about the greatest book in the world."

"Scholars may say what they choose about it. Why should I interest myself in a matter which does not concern me? Let critics quarrel. I am not interested enough to read the book."

"But the Church—you certainly realize its beneficent effect in the community, and the obligations that must rest upon all people who desire to play their part in the moral and spiritual uplift of the community. Do you not feel called upon to attend its services and lend the weight of your influence to its work?"

"I have friends who love the Church, and I have also friends who hate it. So far as I am concerned I agree with them both and let it alone. Let those who love it support it. As for me, it lies out of my sphere."

We do not talk this way with regard to matters of education or concerning scientific truth. In those matters the truth must be defended at any cost. There is an old story of the teacher who, when asked by a country school committee whether he was going to teach that the earth was flat or round, replied that he would teach whichever way the committee desired. Everyone must believe that such a case must be apocryphal. One teacher cannot teach that two times four equal eight, and another that two times four equal six. There must be uniformity. So if one tries to pervert history, there comes a reckoning day. The laws of logic are inexorable and must be observed, and all debate must be conducted in harmony with them.

So in matters which relate to the soul's deepest needs there are great underlying principles which are as inexorable and intolerant as the laws of logic and laws of nature. Any attempt to play fast and loose with them must destroy the power of right thinking and, hence in large measure of right living. If there is one character who stands out in the history of the ages, pure and stainless, charitable and tender, it is He whom Lanier calls "the crystal Christ." There is no if or but in connection with his life. We hail him as the example and the exemplar of truth. Whatever has been said about truth in science and truth in nature, we realize that after all the unparalleled truth is Christ Jesus. He was the most intolerant man of his age—of awful wrath against perversions of the truth. Morrison of Glasgow in one of his books has a discriminating and thrilling chapter on the intolerance of Jesus.

If tolerance of all men's differences was the proper attitude why did he not exercise it? Why did he not seek to unite on a basis of mutual tolerance the Sadducees and the Pharisees? Why did he preach things so definite as to alienate nearly all about him whom he sought to save, and send himself to the death of the cross? His own intolerance was very largely the cause of the reflex intolerance of those who opposed him. If there was anything for which Jesus stood in religion it was for absolute definiteness. He said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you," and "The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." He urged his disciples to stand by him to the bitter end. He said that to agree with him would cause them to lose their friends and would divide their families and send them out into the world as outcasts; that it would bring to them, as it would bring him, suffering and death, and he asked: "Are you able to be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized?"

He prayed that the world might be united, but he was so intolerant as to declare that if it were ever united it must be on the definite platform on which he stood; that any other union would stultify and belie his teaching and life. We sometimes think, or appear to think, that a man's religious convictions are the things that mean least and can be most easily shaded and obliterated. His attitude was that such convictions are the basis of the whole life. We seem to say that one way of looking at God is as good as another, and that none of them really amount to much. But we need to recast our thought in the light of the teaching of Jesus Christ.

He was a wanderer on the face of the earth, forsaken even by his friends, simply because he was intolerant toward all evil, injustice, and sin. Jesus said that he brought that attitude with him from his Father. At the very head of God's commandments is the declaration: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." He would not divide his kingdom with another. He must be loved with the whole heart and soul and strength: Baal and Jehovah cannot be worshiped on the same Olympus. The old prophets had caught that spirit. They very likely seem harsh to us and intolerant, but they were intolerant simply because they were seers. They saw what would happen if Israel took down the barriers, even by a little, which separated her from the idolatries of surrounding nations. The same thing was true in the lives of the apostles. If it had not been true the early Church would have been wrecked on the rocks where other organizations have gone down. The great reformers were intolerant men, and someone has said that in all great personalities there is always that element.

There are spheres where Carlyle's "everlasting No" must have place, and compromise is treachery, while intolerance, so far from being the enemy of love and sympathy and true fellowship, must be the rock on which we stand as Luther stood, or as Athanasius had stood before him, even with the world against him. It is not intolerance of men, it is simply intolerance of evil. Christ could not abide a hypocrite. A sepulcher, fair on the outside and full of dead men's bones, was a type of soul which he could not tolerate. No one was more tolerant than he toward the woman of the scarlet letter and the bleeding heart. No one had such a yearning toward the prodigal. But the same lips that spoke words as tender as the message of a mother to her child also said with scorn: "Woe unto you scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites."

Concerning his supreme place as the Son of God, could anything be more positive than his teaching? He would not divide his throne with another and boldly asserted that he was "the way, the truth, and the life." "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." To the query which is repeated all about us: "Can we not take him as a teacher and not as a Saviour—a good example on the level with great leaders?" He gives an emphatic No. He is in a class by himself. He will not allow another to possess his seat. He is the Son of God, the First and the Last.

What we call his intolerance had its root in three things. First, in his faith. It was because he believed so much, believed it with all the intensity of his nature, that he could not tolerate unbelief. It was the damning sin. "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed" mountains should be removed. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." That sublime trust in his soul could not endure a flaw. To suggest anything contrary to that was to smite him to the heart. How could he be tolerant toward those who should deny the faith which was the substance of his soul? You can live tolerant enough if you do not care for Jesus Christ and have no faith in him. But if he is your Savior you can bear to have no man malign or reject him.

A man's life is of real value to himself and to the world only when he is able to say concerning some vital thing; "I believe." His belief is a conviction, a thing which chains him so that he is not at liberty to wander again in doubt and speculation concerning that great fact. The road to such conviction is a bloody path, but only the man who has trod it has sounded the substance of his soul to know whether it rings true.

* * * These mounts of anguish number how each generation learned
One new word of that grand Credo which in prophet-hearts hath burned
Since the first man stood God-conquered with his face to Heaven upturned.

Second, he was intolerant of ignorance which was wilful, because of his own knowledge. He knew what it meant. Here is a man in his cups, drifting by with the crowd. One man sees him and jokes at his sorry plight, refers laughingly to his appetite, and treats the whole thing as a joke. But a man whose soul is bleeding, who has seen his first-born carried to a drunkard's grave, sees the same man. He is fiercely intolerant of any man who will tempt him. His eyes fairly blaze as he sees some emissary waiting at the door of a saloon to drag the poor fellow down to his ruin. Have you seen the blaze of indignation in the eyes of Jerry McAuley or Sam Hadley when they faced a man on Water Street or on the Bowery who was trying to lead one of their "boys" to destruction? They knew what such a temptation meant and the awful catastrophe that might lie at the end of it.

That poor woman who turns about to look at the staggering boy sees in his face a likeness of him to whom she gave herself in the days of her beauty and pride. She remembers how her heart was overwhelmed and her life blasted. Do you expect her to treat this as a little thing and be tolerant of the methods and opinions which make such things possible and common sights on the streets of our city? Any man who knows the results of evil thoughts or evil living is intolerant because of the curse that is in them. There are men who are tolerant because of their ignorance, but Christ and all good men are intolerant because they know.

Third, nothing makes men and women so intolerant of evil as love. So long as I am indifferent to my neighbor he can think as he chooses and act as he chooses, but when I really care for him and I see that his feet take hold on death I cannot be in the least degree tolerant to those forces which will work his destruction. You were greatly troubled in earlier days because of your mother's solicitude. It annoyed you. "Will you let me live my life? Do not interfere with me. Do not stand guard over me. Let me find out for myself." But your mother said: "No, my son," or "my daughter," "your name is fairly written on my heart. Anything that hurts you hurts me. Anything that limits and vitiates your life is poison and death to my soul. How can I bear it, how can I endure to see things which will ruin the object of my love taken to his heart—a viper to be warmed to his death?"

There are men and women who seem narrow, but at least they believe something, at least they speak out of a personal knowledge of evil. In their denunciations they are not indifferent to others, but filled with a profound love for their fellow men. The world to-day is dying for lack of conviction, for lack of great enthusiasms which move the soul upward to God. Better the narrowest intolerance which proclaims bitter hatred of that which ruins the soul for time and eternity, than a tolerance so broad as to seek to give God and the devil a room on the same floor and entertain them on equal terms. "He that is not with me is against me" is the ringing challenge of Jesus Christ.

Why should we tolerate those evils which will sap our strength? Why should we complain of the yearning faith and knowledge and love which long to see us stand at any cost of sacrifice with those who keep their tryst with Jesus Christ? I plead for a tolerance which sees the best in any man, which says to those who differ in form and phrase: "If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand;" but I also plead for a faith vital enough to be intolerant of indifference, for a knowledge that will make evil hated, for a love that will not tolerate anything which wounds our Lover or puts him to an open shame.

PALMETTO LETTER.

"Dr. Wiley says he wants to see you in the office at once." This message was delivered by a student passing to his room. This was ominous to a boy who had but recently entered college. "I'm sorry for you, Sam," said one of the boys, without looking up from his Cicero, as though to be called to the President's office was a sure sign of trouble.

When I reached Dr. Wiley's office he told me that he had just received a letter from Abingdon, telling him that the pastor was sick, and asking him to either come himself or send some one to preach for the Methodists on Sunday. He wanted me to go and fill the appointment. It was Saturday and there was little time to prepare for such a congregation as one had to face there. But I went.

I had just entered the pulpit Sunday morning, and taken my seat, when the young ladies from Martha Washington College entered the Church, a long line of them, filling one whole side of the building. At their head was a slender, trim, erect young man, with a dignity and refinement, and an intelligence and kindliness in his countenance that impressed me. After seeing the young ladies seated, he took his seat right in front of the pulpit. Near him sat Dr. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, who had already met me with a brotherly greeting. How I preached I do not remember. A young preacher, especially one as fresh as I was, is mightily embarrassed under such circumstances. But that bright-eyed young man seemed to drink in everything I said. Such attention as he gave is an unconscious inspiration, a secret spur to the thought of a serious preacher, and imparts a glow to his utterance. When the service ended, Dr. Cunnyngham introduced me to "Major" R. W. Jones, the President of Martha Washington College.

That was the beginning of a friendship that was an inspiration to me as long as Major Jones was alive, and is now one of the golden memories of my life since he has gone. Soon after that I was put in charge of the church in Abingdon, as a supply in the place of the pastor whose health had failed, and thus became the Major's pastor. He proved to be a wise counselor as well as a most congenial friend. His house was ever afterward my home, and all his family felt like relatives. I knew all the boys from their babyhood up; and the sweet little girl that came to the home, set like a radiant gem in a circle of gold. I fell in love with his teacher of vocal music, and won her through the kindly encouragement of the Major and Mrs. Jones, for she was as one of the family. I owe largely to Major and Mrs. Jones all the nameless wealth her love brought to my life. When after a few months at Emory and Henry College I was elected Chaplain of the University of Virginia, Major Jones used his influence in my behalf, and upon reaching the University, I found that he was very highly esteemed by the Faculty. He had taken the Master's degree in two years, which was an unusual feat, for the course was as steep as the Matterhorn. When, some years after, the Major was thought of for the Presidency of the great industrial Institute at Columbus, Miss., I had an opportunity, in a small way, to return his kindness by enthusiastically advocating his selection for that place.

You notice I call him "Major" Jones. Well, that is because that was his highest title. He won it by four years of arduous service in the Army of Northern Virginia. He was "M. A." and "LL. D.," and so on, and worthy of all these academic honors; but "Major" Jones was his original and noblest distinction. He followed Lee to Appomattox. I used to love to talk with him about his army experiences. I once asked him what he lived on from Petersburg to Appomattox. Have you ever been over the Norfolk and Western from Lynchburg to the sea? We were in Atkins' room once, Bishop Atkins he is now, but then he was "Jim," the tall, graceful, dark haired student, who even then had the poise, the deliberation, the steady nerve of the born leader; Tom Holloman was there, and a more mischievous imp never wore breeches or pranced across a college campus; Halsey Werlein was there, with his polished manners and lordly looks, clad in dialectic armor cap-a-pie. They were teasing me about my love affair with the Nightingale of the Appomattox, who had recently gone to her home in Petersburg from Martha Washington. Atkins said he had to hold his nose all the way from Lynchburg to Norfolk, because the land was so poor that there was more fertilizer than dirt on the fields, and he was sure the roasting ears had the flavor of guano! He was used to the rich valleys of Southwest Virginia. In that he had nothing over me, for I was from the Mississippi Delta. He did claim, however—think of it, Meek—that all of that rich land that you grow such crops on, was washed down there from the mountains of Virginia and East Tennessee, and clinched his argument by quoting Napoleon's saying that Belgium was French soil and ought to belong to France! When I spoke to my sweetheart about the matter, she said the railroad followed the ridge, and that "just beyond the horizon the land was very rich. Just beyond the horizon! How many things lie just beyond the horizon.

In answer to my question as to what he lived on from Petersburg to Appomattox, Major Jones said he left Petersburg with an empty haversack, but expected to get rations at Amelia Court House. That expectation, and the joy of being out of the trenches, and on the road with Lee again, kept him up. But when they reached Amelia there were no rations. By a dreadful mistake the train that brought the rations had been ordered on to Richmond before Lee's column arrived. Major had a brother with Fitz Lee's cavalry. He was fortunate in meeting his brother at Amelia, and he gave him one ear of corn—old corn of course—and a pocket full of dried apples. He divided the ear of corn with a comrade and was so ravenously hungry that he ate all his corn and apples at once, and that was all he had till he reached Farmville. He chewed the leaves and twigs of the young sassafras bushes in the fields, and in passing through a woods got some acorns. And yet, Meek, those lines, almost staggering with weakness from hunger, at the word of command stiffened into rigid columns from whose flaming front Grant's bravest men recoiled. Honors won in "the focal and foremost fire" of trials like that are real and fadeless. I call him "Major," the hero's title.

And now he has gone to "where beyond these voices there is peace." I knew he was getting old and had been feeble for some time past, but the tidings of his death struck me with a shock. The paper fell from my hand, the tears came to my eyes, a tender hand was on my head and a loving voice said, "I must not let you have the papers if they affect you that way." But so many have gone, Meek. Dr. Palmore, Pearce of Kentucky, Lovejoy of Georgia, and now Major Jones! And none nobler than the last. You do well to place him among the great expositors of the South, by the side of Garland and Carlisle and Francis H. Smith. He was a nobleman by nature and grace made him a Christian gentleman, the highest type of man.

MR. LAWRENCE'S FURTHER STATEMENT.

After reprinting in the Grenada Sentinel of January 1 his first editorial criticising Bishop Waterhouse and our editorial in the Advocate of December 24 calling for the specifications and witnesses to sustain his allegations, Mr. O. P. Lawrence, of Grenada, made in his paper last week the following reply, which we permit him to let the public see:

"Whatever remorse or regret we MIGHT have had, about our reference to Bishop Waterhouse is more than compensated for by being referred to by so able and standing a man as Dr. Meek, as 'a worthy and useful layman.' We do not feel that it is incumbent upon us to make any further statement about this matter, but inasmuch as Dr. Meek seems to be so seriously concerned about our very brief editorial, and because of the eminent place which he occupies, we shall at least endeavor to satisfy him, but shall undertake to do so in our own way, and shall use the columns of our own paper for that purpose. In the first place, we demur to Dr. Meek's statement that the Bishop has been either assailed or attacked,' and we wish also to relieve his mind of the suspicion that there are any 'persons standing in the background that are responsible' for what he choses to term an 'attack,' and we further desire to state, with all possible emphasis, that there is no Methodist minister or college president residing in Grenada upon whose statements we based our comment. We are equally as positive that those whom we heard discuss the Bishop at Starkville scarcely dreamed that any newspaper comment would be made upon their remarks.

"We did not have the privilege or the pleasure of attending the Starkville Conference, hence are unable to speak personally about anything that took place there. Our editorial summarized what we heard three Methodist ministers say at one time and these are not all who gave similar impressions. These brethren are men of mature years and we believed that they felt what they expressed. We knew that they were in no attitude to register their views. If they were correct, we felt that something should be said, and, being in a position entirely without official connection with the Conference, we penned what we did as a matter of duty to the great Church to which we have the privilege and the honor to belong, and because it always affords us no little degree of pleasure to puncture the epidermis of those who vaunt their superiority. If there were others who saw the Bishop differently, all the better for him and we are glad of it. The angle of view has much to do with mental impressions. We do not know Bishop Waterhouse personally and it would be a source of extreme satisfaction to us to know that our brethren who thought they saw any arrogancy in him were just mistaken. We are a loyal Methodist and far be it from our purpose to do anything that would hinder the work or the progress of our great Church.

"We most respectfully suggest to Dr. Meek that we have not 'allowed' ourselves to be led into making any 'charge.' We have made it a rule to be careful about our editorial utterances and to be sure of the proof for the basis of our statements.

"We trust that this will satisfy Brother Meek and that he will at least concede that our purpose was good.

"We based our editorial on the statements of good men, but the greater the number that assert that those who saw anything but the actions of a great and lovable Bishop in Bishop Waterhouse were mistaken, the more pleasing will it be to us."

By The Editor.

Brother Lawrence's statement does not help his cause in the least. On the contrary, it is made up of a jumble of contradictions. We desire, in discussing it, to call attention specifically to the following points:

1. He affirms that Bishop Waterhouse has not been "assailed" or "attacked," and that "no charge" has been made against him. Yet he knows perfectly well that in his first editorial he declared that "from what he had learned from several sources," the Bishop had at times been almost coarse in his arrogance." Then with the weak quallfication, "if this be true," which does not fit in very well with his preceding affirmation, he proceeded to say, "the distinguished divine needs to see himself as others see him, to get down from his stilted eminence and shed a little plumage." If this is not "a charge" of exhibiting a wrong spirit and of improper behavior, then what is it? Rev. W. W. Woollard, presiding elder of the Columbus District, who is a man of judicial temperament and who is given to weighing carefully his words, in a letter published in the Grenada Sentinel of January 1, emphatically characterized the aspersions which Brother Lawrence caught up and published to the world as "slander." Our brother's present effort to minify the significance of what he at first said contrasts very strikingly with the bravado with which he hung out the challenge, if this be "lese-majeste, let it be made the most of." His response, when asked to make good his accusations, has not at all measured up to his flamboyant manifesto.

2. Brother Lawrence speaks of our "suspicions that there are persons in the background who were responsible for this attack." We will state that we have never had any SUSPICIONS that there were guilty persons in the background"—we KNEW that if he had stated the truth that such was the case. Did he not declare that his information was from "several sources." And who, pray, but "persons" can tell or write of the proceedings of Annual Conferences? And is not the man who starts a defamatory statement "responsible" for the damaging effects that follow as a result of others repeating it? Our brother himself states that his editorial summarized what he heard some of these men say.' So, according to his own admission, as clear as language can make it, there are persons under cover who, whether they intended to incite it or not, are primarily responsible for this attack, and no sort of evasion can make it otherwise. It is a queer kind of performance that our brother is attempting to pull off, in first trying to spread himself out and shelter these men, while at the same time endeavoring to hide behind them as a means of protecting himself.

3. In our former discussion of this outrage we pointed the finger of suspicion at no particular man, or group of men, anywhere. We did not know who was responsible for this shameful misrepresentation of a true and worthy minister, and we do not know now. Far be it from us by any public utterance of ours, without definite information, to make any man, preacher or layman, "a suspect" in a transaction so unworthy and despicable as this. Brother Lawrence does not help the case of these defamers by declaring that they did not expect their utterances to appear in a newspaper. A man has no right to make hurtful statements behind a brother's back that he would not make in his presence, or to whisper defamations in private conversation from which he must be sheltered if they happen to become known. To see such a flimsy defense set up for Christian ministers is positively pitiful.

4. In the course of his statement, Brother Lawrence says: "These brethren (his "sources of information") were mature men and we believed that they felt what they expressed. We knew that they were in no attitude to register their views. If they were correct, we felt that something should be said, and, being * * * entirely without official connection with the Conference, we penned what we did as a matter of duty to the great Church to which we have the privilege and honor to belong, and because it always affords us no little degree of pleasure to puncture the epidermis of those who vaunt their superiority." Except for one thing this assumed knightly, chivalric spirit of our brother might possibly win him some favor, and that is, he should first be certain that those whose cause we would espouse are CORRECT in their representations—should verify his facts beforehand, and not take the chance of defaming persons who may be innocent and wait until afterwards to see if his aspersions are true. Brother Lawrence lives in a town in which there resided last year three reputable Methodist ministers, men of good judgment and high standing: before taking a fling at Bishop Waterhouse, why did he not first ask them about his administration? And we should like to ask our brother, if as a matter of fact, he did not interrogate them, and if they did not commend the Bishop? If so, why did he prefer to publish an evil rather than a good report? To form his opinion from a promiscuous chance conversation rather than from the calm assurances of his neighbors and his friends? If there is anything commendable in such a course of procedure we fail to see it. On the contrary, it seems to us to be wholly beyond the pale of excuse or defense.

5. Note the following sentence in Brother Lawrence's utterance: "We have made it a rule to be careful about our editorial utterances and to be sure of the proof for the basis of our statements." What does our brother mean by this? Does he mean that he is sure that the things he picked up and printed about Bishop Waterhouse are true? Let him plainly answer whether he meant to make such an affirmation, and if he did this statement will be given further attention. Or perhaps we may as well say to him now, that whatever may be "his rule," he has in this instance gone off half-cocked and printed aspersions which he cannot prove, and the bases of which, if he will write them down specifically, we haven't a doubt that we can show by overwhelming testimony to be utterly false.

6. Brother Lawrence's effort to treat this question as if it were a merely academic one about which every man is privileged to have his own opinion will not avail either for him or the hidden traducers standing behind him. He did not represent in his editorial that he was merely voicing the "opinions" of three or four men, but the whole tenor of his utterance was to the effect that the public might accept it and rely upon it. The issue which he has unfortunately raised is not one of OPINION—it is one of FACT. There must be in every instance where coarseness and arrogance exist certain acts and utterances which go to constitute them, and we defy Brother Lawrence and those for whom he has essayed to speak to name one thing that the Bishop did or to cite one word that he uttered that will support their accusations. Unless they do this, the public will have a right to set them down as calumniators, who have made hurtful statements concerning an irreproachable Christian minister which are not true, and which they have not the courage even to try to sustain.

7. Brother Lawrence says that he hopes that we will "at least concede that his purpose was good," and he claims to find comfort in the fact that we pronounced him "a worthy and useful layman." We have known him only casually, and such, we did state, had been our past estimate of him. But this occurrence has revealed him in a new and surprising light. We would not go so far as wholly to impeach his Christian experience and we prefer not to enter the realm of motive, which we consider a dangerous one for the finite mind. But we do not hesitate to say that in this instance he has, without provocation, gravely wronged a true and noble Christian minister and that his conduct in doing this has been highly reprehensible; that, in our opinion, he has fallen below the standard of reputable journalism and that which should govern every high-minded man in his dealings with his fellow-men. We do not believe that he can find among those who attended the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, with all the disappointments necessarily incident to assigning more than 150 preachers to their fields of labor, a half dozen men who will give the least semblance of an endorsement to the vicious aspersions which he has scattered over the State of Mississippi. If he thinks that he can do so, let him make the attempt and adduce their names.

7. In his opening sentences, our brother appears to evince some surprise that we should have taken his defamatory editorial seriously and have called for the specifications and witnesses at his hands. Did he mean it as a joke? Does he think it is a trivial thing to misrepresent and prejudice the public against a beloved and honored chief pastor of his Church in a State in which he is largely a stranger to the masses of the people, and thus impair his usefulness in a part of the field in which he must work for at least the next few months? It is never a light and insignificant matter wantonly to damage the reputation of any good man. If we were to come to Mississippi and catch up the aspersions of three or four men, to the effect that in his administration of affairs as the Secretary of the Board of Trust of our State educational institutions, Brother Lawrence had been almost coarse in his arrogance, and needed to see himself as others see him, and to get down from his stilted eminence and shed a little plumage, and were to return home and publish these accusations in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, we dare say that he would be in high dudgeon about it. And if, when he asked us for the specifications in the case and the names of our informants, we were to beat about the bush as he has done and not cite a single word, or act, or witness to justify our charge, we venture the assertion that he would characterize our conduct much more severely than we have characterized his in this instance.

8. Brother Lawrence's statement that the more the brethren testify to the exemplary spirit and conduct of Bishop Waterhouse the more he will be pleased, does not comport very well with the quickness with which he caught up and published ugly aspersions of him, when he might have had overwhelming testimonials to the contrary if he had only made a little inquiry. And it is noticeable that in his last statement he does not make the least acknowledgment of the wrong that he has done the Bishop or express the slightest regret for his culpable action.

When a man places in public print a statement damaging to another, if it is challenged, justice and right require that he shall do one of three things: (1) adduce the proof to sustain it; (2) or give some authority who may be held accountable; (3) or confess that he erred and repair as far as he can the injury resulting from his action. No one of these things up to the present has been done by Brother Lawrence. Will he yet measure up to this standard of justice and right, or will he continue to shift and evade? This is the issue which now squarely confronts him.

The total number of deaths in New Orleans last year was 7417, against 7088 in 1913. Of these 4356 were whites and 3061 were negroes. These figures include 875 non-resident persons. Embracing these, the death rate per thousand was 19.88; excluding them, it was 17.54. For all whites it was 16.01; for whites, leaving out non-residents, it was 14.31. For resident negroes the rate was 26.22; for all negroes, it was 30.3, against 29.95 in 1913. The following figures show how many people died from some of the leading diseases: scarlet fever, 2; diphtheria and corup, 112; smallpox, 0; measles, 8; malaria, 32; tuberculosis, 1077; heart disease and diseases of the arteries, 1368; infants under two years of age (diarrhoea and enteritis), 292—a decrease of 68 over the 1913 record; Bright's disease, 609; acute nephritis, 80; suicide, 72—an increase of 18 over last year. Of the total number of deaths in the city from various causes, 1012 were of persons over 70 years of age. The birth record has not yet been summed up, but Statistician Franke estimates that it will be about 7900.

AT HOME.

There is no place like "home, sweet home," for a tired evangelist, after having worked eleven months in revivals. I have been thinking, reading, and praying, trying to get ready to reap a great harvest for my Lord's kingdom. I have read the Gospel of St. John, and have read carefully Practical Studies in the Fourth Gospel, by Bishop Candler. I find that the Bishop has many of the best thoughts of his life in these two volumes. I am so glad that he discussed so forcibly and learnedly the Deity of Jesus Christ. I find that some of the preachers are in doubt about Christ's divinity, and are weak on the doctrine of the atonement. No one can read Bishop Candler without coming to have a strong conviction of the divinity of Christ. I would advise all of the young preachers to study carefully these books, and it would not hurt the old preachers to do the same.

I want my friends to know that I am not only an evangelist, but that I am also a steward in the Iuka Methodist Church. Since I have been here we have been able to raise the preacher's salary $300, and we are not satisfied yet. In the face of these hard times, we thought that it would be helpful to our faith to raise our pastor's salary $100 this year. We think that we have the best church and one of the strongest preachers in the Conference. Brother Moss is a great power in the pulpit, and our people are delighted to have him as their pastor for another year.

I attended last week the Conference on Evangelism held at Nashville, Tenn. It was a great meeting and I am sure that great good will come out of this conference. We had some great speeches. Evangelism and its relation to the Church were thoroughly discussed. Both pastors and evangelists were very candid in discussing the various questions pertaining to evangelism, but in the very best spirit, and nothing was said or done to mar the pleasure of any one.

Dr. J. M. Moore is a man of fine Christian spirit, and if given time, I believe that he will solve this evangelistic problem to the satisfaction of all. We came home with a full determination to make greater efforts for the salvation of souls. We realize that the Church has but one mission and that that is, to help Jesus Christ save this old world.

God has permitted me to see nearly forty thousand souls saved in the last twenty years, unworthy as I have been. Since I saw the statement in the New Orleans Advocate, that there was a decrease of one hundred and fifty in our membership during the year 1914, and read Brother Lagrone's ringing appeal for greater efforts on the part of the pastors to have revivals throughout the Conference, I have felt as if I would like to join forces with them to have great meetings in every charge. A great revival would help solve the educational problem, the missionary problem, the pastors' salaries and every other problem confronting the Church.

The Lord bless you, Brother Meek, and make your able paper a great factor in bringing about the spiritual blessings that we so much need.

Yours fraternally,

W. M. McINTOSH.

MID-YEAR MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A mid-year meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference will be held at Hattlesburg, Jan. 20-21, at which plans for the year will be made. The first service will be held on the night of the 20th inst. Our Missionary Educational Secretary, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, will be present. Every member of the Board is expected to be in attendance, and the presiding elders, Conference lay leader, and Sunday school field agent are earnestly requested to meet with us. The pastors who desire to attend are requested to notify Rev. C. W. Crisler a few days in advance, and entertainment will be provided.

COMMISSIONERS FOR CENTENARY COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference the Board of Education recommended and the Conference adopted the following:

"The Board requests the Bishop to appoint a Commissioner of Education for each district to help in the campaign for Centenary College."

Pursuant to this action I have appointed the following Commissioners:

Alexandria District.....George E. Cameron
Baton Rouge District.....C. A. Battle
Lafayette District.....A. S. Lutz
Monroe District.....A. I. Townsley
New Orleans District.....W. W. Drake
Ruston District.....J. M. Henry
Shreveport District.....George S. Sexton

Centenary College is of vital importance to the Methodism of Louisiana, and I trust the brethren named will prosecute the campaign with all zeal and that the people will respond generously and promptly to their appeals.

WARREN A. CANDLER.

PRESIDING ELDERS' ADDRESS.

To the Pastors, Officers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the bounds of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

Dear Brethren: We, the presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference in our Council meeting held at Hattiesburg on Dec. 31, 1914, agreed upon certain general policies for the prosecution of the work of the Church for the year 1915. In this we acted upon the advice and general direction of Bishop Collins Denny, president of our Conference.

We are sure that loyalty to the institutions of our Church is the imperative need of the day. Our system of government is connectional, and loyalty to that system must be maintained by our preachers and laymen; otherwise we will suffer hurt at a vital point.

We view with alarm every expression of disloyalty in sentiment or practice. We are under law. All who would be true to their vows must hold themselves subject to our laws. We most earnestly urge all of our preachers and laymen to withhold their presence and support from all independent meetings and to refuse to allow unauthorized preachers to use our property of any kind for holding meetings not under the direction and control of the constituted authority of the Church. We must protect our Church from all invasions on the part of irresponsible persons and the divisive and factional effects of such work.

We cannot be otherwise than painfully apprehensive of very hurtful effects from the use of independent song books. In some of our churches not a copy of the Methodist Hymnal or Little Hymn Book can be found. We shall look with disapproval upon the continuation of such a state of affairs.

We desire to call your attention to the need of an immediate and earnest effort to increase the circulation of our church periodicals, especially the General organ, the Conference organ, and the Missionary Voice. We believe that no church has a paper of greater worth than our Nashville Christian Advocate. It should have a wide circulation throughout our Conference. Our Conference organ is equal to the best and should be placed in every home in our bounds. We urge that you make a house-to-house canvass during the months of January and February with this definite end in view. Relief must be given to the publisher, or the interests of our Advocate will materially suffer. We call upon you as the legitimate agents of this most worthy paper to see to it that one thousand new subscriptions are secured within the next sixty days.

We note with regret the fact that the Sunday school enrollment is much smaller than that of the church membership. This should appeal to us to change our method of dealing with this important work of the Church. Our Sunday School Board has charge of the Sunday school work of the Conference. This Board will need every dollar that you can contribute to carry on its work. The Board will gladly furnish all necessary help to the pastors in the way of organizing schools and giving instruction in Sunday school methods. It was Bishop Denny's judgment as well as ours that we should devote all legitimate means to the fostering and developing of the work of our own Sunday School Board.

We call special attention to the duty of the pastor in the matter of administering the Lord's Supper and holding Church conferences as directed by the Discipline. We insist upon this as essential to the maintenance of our integrity to the institutions of the Church.

We are convinced of the necessity of our people patronizing our own schools, and we admonish you to call their attention to the advantages these institutions offer. As Methodists, we cannot afford to lack in loyalty to Christian education as fostered and maintained by us in every grade of school work from the lowest to the highest. Most surely do the young men who are preparing for the ministry need to come in touch with the educators of the Church for inspiration and instruction. We recognize the superior advantages of our own schools and urge the importance of influencing our young men and women to attend them. It is there that we may expect the best expression of Methodist life and service. By your loyal support of these institutions, we will have a larger school constituency and much better facilities for the training in mind and heart of our boys and girls.

We would commend to your earnest consideration every detail of this message, and beg your hearty co-operation in bringing to pass the fullest measure of success in all our work during the year.

Praying God's richest blessings upon all of you in every good word and work, and with Christian love for all, we are your co-laborers,

CONCERNING TEMPERANCE.

(The Situation Viewed and Reviewed by a Woman.)

This is said to be a "Government of the people, for the people, by the people," fixing all responsibility for success or failure on the "people."

Who are the people? We are the people. The fact that when the Hobson Resolution came before US for settlement, six Representatives from Mississippi, voted for it, one against it, and one not at all, while the reverse was true of Louisiana, six voting against it, one for it, and one not at all, may to the casual observer seem but a strange coincidence, but when we remember that this vote was the expression of "the people" of these two States it should cause us to think, and to think, should mean to act.

With all due respect for the individuality of these gentlemen from Louisiana, who represent us, I venture to say that if they had been representing the people of any one of the fourteen dry States, the majority of them would have voted dry; instead of having to define their position by hiding behind the threadbare argument of "State's Rights." I am personally acquainted with one of them, and admire greatly his many good qualities, and did I not know him to be a man of extraordinary intelligence, I might consider him only "honestly mistaken."

If this, then, is the situation, our work should be to educate the people so that their Representatives will give us what THEY (the people) want. Surely, no one would be so foolish as to think these men voted their own sentiments, regardless of the will of those who put them in office.

Occasionally we of Louisiana find ourselves rejoicing over some temperance measure that we have been able to push or pull through, but the rejoicing is soon turned into mourning, as in the case of our "Blind-Tiger" Law.

It would melt a heart of stone to hear Brother Turner tell of his tribulations and trials at Baton Rouge, and how he fought against "spiritual wickedness in high places," and what has it amounted to? "Only this and nothing more," according to Justice O'Neil, that the keeping of any quantity of liquor is not an offense, but the keeping of some article of merchandise with the liquor, constitutes the offense.

For about twenty years we have had a law forbidding the sale of tobacco to minors, but there is a clause in it that renders it worthless. The "Near-beer" Law is near enough a fraud to render it perfectly harmless. If it had not been, it would never have been passed by the last Legislature. The majority of the men who made up that crowd were there to represent people whose sentiments they voiced by their votes. If we want anything worth having, we must get it direct from the people. Only one Representative in a thousand has the moral courage to rise above the people he represents.

Now if this great commonwealth has been misrepresented at Washington on this question of "National Constitutional Prohibition," let us rise up in our might and publish the fact to the world, and see to it that we are fairly represented "next time." But if, on the other hand, they have voiced the sentiments of the majority of our citizens, let us not blame them, but each bear his or her own burden and acknowledge, "I have sinned."

GOD KNOWS BEST.

I once helped to nurse a little girl who had broken a limb. In order to secure the best results when the bones knit together, the doctor had tied a weight to the little foot and let it hang down by the side of the bed. Oh! that weight was so hard to bear and the child often cried and begged us to remove it or to hold it in our hand and rest her, if only for a little while. But we dared not do it. The doctor knew what was best for her. Before very long the cure was perfect and the weight was removed.

How often does the "Great Physician" allow us to carry weights on our hearts that almost crush the lives out of us. How hard they are to bear! And how we fret and murmur and cannot understand the love that could remove them! And yet He leaves them there. How hard it is to trust and wait! But our Father who knows each heart-pang and notes each tear is leading us in "the way of the cross, for the way of the cross leads home."

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

No matter where you are, the Bell Telephone is the center of a large talking circle.

You can travel the length and breadth of the country and never be beyond the reach of the Bell Telephone.

Wherever you are, it links you with your home and business. You may be a thousand miles from home, yet in a few minutes you may hear the voice of friends or business associates.

And wherever you go it is the same. Always there is the same efficient service of the Universal Bell Telephone system linking you with those you have left behind.

JOSEPH'S MISTAKE.

(A True Story By M. Elliott.)

Little Joseph Walla had never attended a church service, or even been inside a church building, until the Sabbath I am going to tell you about now, for what Joseph did at church that first Sabbath is a really true story.

Little Joseph had always lived and journeyed from place to place in a large covered wagon. Most people considered Joseph and his parents gypsies, because they resembled them in looks—all three were very dark. They traveled here and there just like gypsies, only they never begged. Instead, they had many things to sell.

The back part of the covered wagon was a little store. There one could buy calico, gingham, notions, cooking utensils, fine linen, and cheap jewelry.

If Joseph had ever had another home, he could not remember it. At night, when other little boys and girls were soundly sleeping in their little white beds, Joseph slept in a tent or a hammock. He loved to watch the stars, and would fall asleep counting them. His mother did not sing him to sleep, instead he had a little band to give him music—the crickets and the katydids. In the morning the noisy birds awoke him. He knew them all by name, also the trees and shrubs.

But one day Joseph's father said:

"I have made enough money now to buy a little plot of ground, and I will build a house, and we will live there and journey no more."

So he sold the only home Joseph had ever known, and also George and Dick, the faithful horses. How Joseph did cry when he saw the stranger lead them away! But the man promised to treat them well, so this comforted Joseph greatly.

While the new home was being built, the Walla's kept house in a tent. Mr. Walla worked during the day in a shoe factory, and at night built his house. So it was a long time before it was completed. Finally it was ready for use, and Joseph thought it a most wonderful place—so large and spacious. (It had three rooms.) But you must not forget his home had been a covered wagon.

Soon some kind neighbors came to call on Mrs. Walla. They all invited her to attend their church. Joseph prized very highly the little pieces of white cardboard they gave his mother, and wished more people would come, so he would have more little cards. But it was not until the minister had called on them that Mrs. Walla decided to attend church. Mr. Walla said he would go some other time.

Many years previous, Mrs. Walla had gone to church, but she had almost forgotten about it. So there was not much to tell Joseph, in answer to his many questions, only that he must be very quiet.

Little Joseph looked very odd in the large congregation, in comparison with the other children. He wore the only kind of garments his mother had for him to wear—bib over-alls. He never saw that, thus attired, he was creating a sensation, especially among the children, so interested was he in the things about him—the beautiful music, the pretty chandeliers, with their many globes. He behaved splendidly, far better than some older boys and girls whose privilege it had been to attend church many times.

The time came for the offering to be taken. Joseph watched the plates pass the people, but, being such a little fellow, he could not see what took place. Finally they came to Mrs. Walla, who had not remembered that part of the service, so she had no money to give. As the plate hurriedly passed Joseph, he reached out and grabbed a handful of silver from the plate.

Mrs. Walla was very much shocked, and tried to open his tightly-closed fist, to take the money from him, but Joseph refused to part with his money. The gentleman who had the plate, noting the little "gypsy" lad, whispered something to the mother, and moved on.

You should have seen Joseph! His beautiful black eyes fairly snapped. He had not done anything wrong; had he not seen everybody but his mother do something to the plate?

After the services, Mrs. Walla, after much argument and dire threats, succeeded in getting the money from him. Some one gave him a pretty card and a Sabbath school paper to console him, and Joseph went home happy.

After that, every Sabbath, Joseph accompanied his parents to church, for Mr. Walla decided to go also. And, in time, Joseph put money in the collection plate himself, just like other folks. And on the day he was five years old, he stood on a chair, so everybody could see him, and slowly dropped five bright, shiny pennies in the Sabbath school birthday-box—his thank-offering that he was well and happy, and that he was growing big, like father.—The Presbyterian.

BORROWED SUNSHINE.

"You don't get much sunshine in here, do you?" said a gentle old lady as we entered the elevator at the back of the big department store.

"Only what folks like you bring in, ma'am," answered the elevator man with instinctive courtesy. "Some folks carry enough sunshine 'round with 'em to light others up a bit."

How many people, I thought, as I stepped out a moment later, are dependent on others for all the sunshine they get in their lives, and how few of us carry enough extra sunshine around with us to lighten even one dark corner! For all the cheer the passing stranger gets from us we might as well cover our faces with thick crepe veils. And what a lovely mission we are slighting!

Let's form ourselves right here and now into a little league of Sunshine Carriers, unlimited, even if the league consists of only one member.

Let us smile and look happy as we go about the streets and into the stores on errands. Maybe we're entrusted with the only rays of sunshine that some people will see all day long.

Let us smile and look happy as we go about our work, too, in school or office or home. Work thrives better in the sunshine just as plants do, and maybe our smiles will make our fellow workers happier in their tasks—our own will go better, anyway, that's sure.

Most of all, let us smile and look happy for our own dear ones when we gather together around the home table in the morning; or step into mother's room or grandmother's just at sundown to tell them how the day has gone; or run out to meet the tired father as he lifts the home latch after a hard day's work. These are the people to whom our sunshine means not just the superficial cheering or the little extra touch of happiness, but the very warmth and heat on which their inner lives depend.—Young People.

THE LITTLE KING WREN.

Do you know, boys and girls, that the little wren is called the king of birds? He's only a little bit of a fellow, no longer than your thumb, and this is how he became king. Once upon a time— oh, ages and ages ago—the birds wanted to have a king of their own, but as each one thought he ought to be king, the eagle talked to them, and said their king ought to be able to fly very high so as to watch over the safety of the other birds. Now the eagle was very strong and cruel, and all the feathered world was afraid of him. So they agreed that there should be a contest and the bird that could fly the highest should be king. This was just what the eagle wanted, because he knew he could fly higher than any of the other birds. So up he went until he seemed very small in the sky. All the birds were just going to hail him as king, when a little, wee wren, who had been hiding in the feathers on the eagle's back, sprang out and flew up still higher, chirping to the rest that he had flown the highest, as they all could see. So, of course, the little wren became the king.—Christian Intelligencer.

A PILLOW FOR JESUS.

Little Robbie had just been presented with a new Testament. He loved his Saviour, so he loved to read his blessed words. One evening he read, for the first time, "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

His heart was touched, and he burst into tears.

"Oh, mamma," he cried, "how I wish I had been there, I would have given him my little pillow!"

Then his mamma told him how he could still give a pillow to Jesus, by giving it to some poor and needy person.

Little reader, do you know that, if you long to make a pillow or do anything for your dear Saviour, you can do it for some poor, needy child of his, and Jesus will regard it just as if done to himself? He has said of such, "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—The Lutheran.

An American Indian was converted. Soon he brought some money to the missionary "to give to Jesus Christ for his work." "That is too much for you to give," said the missionary. "Two dollars too much for white man to give may be," was the answer, "but not too much for Indian; Jesus Christ did so much for Indian."—The Lutheran.

HOW ABOUT THE RENEWALS IN YOUR CHARGE?

Names are being constantly dropped from our mailing list, and the Advocate is pleading in many homes not which it has been finding its way. Will you not make it effort to get the subscribers in your charge to renew before passed? This is a matter of the most urgent importance. Unless our friends will lend us a helping hand at once we may soon have to begin to print the Advocate on cheaper paper and put in less matter. The holidays are now past and this is the best time of the year to work up a club of subscribers. Let us hear from you, brethren.

THE ENEMY AT WORK.

There is a saying that a man once remarked that "every person, even Satan, has some commendable trait." Upon being asked what is commendable in the Devil's make-up, he is quoted as having said, "His industry." This answer was both historical and true. The Bible represents Satan as being tremendously active, as going to and fro in the earth, seeking whom he may devour. And he is as cunning and crafty as he is energetic. Sometimes he appears as an angel of light and sometimes as a roaring lion. We doubt if there is any genuine good thing that he does not endeavor to counterfeit. Masquerading as a religious teacher seems to be one of his favorite ways of working injury in this modern day. There is a profound meaning in that remarkable injunction of St. John, the beloved of the Apostles, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

We are moved to write these lines by an examination of two papers that came into our hands this week. One is the Bible Student's Monthly, a little periodical issued by Pastor Russell, whose pet contribution is that there is no hell. The other is a magnificent larger monthly headed, "The Truth about God and Life," which claims to be published by the "Church of Humanity." It hails from Kansas, and its three leading slogans are: "There Is No God." "Man Has No Soul." "Life Ends Forever at Death."

Two things concerning these publications are well worth noticing: (1) they are thoroughly hostile to the orthodox Christian Church; (2) they are issued in cheap form, so that at a small expense they can be generally circulated among the masses of the people.

Thus while our publishing houses are grinding out fine periodicals, often filled with literary and philosophic speculations and adorned with pictures of heathen art, which the vast body of the people never see, the great Enemy is sowing his tares broadcast over the land and poisoning the minds of thousands. If there was ever a time when we needed to put wholesome literature in the homes of our population it is now—not simply in Methodist homes, but in all homes. The Christian Church must somehow get hold of the masses and influence their morality and way of living and win them for Christ. The issue will be theirs in numerous instances and never will the call for preachers and aggressive work sound more urgent than it does to-day. There is no human being who is not worth saving. Not in the lofty flights of theology and philosophic speculation, but in the every-day walk of service must the Christian win or lose their fight for the salvation of humanity. So, brethren, pray and get into touch with humanity's needy people near you. Warn, exhort, persuade and magnify to them the promises and lead them to the Lord. Do not be of those who are always feeling about the bushes of sense, but be in evangelistic, ever-pressing attitude of entering the borders of Him and "a tree in the midst."

DEATH OF DR. M. C. BLACK.

On Tuesday night, January 5, after the forms of the Advocate had been shut and the Editor had gone to his residence a brief telegram announcing the death of Dr. M. C. Black was received at our office and was inserted in the paper by Brother C. C. Chalmers, the Publisher. Since then a fuller communication has reached us bringing the information that Dr. Black passed away at his home in Meridian, Miss., shortly before midnight on Monday, January 4. He had been in very feeble health for several months and for about four weeks had been confined to his bed. He fully realized that the end was not far off and said to Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder of the Meridian District, a few days before the meeting of the late session of the Mississippi Conference, "I may live on before you get back, but if so, you will know where to find me." He fell into a state of unconsciousness some hours before his death and slipped away with scarcely a struggle. Because of the fact that the congregation of the Central Methodist Church of Meridian is constructing a new house of worship and it was known that a large number of people desired to attend the obsequies, they were held in the First Baptist Church and were conducted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, assisted by Rev. J. B. Jones, Rev. W. B. Hogg, Rev. G. S. Harmon, and Rev. H. A. Gaskin. The interment was made in the Rose Hill Cemetery at Meridian, Miss.

Dr. Black was born in Copiah County, Miss., May 24, 1843. He served in the Confederate Army and was a true and brave soldier. He joined the Mississippi Conference at Meridian in 1871, along with Dr. H. W. Featherston and the now sainted J. J. Smythe, and was in the active ranks for thirty-nine years. Among the charges that he served were Raymond, Madison, Camden, Bolton, Edwards, Natchez, Meridian, Jackson, the Mulberry Street Church of Macon, Ga., and our First Church at Tupelo, Miss. From the fall of 1890 to 1901, he was the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. He took the superannuate relation about four years ago, after which he lived for a time at Tupelo, but later moved to Meridian, where among his former parishioners and many friends he spent his last days. Dr. Black is survived by two sons and two daughters, the sons being Rev. M. M. Black of Canton, Miss., and Mr. Warren F. Black of Birmingham, Ala., and the daughters, Miss Ada Black and Mrs. J. P. Turner.

We will not at this time undertake to write an extended appreciation of this gifted minister and the important service which he rendered the Church. Endowed by nature with a strong and vigorous intellect he improved it by careful reading and study until he was regarded as one of the ablest men in the connection. He was a great preacher, profound, logical, and at times well-nigh overwhelming. Some of his sermons were masterpieces, as for instance his noted discourse on "The Immortality of the Soul," and he was frequently asked to repeat them. Many of the foremost men of Mississippi delighted to wait upon his ministry and were enthusiastic in their commendation of his pulpit efforts. Like Dr. C. K. Marshall, he had a scientific bent of mind, and he revelled in the study of astronomy, geology, and the other natural sciences. He delighted to "hunt," but a fondness after this failed to secure him as great possession of fowls many of the facts and illustrations with which he made clear and impressive the glorious truths of the Holy Scriptures. He was a conspicuous refutation of the old-heard statement that a minister cannot excel both as a preacher and pastor. He was a faithful shepherd who sought with his rod and staff his sheep or lambs. He did not neglect the poor and needy of his congregation, and into the homes where sickness and suffering existed he was sure to come with words of cheer and consolation. We have often heard the fidelity in this respect commented upon by people who had had opportunity to observe his work among them being Bishop Galloway.

As an editor, Dr. Black made a highly creditable record. He did not have the light touch of a paragrapher, but his utterances at all times were solid, cogent and convincing. He never took up a subject without illuminating it, and in him the doctrines and polity of the Church ever had a resourceful and talented defender. He was an author of note, and issued several publications of merit. Among these were: "Christian Womanhood," "Is Man Immortal?" "The Philosophy of Methodism," and "A Centennial Retrospect." He sat in several General Conferences and took high rank as a debater and legislator.

But this energetic toiler has now gone from us, and we shall see him no more until we follow him into the Father's house. But his work upon earth will abide and he will not be soon forgotten. He will take his place in Methodist history in the long and shining list of eminent ministers that the Mississippi Conference has given to the Church Militant and the Church Triumphant—a list that includes such men as Winans, and Drake, and Marshall, and Abbey, and Johnson, and Watkins, and Andrews, and the peerless Charles B. Galloway. Peace be to the ashes of our departed father in Israel, and may the Holy Spirit comfort the stricken loved ones who will so sorely miss him.

FAITH IN CHRIST ESSENTIAL.

Faith in Christ is a far more important factor in the work of the ministry than many realize. Unless one believes with all one's heart that Jesus really lives to fulfill his promises and save men, one's preaching of the Word must be very largely a perfunctory performance. A distrustful minister is apt to be conjuring up all sorts of devices as substitutes for a spiritual appeal to the hearts of men because he lacks confidence in the great truth that the invisible Savior is working with him. The real explanation of why some preachers cannot conduct a revival meeting is found in their unbelief. We must learn to know Christ and live in conscious touch with him if we would be soul-winners. If we are doubters we cannot hide the fact from others. There is an instinct in men that enables them to distinguish between a certain and uncertain note, though they may not express the true sentiments of their hearts. The men who have brought most mightily in the Divine Kingdom in all the ages have been men of great faith.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, in a note to the Editor, states that Dr. H. G. Henderson has made a fine impression on the people of Sardis.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, requests us to state that the district stewards of that district will meet in Lafayette on Thursday, January 28.

Rev. A. W. Hoffpauir, of Covington, La., says: "Things are reviving in this charge. My stewards and I have about finished making an every-member canvass. We were recently given a most delightful pounding."

The work has begun well at Durant, Miss., where Rev. E. Nash Broyles is the gifted young pastor. The stewards have issued an admirable address to the members of the Church, and are planning to pay their preacher monthly. That is the way to do it.

Rev. P. H. Howse requests us to state that his address is 422 West Fourth Street, Hattiesburg, Miss.

Rev. W. N. Dodds, of Verona, Miss., says: "I am much pleased with my new home. This is a delightful charge to serve."

Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Taylor, of Greenville, Miss., arrived in New Orleans on Monday of this week and are guests of the St. Charles Hotel. They will go from here to Pass Christian, Miss., where they will remain for some days.

Rev. J. F. Foster, of Amite, La., was in the city last Tuesday, looking after the work of issuing the Louisiana Conference Journal, which is being printed in the Advocate office. He wore his usual genial smile.

The Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference for 1914 are out in their usual good form. Brother Countiss excels as a Conference Secretary and deserves credit for having brought this annual up to so high a standard.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, of the Winona (Miss.) "diocese," says of the work in his territory: "It is a hard fight just now, but no battle has yet been lost. I expect to do the hardest year's work of my life." This message has the right ring.

Among the out-of-town visitors who attended the Peace Celebration last week were Dr. and Mrs. Dunbar Rowland of Jackson, Miss., and Mrs. A. F. Fox of West Point, Miss. Dr. Rowland favored the Advocate office with a brief call.

We are requested to state that the following are the Executive Committee of the Sunday School Board of the Mississippi Conference: "Rev. H. F. Tolle, Biloxix, Chairman; Rev. W. A. Hayes, Decatur, Secretary; Rev. J. Loyd Decell, Waynesboro, Treasurer.

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, sends us the following notice: "Mr. M. S. Hubbelle, who has been serving as Assistant Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of this State, no longer has any connection with it."

Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Campti, La., writes as follows: "Brother W. A. Ragan, of Clarence, La., was buried last Saturday, January 2. He was a member of our Church and a steward." We regret to be informed of Brother Ragan's death, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. S. E. Galloway, of Pine Valley, Miss., sends us two subscriptions and adds: "We were delightfully surprised by a 'pounding' at the parsonage on the afternoon of December 29. We are grateful for the kindness of such friends, and we shall not soon forget their thoughtful generosity."

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, preached at the Carrollton Avenue Church last Sunday morning and at Louisiana Avenue at night, delivering strong and helpful messages. Brother Holmes has begun his work with a grasp that presages a large measure of success.

Dr. E. H. Rawlings, of the General Board of Missions, is expected to make a speaking tour through the State of Louisiana in the near future. His itinerary is being arranged by Rev. W. W. Holmes, President of the Conference Board of Missions. Dr. Rawlings is a speaker of great force and eloquence.

We have received from Brother H. W. Reese a brief note concerning the work of our church at Booneville, Miss., which will be printed next week. He reports that Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, the new pastor, has made a fine beginning, and he predicts a great year for the Master's cause in that developing field.

Rev. D. R. McDougal, of Kossuth, Miss., writes: "We are just beginning the work of the new year. Our people are loyal and have been 'pounding' us with all kinds of good things to eat. We like it. I feel that we are going to have a good year. I ask the prayers of the readers of the Advocate for the Kossuth charge."

Our good friend, Rev. S. L. Pope, of New Albany, Miss., sends us a neat folder giving his order of services for Sunday, January 10. We note that special attention was called to "Grenada College Day" and the need of circulating the Advocate. Brother Pope is a live wire. He has to be—Sister Pope wouldn't think of letting him be anything else.

Rev. A. W. O'Bryant, of Moscow, Miss., has been hindered in reaching his new charge by illness in his family; but is at last on the ground and is hopeful of a successful year. We regret to know that Sister O'Bryant is still far from well and confined to her bed a large part of the time. We trust that she will soon completely recover.

Rev. C. A. Battle's sermon at Baton Rouge, La., on Sunday morning, January 3, which was on the "Divine Christ," was reported at considerable length in the State Times of that city. The discourse was pronounced a "strong" one and it was heard and appreciated by a fine audience. The Methodists of the Capital City are greatly pleased with Brother and Sister Battle.

From Many, La., under date of January 8, Rev. S. D. Howard writes as follows: "We reached here last Tuesday about noon and were cordially received. My horse, buggy, and household goods have all arrived in good condition. I conducted prayer meeting last night." We expect to hear good things from the Many charge this year under Brother Howard's leadership.

The Methodist ministers of New Orleans had a delightful luncheon together at the Monteleone Hotel last Monday at noon. Good fellowship abounded, and all left feeling better for having seen something of one another. The Editor had two pressing invitations to join the happy company, but, as is usually the case on Mondays and Tuesdays, he was kept too busy in the Advocate office to get away.

We acknowledge the reception from Mrs. Dary L. Dorr, of near Sardis, Miss., of $1 to be sent to the French or Belgian war sufferers. Being of French extraction, naturally she feels the deepest sympathy for the wounded and homeless ones in France. This money was forwarded several days ago to Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer of our General Board of Missions, who will see that it is given the right direction.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, who is magnifying his office as a District Superintendent, kindly sends us the following note: "All the pastors in the Jackson District are in place and the work has started off well. The District Stewards' Meeting on the 5th inst. was well attended. A spirit of harmony and brotherly love prevailed, and we enter upon the duties of the new year with faith in Christ and expecting great success in his name."

Rev. J. M. Carpenter, pastor of Central Church, Columbus, Miss., writes: "The people of my new charge have extended to me a most hearty welcome, and they seem disposed to co-operate with me in my efforts to carry the work forward. So far I have had good congregations, and the Sunday school, Epworth League, and Woman's Missionary Society are all alive and active. The outlook is bright." Brother Carpenter has our thanks for two subscriptions to the Advocate.

On Wednesday, January 6, at the home of the bride's father, the Hon. G. W. Stone, at Litchfield, Ky., Rev. W. W. Hopper of the Mississippi Conference was married to Miss Dora V. Stone, Rev. P. A. Kasey, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, of that city officiating. Brother and Sister Hopper reached their parsonage home at Terry, Miss., on the evening of January 6, and were given a cordial welcome by their people. We extend congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. W. G. Harbin and his little son, Dudley Pope, were in New Orleans last Monday, en route to their home in Houston, Texas. Brother Harbin had been attending the Conference of Evangelists recently held in Nashville, Tenn. The Texas Conference, of which he is a member, has blended the work of Conference Evangelist and Sunday School Field Secretary, and has assigned him to this dual service. Little Dudley had been visiting his grandmother, Mrs. Harbin, at West Point, Miss.

A telegram from Rev. and Mrs. T. S. Randle, now living at Carrizo Springs, Texas, on January 11, to their niece, Mrs. Grigsby Randle Root of New Orleans, announced the death of their daughter, Miss Nannie May Randle, on the day preceding. She was buried the next day at Carrizo Springs. This sad message will be read with sorrow by the many friends of Brother and Sister Randle in Louisiana. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain them and all the other bereaved relatives!

Mrs. M. E. Gilbert, of Gilbert, La., writes as follows: "Inclosed find remittance to renew my subscription to the Advocate. I cannot afford to be without my church paper." If there were more Methodists like Sister Gilbert, we dare say that the work of the Church would prosper more. A Methodist without his church paper cannot expect to keep abreast of the forward movements in our beloved Zion. So far as Church matters are concerned, he dooms himself to be an ignoramus.

Rev. J. Howard Brooks, of Tutwiler, Miss., will no longer preach at Rome, as he has been doing heretofore, but will instead preach at Mattson on the third Sunday in each month. Dr. J. W. Price will serve the Rome congregation. Our church at Tutwiler is soon to have electric lights. One brother recently stated to another that these lights were to be put in so that Brother Brooks could see how to preach. The other brother replied: "Why, that's not it; Brother Brooks could preach a sermon in the dark that would do credit to a Bishop."

The Interdenominational Week of Prayer is being observed in New Orleans this week, the following services having been announced: Preaching at the First M. E. Church, South, Monday night, by Dr. G. H. Cornelson, Jr.; at the Coliseum Baptist Church Monday night, by Dr. S. H. Werlein; at the First Evangelical Church Thursday night, by Rev. W. W. Drake; at the First Presbyterian Church Friday night, by Rev. W. H. Brengle. It is hoped that out of these union services there will develop a campaign of vigorous personal evangelism.

Rev. T. B. Cottrell has been heartily welcomed back to Tylertown, Miss., for another year. Concerning his charge, he says: "We are beginning the work of the new year under encouraging conditions. I am serving a fine people. We sent up to the recent session of our Conference the best report in the history of this appointment. Besides paying everything in full, our Sunday school paid $100 to support a native missionary in the foreign field. My family and I received from the people here many nice remembrances during the Christmas holidays."

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Heidelberg, Miss., sends us a card which reads as follows: "The people here have been exceedingly kind to us since our arrival. Their thoughtfulness reached a climax on a recent evening when, while sitting by the fireside, a babel of voices was heard approaching the parsonage, and, entering the front door, the visitors deposited on the hall floor many substantial and valuable things. After a half-hour of conversation and song, they departed, having left behind enough groceries to last us for some months. Truly, 'the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places.'"

Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, Miss., writes: "On Monday evening, December 21, our good ladies crowded into the parsonage dining room bringing many useful things, and with the help of a few men literally covered the table with such gifts as rejoice the occupants of a parsonage home. They also placed two turkeys and a chicken in a coop in the yard. We desire to express our hearty thanks to the good people here for these substantial tokens of appreciation, and we pray God's richest blessings upon them." The people of Amory seem to know when they are well off in the possession of a pastor. Brother Young deserves all the good treatment that they can give him.

THE SPECIAL CENTENARY ASSESSMENT.

Let me remind the presiding elders, pastors and Methodist Church members in Louisiana of the special assessment for Centenary College which the recent Conference resolved should be taken before March 31.

Please remember that this is a separate assessment from the regular benevolences to meet a present, urgent necessity, and should by no means be postponed too late, or in any way confused with other collections.

The special collection is necessary because the College has only a few thousand dollars of endowment; the local tax can no longer be drawn upon for maintenance or even for needed repairs and improvements, and the Faculty must be paid their salaries, and outstanding obligations must be met.

It would be a very great satisfaction to me if there should be a general response to this claim from the entire Conference—if every charge, station, circuit, mission, would send a collection, even if in many cases, the amount should be very small. It would give me encouragement to press forward to the accomplishment of the great task that has been laid upon me.

I have in my possession the list of subscriptions taken at the Conference in Shreveport, which may be cashed and receipted for at any time. Any individual contributions that may be sent to me direct will be credited to the charge whence it comes. Brother P. M. Brown is furnishing a duplicate list of the subscriptions to the fund secured by him last year, and from charges where these subscriptions were taken. It would be well for the pastors in forwarding the assessment, to give also the names of any whose contributions are to be credited on the previous subscriptions, so that there may be no confusion. It is important that the result of last year's work shall be conserved.

In taking this collection I urge that the brethren state the needs of the case with sufficient plainness, gut at the same time to strike a high note of appreciation of the present work of Centenary College and of confidence in its future.

R. H. WYNN.

The above reminder and appeal from Dr. Wynn is in pursuance of the unanimous action and apparently unanimous sentiment of the Louisiana Conference at its recent session. It was there agreed on all hands that the immediate relief of Centenary College by an early collection to meet its immediate and pressing financial needs was imperative, and the action of the Conference providing a special maintenance collection, to be taken before March 31, practically committed each pastor to see that such a collection is taken in his charge, and pledged each presiding elder to urge it upon the pastors and churches. This special collection will put the College in a position to go forward with renewed confidence in its work, and open the way for the greater campaign for permanent endowment and equipment, to which the Conference has thoroughly committed itself. The great task which demands the united and determined effort of our people in Louisiana at this time is the firm establishment of our educational work, which will prepare the way for advance along all other lines.

Call in the middle watch of the night came the death summons to the home and claimed for its own our beloved friend, Mrs. F. B. Marsh, Nov. 11, 1914, and while we bow in humble submission to the divine will our hearts are broken and sad. She was born on Nov. 11, 1881, and early in life gave her heart to God and united with the Methodist Church. Such a sister, more devoted Christian would have been hard to find, as she willingly served in every position she was called to fill. On Dec. 31, 1904, she was married to Mr. F. B. Marsh, a gentleman of the highest type and a true and consistent member of the same Church to which she belonged. She is survived by her husband, F. B. Marsh, a little niece, Bessie Mae Holland whom she was rearing, and a host of relatives and friends. Of her, much will be said. The memories shall be an everlasting remembrance, and an immortal spirit has been lifted up to God, who gave it. May the bereaved ones look to Him who is too good to err, and realize that they shall soon go to meet the loved ones who have crossed the river which separates us from the City Eternal.

Mrs. MIRA GOODBEE.

NEWTON A. BURRIS, eldest son of S. H. and Alma Burris, was born in Franklinton, La., on Sept. 19, 1891, and died on Dec. 11, 1914, aged 23 years 2 months and 24 days. While out hunting he accidently shot himself. This accident was a great shock to the entire community. He was a young man of excellent character and of exceptional business ability. He was one of our most efficient Sunday school teachers and had recently been made steward. His Sunday school class was the banner class. His former Sunday school superintendent said: "No task was ever placed upon him that he did not perform well." His father was for many years a steward in our Church and the preachers who have labored here in the years past honor and revere the memory of Stephen Burris. While quite young he gave his heart to God and had lived a consistent Christian life ever since. Brethren, pray for the stricken mother, who during the year has lost her husband and sister-in-law, and now her precious boy. This has been a sad year with us as we have lost so many of our best members, but our loss is their gain.

REV. DAN E. KELLY.

Reproduced from the Gazette, Miss., January 1st special number in one of the good and right-ness. Which Dan Kelly's friends.

[illegible] of Rev. [illegible] Methodist pastor for [illegible] meeting [illegible] Church. There are few [illegible] the right to [illegible] that man between esteem and hate the [illegible] attention of a congregation—children as well as grown people—like Mr. Kelly for two hours, whether he wants to do it or not. Mr. Kelly is no stranger here having been born and reared in this community, also [illegible] miles from this town, but this was the first time this place has had the opportunity to hear him in any [illegible] service. We have known Mr. Kelly from his early youth. He gave himself to the Church when [illegible] years old. If he ever [illegible] any wild oats we are not aware of it. While some preachers we have heard [illegible] from the pulpit how bad they had been, which we always thought would be best not told, Mr. Kelly seems to have had from his early boyhood a pride and ambition to make the most of his life for good. He early showed an ambition for a college education, which he secured under many difficulties. This, Attala County, has produced many big men in the different professions, but none has won more distinction and renown by ability to advance the cause of Christianity and make the world better than Rev. Dan E. Kelly.

He was reared by Christian parents. His mother was a great and good woman, who evidenced a desire and ambition to make the world better for her having lived in it. His father, Daniel E. Kelly, stood as high as any man in the county for Christian character and integrity and the elements that go to make an ideal citizen. He was a Confederate soldier who, having enlisted early in the conflict, remained at the front until the end, and if he ever flinched from duty, no one knew it.

The Rev. Mr. Kelly is a Christian statesman with diplomatic and altruistic gifts. A community will be elevated to higher and more worthy ideals of life by having him in a meeting. Mr. Kelly had blessed this community before by his wisdom and wise counsel when there seemed to be an anarchistic condition developing in the county several years ago.

His preaching is calculated to break down any feeling of strife, envy and jealousy that may exist between persons and classes in a church or community and breed instead a feeling of good will and fellowship. He speaks in no doubtful words. He is no communist. He is not envious of the other fellow because he may have had a chance to have more of this world's goods than he. He hits the tendency to evil, vice and sin many sledge-hammer blows, such as dancing, card playing among men or women, any sort of cards, for pastime, pleasure or gain, and also all questionable means of raising money for charity or the Church, such as bazaars, etc. He is severe on women lovers of poodle dogs, those who love dogs better than they love children. He loves the Methodist Church and its institutions. This he indicates in no uncertain manner, but his love and sympathy go out to all the world, and he gives credit to all the other denominations and creeds for what they are accomplishing. He is sufficiently broad and is not so shut up by prejudice that he does not see the good others are doing for Christ's kingdom and for the salvation of souls. He is a strong evangelist and has few equals. No one of the other denominations will have their love, pride or sensibilities in the least wounded by going to hear him in his meetings. He is thought by the great Methodist Church to be worthy to be turned loose without a bridle to go and preach where he will and do all the good he can for what the people where he preaches see fit to give him for his labors. He is an expert in [illegible] the hearts that there are two great forces in this world, one for good and righteousness, the other for evil and unrighteousness. Which of these great forces must dominate his life, which side are you on? These are questions he deals with in a masterful logic and power upon the attention of everyone. The Church is of divine appointment. It stands for the highest ideal for right living. Its aim is perfection in the people that compose it are faulty, yet it brings to them the best the world can offer to poor fallen man. "Be ye reconciled to God." The man who cannot identify himself with this class and worship at this shrine is unfortunate in his thoughts, studies and conclusions.

The writer of this is not a Methodist, but a Baptist, and loves the Baptist Church as well as Mr. Kelly loves the Methodist. But this does not prevent him from seeing the good others are doing for the betterment of conditions in this world and in consequence for the betterment of conditions in the world to come. R. S. McLAIN.

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which, if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Amory, Miss.

Dear Advocate: We held the first services in our new church yesterday, January 3, with immense congregations both in morning and evening. Our Sunday school has had an average attendance of about 135 for the past few months, but the first Sabbath in the new church the attendance was 220. Amory Methodism has a bright future, having now one of the best churches for doing modern church and Sunday school work in North Mississippi. To the credit of the congregation, with a pressure almost unparalleled in money matters, we will have raised and paid out nearly $15,000, when we settle for heating and lighting. We expect to carry a $6000 debt. We are now hoping and praying for a genuine revival in the near future. Pray for us.—W. M. Young, P. C.

McLain Charge, Miss.

Dear Brethren: A word from the McLain charge may not be out of place. So if the Editor will permit, I will proceed to speak. We closed a reasonably successful year on this charge, and are beginning the new year with renewed faith and zeal. We were delighted last Monday when our good people at Beaumont sent us a large box of well assorted groceries, including hams, sausage, lard, butter, salt, soda, baking powder, canned fruit, and fruit to be canned. There were rejoicing and praise in our rented home in Hattiesburg. Our work last year resulted in 114 accessions; 24 infants and 24 adults were baptized. Our collections were very good, but not quite in full. Our people have increased in spirituality, and we are expecting a great year in 1915.—P. H. Howse, P. C.

Byhalia, Miss.

In the re-appointment of Rev. L. A. McKeown to this work the sincere desire and the hope of the Byhalia charge were realized. The membership dearly love Brother McKeown, and the members of other denominations, observing his daily walk, manifestation of brotherly love and universal Christian spirit, hold him in high esteem. His first sermon of the new year at Byhalia was delivered on Sunday, December 20, from Luke 2:7: "There was no room for them in the inn." From these few words the preacher drew illustrations and made interesting comparisons that held the undivided attention of the congregation from the beginning to the end of his sermon. In conclusion, he spoke hopefully of the coming year's work, expressing the desire to do more in the Master's vineyard than he did last year, and said that he was looking with faith to the Lord to bless with greater results the work of the coming year. He will preach to a neighborhood of people who live some distance from town, at 3 p. m. on Sundays. Wishing the Advocate abundant success during this Conference year, I am yours fraternally,

MARCUS D. HERRING.

Topisaw Charge, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: On the night of New Year's Day this pastor and his family were made to feel glad indeed. Thirty-three people gave us a surprise by coming in just before supper time and asking us to give them supper. I insisted we could not feed them all; but they went ahead and erected a table about 25 or 30 feet long and put what we had on it (now, Mr. Editor, you should have seen just how our small amount of "grub" looked on that long table). And I still insisted we couldn't feed them. Finally, they began to bring in basket after basket and put it on the table until that long table was fairly loaded with "Topisaw grub;" and many who read these lines know what that means, for they have sampled it. Now, you can imagine what immediately followed. After partaking of this bountiful repast, an informal service was held led by our Lay Leader, Dr. W. I. Beacham and the tone of the meeting indicated better things for Topisaw circuit during 1915. When the happy crowd finally dispersed, we found our dining table loaded with such things as ham, fresh sausage, dried sausage, potatoes, syrup, butter, flour, fresh spareribs, rice, and some nice fruit. So when we finally came to ourselves, a thanksgiving Psalm was read and every member of the family prayed a thanksgiving prayer. May a merciful heavenly Father bless abundantly every one who contributed anything toward this happy occasion! God only knows how much we appreciated it and how anxious we are to repay them all a thousandfold.—J. A. Wells.

RING OUT THE OLD, RING IN THE NEW.

This may be applied to preachers as well as to time. On the last Sunday of the old year we were peculiarly blessed in having our old preacher to introduce our new one and the presiding elder to see it well done.

The joy bells that were ringing in our souls because of the coming of Brother Henry and his estimable wife were tolling softly a sad and reluctant farewell to Brother Holmes and his family.

Four years seem a short enough period for a preacher we love to remain with us, and but for the fact that we are loyal Methodists, we might be found complaining, and even going so far as to question the wisdom of the Bishop. As it is, we can but say, "There are as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it," and occasionally we get a whale.

Everybody is already saying: "I believe that we are going to like Brother Henry all right;" and usually this postscript follows, "but we did hate to give Brother Holmes up." We have not given them up but have just loaned them to New Orleans for four years; then we want them back for the full length of the time limit.

Mrs. A. C. McKINNEY.

Ruston, La., Jan. 4, 1915.

MAN NOT A SAVAGE.

But let no reader of the Witness suppose that man was created a savage. It was sin that made men savages. Cain, the oldest son of Adam, "was a tiller of the ground." (Gen. 4, 2.) And it may be supposed that there were always men who tilled the ground in some places, while in other regions men lived by hunting and gathering nuts and fruits and gradually lost all knowledge of the art of tilling the soil.

Prof. Sayce, the great explorer, testifies that the most ancient civilizations in Egypt were the most advanced. These were destroyed successively by wars, and every new civilization which sprang up in a time of peace was less advanced than the one which had preceded it.

God did not create a savage. Man made himself a savage.—Editor New York Weekly Witness.

The Sunday School.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Difficulties.—Room.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

After an address on the "Graded Sunday School," delivered a few years ago before a Sunday School Convention, a gentleman arose in the audience and said in substance: "That was a very good address—in theory. But the difficulty with you Sunday school specialists is that you talk for the towns and cities, forgetting that we in the country cannot use your city plans. How are we in the country to grade our schools on that plan and put them in our one-room buildings?" That was a most pertinent question.

Turning to the blackboard which I had been using, I hastily drew a parallelogram representing the ordinary one-room structure of a country or village church. A few dotted lines were then drawn from front to back, and from side to side of the supposed church building. Turning to the audience I explained the meaning of the dotted lines and located the entire elementary department of a graded Sunday school in this one-room building, and stated that to my certain knowledge several Sunday schools were so operating at that time within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

Assuming the church building under consideration to consist of only one room, a few screw-eyes, a hundred feet or more of small telephone wire, a few small brass rings, several yards of solid-colored burlap or other similar material, a very little ingenuity, and any one-room structure can be converted into suitable classrooms for a graded Sunday school.

Dividing the church building from side to side into three equal parts, place the screw-eyes in the walls at the dividing points and stretch the wire very taut from front to back. Divide the building from front to back into suitable sections, place the screw-eyes in the side walls at the designated points, and stretch the wire from side to side of the church. On these wires so stretched the curtains, to which have been attached the small brass rings, are hung, to be drawn from the ends and sides of the church to the intersecting points of the wire. During the Sunday school hours, these curtains divide the church into at least four class rooms. Additional curtains will add two more large rooms at the sides of the building. A few three-leaved screens, which almost any fourteen-year-old boy can make out of moulding and a few hinges, covered with material similar to the curtains, will enable any superintendent to convert his one room into as many recitation rooms as he finds necessary. During recitation hours, the curtains are drawn and the screens placed. When the school is over the curtains are draped against the walls and the screens put in some convenient place in the rear of the building, out of the way. In less than a minute the church can be converted into classrooms, and in equally as short a time, cleared for the closing exercises and church services. The whole outfit need not cost over $5, and the graded Sunday school is thus suitably housed.

Two objections may be urged against this plan: First, it does not exclude the noise.

In answer: Noise is not entirely excluded where there are separate rooms. Again, there is no need for teachers to talk as loud as they do in teaching at any time. Lastly, and preeminently, everyone who has taught little children knows it is not noise which distracts them, but sight. Cut off everything visible save the teacher, and she can hold their attention.

Second, it mars the beauty of the building.

In answer: The average village and country church has but little beauty to destroy, sad though it be. Again, while the Bible says, "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined," God has never sacrificed utility to beauty. We might well profit by His example. Lastly, and preeminently, the most important department of our church work is the Sunday school, and surely if artistic beauty must be somewhat marred, the truly earnest and devout Christians will stand it until able to suitably house their Sunday school.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By R. A. Maddox.

The General Sunday School Board of our Church has just gotten out a new magazine called the "Workers' Council." It is devoted entirely to Sunday School Methods, contains 16 pages, is published monthly, and costs only 20 cents. If you want the latest and most up-to-date methods, secure this magazine. There is also being issued a special magazine for the teachers of the Graded Lessons, which is published monthly at 50 cents a year.

I have on hand a good supply of leaflets giving the "Standard of Efficiency" for the Sunday schools of our Church. If you want to begin to work your school up to a 100 per cent school, I will be glad to send you a copy.

Don't forget that we have about 30,000 Church members in the Mississippi Conference who are not connected with our Sunday schools in any way. Why not have a Rally Day, a house-to-house canvass for membership and a home department? Let us reduce this shameful number of 30,000. We can do it,—God expects us to do it. Brother pastor and superintendent, how many of this number are in your church? Run over the membership and see. Set one day apart as Sunday School Day; on that day (say Friday) let every member of the school that can, call on some one who does not attend Sunday school, and get him to promise to join the main school or the home department. Wake up the interest in your section of the field. We had 2294 more pupils in 1914 than in 1913. Let us increase the number 10,000 more this year. Can we do it? Will you help us try? That only means 20 more pupils to each school. Will you get your twenty new pupils?

Water stagnates because it has no outlets, and sometimes no inlet. A Sunday school teacher will stagnate for the same reason. What are we taking into our mental and spiritual life for the pupils we are teaching? What are you giving out to them? Do you make good books, institutes, and the Bible your inlet? The outlet should be through your soul, to the heart of the pupil, that he may see in your life Jesus, the great pattern for you and for me.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

"Don't ask a man to be a Christian unless you mean to stand by him and help him in leading the real Christian life."

In 91 churches in a certain county, 25 have not a man over 21 in them. Wonder just why? Is there nothing for men to come for, or to do after coming?

For every day in the year for the last three years 1000 souls have been taken into the Church from the Sunday school.

The new book, "Lessons for Teachers of Beginners," by F. W. Danielson, is just what all teachers of beginners need and will be read with enthusiasm and profit.

"Anything you are not up on, you are down on." If every Christian could know the Sunday school—its value to every member of the home and the community—how few "down on the Sunday school" folk would be left in the world!

Some Adult Classes did not indulge in their usual annual banquet, engraved invitations, etc., during the holidays because of the poor and unemployed in their towns. A regular campaign of helpfulness and brotherly love is to spread its energizing influence over winter's war-time saddened months as a result of this saving and the efforts made possible by it.

It should be the ambition of each officer in the Sunday school to be training some one to take his place in the future. Every superintendent should carefully read "Organizing and Building up a Sunday School," by Hurlburt; and "The Church School," by Athearn. Every class as well as every Sunday school should have a goal toward which to work during 1915—and a worthy one.

A young man in a certain town had been visited daily for several weeks previous to and during a revival season in a local church and one night he was gloriously converted. One month afterwards he told a passing stranger that not a visit had he since that conversion night; and how he had needed strengthening and directing, and how lonely he had been! To stand by a Christian you've helped to make is the only wise thing to do.

A very wicked man stepped into a barber shop the other day and entered into a discussion about the return of the minister to the town. Somebody asked his opinion and he said, "Why, he must come back. I've never heard him preach or pray and may not; but he's my twelve year old boy's teacher and is giving that lad a chance that if I had had I would not be the wicked man I am to-day." That man was returned to his charge and continues to do very quietly a marvelous work with boys—the men of to-morrow.

God's challenge to every man this New Year is, as it ever has been: "If you will furnish the willingness, I will furnish the power; if you will tell men my truth I will reveal it to you; if you will offer your life as a ready instrument, I will use it in convincing men of the reality and power of my redemptive plan." Christianity's greatest need to-day is for men and women who are willing to do what they can do, right where they are; who are willing to say with Isaiah, "Lord, here am I, send me."

The story is going the rounds of a College Bible Class in Kansas that has given to the world one hundred ministers since its organization in 1897, and that makes Mississippi Sunday school people think of such a class in their own borders, giving ministers and fine, steady, true-hearted business men of every profession and trade yearly to a world needing just such material. The Christian-Builders, Mrs. Walter Scales' fine cadet class at the A. and M. College, holds the record for good accomplished in the few years since she has lent her skilled hand as an uplift and inspiration to hundreds of boys.

STOPS TOBACCO HABIT.

Elder's Sanitarium, located at 513 Main St., St. Joseph, Mo., has published a book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit, and how it can be stopped in three to five days. As they are distributing this book free, anyone wanting a copy should send their name and address at once.

My life, if it be a Christian life at all, has its surface amidst the shifty mutabilities of earth, but its root in the silent eternities of the centre of all things, which is Christ in God.—A. Maclaren, D. D.

IMAGINE THE MISERY

of a 7 years' case of persistent eczema and then the joy of its final disappearance. This is the experience of L. S. Gliddens, Tampa, Fla.: "For 7 years I had eczema on my ankle. I tried many remedies and doctors. I decided to try Tetterine and after 8 weeks am entirely free from the terrible eczema." If you suffer with Eczema, Tetter, Itch, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, or Piles, you know what to do. Tetterine, 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

WORK WANTED.

Dear Doctor Meek: I should like very much to secure work somewhere as a supply during the Conference year now beginning. I attended for awhile the Meridian Male College and the Montrose Training School, and have had some experience in ministerial work. Recommendations will be furnished on request.

Yours for service,
B. N. ANDREWS.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT.

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent litbia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, to keep the kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

A WORD FROM BRO. SULLIVAN.

In reference to the episode in the North Mississippi Conference at Starkville, Mississippi, which resulted in my location, I will say that after the attempt to locate me had failed, I asked for a location myself and it was granted by the Conference; but after reflection I regretted asking to be located.

As to the action of my Presiding Elder, I think that be was misled. As a Christian gentleman and a child of God, I can not harbor malice against any one.

I also ask my friends to stand by and support my successor on the Kosciusko Circuit. He is altogether innocent of what happened to me, and I am sure that he is my friend, as was his sainted father.

E. C. SULLIVAN.

Kosciusko, Miss., Dec. 22, 1915.

AT PORT GIBSON.

Having asked to be made a pastor instead of a presiding elder, I was glad to be appointed to Port Gibson. We reacbed our new, bome at 6 p. m. on Christmas eve, and found it awaiting us, with church folks in the well-warmed, well-lighted parsonage to welcome us. Supper was ready, the pantry was well stocked, as were the wood and coal rooms, and everybody says: "We are glad to have you." No Metbodist preacher ever had a happier lot. Our gratitude goes out to these good and thoughtful people.

President O'Neil, at the College, with his splendid helpers, Miss Kennard, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Puckett and otbers, is doing a great work. A fine student body was in evidence when I conducted the worship in the chapel last Wednesday. Brother O'Neil is in high favor here, and he deserves it.

Tbis is one church whose Sunday school membership exceeds the membership of the church. Our Sunday schooi, under the wise and enthusiastic leadership of Brother H. H. Crisler, is one of the best in the Conference; and the outlook promises that it shall be larger and better.

END STOMACH TROUBLE, GASES OR DYSPEPSIA

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes Sick, Sour, Gassy Stomachs surely feel fine in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you helch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, had taste in mouth and stomach-headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minntes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest stomach doctor in the world. It's wonderful.

It is one thing to meet death intrepidly, and it is altogether another to meet it peacefully and trustfully.—Robertson.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Now-a-days we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You must dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulpbur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I have come into the world to do; he may do a higher work, a greater work, but he cannot do my work. I cannot hand my work over to him, any more than I can hand over my responsibilities or my gifts. Nor can I delegate my work to any association of men, however well ordered and powerful. They have their own work to do, and it may he a very noble one. But they cannot do my work for me. I must do it witb these hands or with these lips which God has given me.—Ruskin.

THE GOLD IS NOT ON THE SURFACE.

The gold mines of Scripture are not in the top soil; you must open a shaft. The precious diamonds of experience are not pitched up in the roadway; their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the solidity, the veracity, the divinity of the Word of God, and seek to possess with it all the inward work of the blessed Spirit. It is of small use to learn a doctrine unless in the most emphatic sense you learn it by heart. John Bunyan intended this when he said the truths which be learned were burned into him.—C. H. Spurgeon.

For confidence and calm joy Christ tells us to turn to Nature. For love and sacrifice he bids us live close to our fellowmen. For comfort and immortal hope he asks us to believe in him and in our Father, God.—Van Dyke.

Conference Publicity Superintendents:

Louisiana.....Mrs. A. C. McKinney, Ruston, La.
Mississippi.....Mrs. J. L. Neill, Laurel, Miss.
North Mississippi.....Mrs. Walter Campbell, Winona, Miss.

All communications for this department should be sent to the Editor at the address given above.

ATTENTION.

Whoever receives the literature in the adult auxiliary will please notice the following items in regard to the literature for this quarter:

There is no leaflet on Korea for the February program. Material for this study will be found in The Voice and the Annual Report of the Woman's Missionary Council.

"The Seaman's Bride" will be effective in showing the changed conditions which make our opportunity. It should be given a prominent place in the February program.

The leaflet for March is on the social service topic and will be sent by the Conference Superintendents of Social Service to the auxiliary superintendents.

MISSION STUDY.

If you have a mission study class and have not filled out an enrollment card, do so at once and mail to Mrs. H. R. Steele, so that the number of classes reported to the Conference Superintendent of Study and Publicity will agree with the number reported by card to the Educational Secretary.

PRAYER CYCLE.

(For work and workers in the Voice each month.)

The Prayer Calendar for 1915 will not be issued. Delay in mails from foreign fields made it impossible to have it ready by January 1.

FROM WINNFIELD, LA.

The Winnfield auxiliary has both home and foreign departments, with 27 in the former and 13 in the latter. We also have the young people organized with 18 members and a Junior division with 21 members. All departments are doing good work. Our foreign, young people and junior departments were organized this year (1914) as a result of having our district meeting with us.

The adult auxiliary meets every Monday. On the first Monday we have our business meeting; on the second, we have our program from the Missionary Voice; on the third, we have a social meeting in some home, and on the fourth, we have Mission Study Class. We have an executive meeting at the close of each quarter.

The active members have adopted the plan of paying $1 each per quarter. Out of this the dues are paid and the balance is used for local purposes. Since adopting this plan, we have funds on hand to meet our needs without ice cream festivals, bazaars, etc. Our committee that looks after the sick and strangers does good work. Each year we observe the "Week of Prayer." Our agent for The Voice is making an earnest effort to have this splendid magazine read in more of our homes.

Mrs. S. M. ABEL, Cor. Sec.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF WINNFIELD.

Taking as our motto, "Looking upward, and onward to him who doeth all things well," we are pressing forward in the great mission work which Christ has so strongly enjoined us to do, having learned through courage, fidelity and service that we must be thoughtful of others who are more unfortunate than we, and that we must minister unto them.

As yet there are only 18 members in our ranks, but we are all industrious and enthusiastic workers for the cause. We meet on Sunday evening just an hour before church service, which gives us an opportunity to help in the night service. We have not yet accomplished all of the things set forth for us to do, but hope before the close of the year to raise the money for our pledge and the other obligations that rest upon us.

With Mrs. Joel Durham as our leader, we expect to rank as the banner society in Louisiana.

KENNETH WATTS, Secretary.

MARY BLACK HOSPITAL.

The following sketch of the founding of the Mary Black Hospital, at Soochow, China, is from the pen of Miss Margaret Marshall:

"Only five years after the women of Southern Methodism organized for the work of foreign missions, they began to plan and pray for an opportunity to carry healing to the suffering bodies of heathen women and children.

"The fine medical work so successfully begun by Bishop W. R. Lambuth opened the way for the same character of work to be done by the Woman's Board, and in 1885 Dr. Mildred M. Phillips, from Missouri, a graduate of the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania, was sent out as our first medical missionary. The necessary funds for the erection and equipment of a hospital not being in hand, she devoted herself to the study of the language and of conditions until in 1888 she reported that "the long-wished-for hospital was at last begun in May." It was built upon a lot adjoining the Soochow Hospital. The buildings are of brick, connected by open corridors. They are neatly finished inside with hard, smooth, gray marbled plaster, and high, white ceilings. The woodwork is of the best redwood and camphor wood. The dispensary building where daily clinics are held, contains a large waiting room, two consulting rooms, and a drug room. North of this are the medical and surgical wards, in two separate pavilions, each containing one bathroom and one room for special cases. One of these small rooms has been prepared so that it can be used for opium cases, part of the treatment for which consists of iron bars and a lock and key."

"From the beginning a vast amount of good has been accomplished—suffering allevlated and souls pointed to the Divine Healer. The work, at times, has been arduous and discouraging, and the equipment and help wholly insufficient. There are now in training a number of young women who are fitting themselves for this noble profession. Our medical workers write that they have a new class of seven promising young women who have been duly installed with Miss Pyle at the Laura Haygood School and that they come over to the hospital each morning to spend the day in study and classes. Five older students room at the hospital. This may seem a small school (twelve), but we must remember that they are studying as difficult a subject as medicine, in, what to them, is a foreign language (English). Three girls who applied will require two more years of study at the Laura Haygood, or some other school equally as good. There were other applications, but none from girls with nearly enough preparation."

THE CONFERENCE PLEDGE.

Do not forget that January is the season when the auxiliaries make the financial pledges which form the basis for the maintenance of our work. The dues and these pledges constitute the real support of the work. So each member of the auxiliary to some extent holds its future in her own hand. Remember the Conference pledge depends upon the auxiliary pledge, and the auxiliary depends upon the individual.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK. DON'T STAY BILIOUS, CONSTIPATED

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Clean Your Sluggish Liver Better Than Calomel and Can Not Salivate.

Calomel makes you sick; you lose a day's work. Calomel is quicksilver and it salivates; calomel injures your liver.

If you are bilious; feel lazy, sluggish and all knocked out, if your bowels are constipated and your head aches or stomach is sour, just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone instead of using sickening, salivating calomel. Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and bowels regular. You will feel like working. You'll be cheerful; full of energy, vigor and ambition.

Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal guarantee that it will clean your sluggish liver better than nasty calomel; it won't make you sick and you can eat anything you want without being salivated. Your druggist guarantees that each spoonful will start your liver, clean your bowels and straighten you up by morning or you get your money back. Children gladly take Dodson's Liver Tone because it is pleasant tasting and doesn't gripe or cramp or make them sick.

I am selling millions of bottles of Dodson's Liver Tone to people who have found that this pleasant, vegetable, liver medicine takes the place of dangerous calomel. Buy one bottle on my sound, reliable guarantee. Ask your druggist about me.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

A Pimply Face Loses Friends

Why Stand This Humiliation When Stuart's Calcium Wafers in a Week Make Your Face Clean and Radiant.

No need for anyone to go about any longer with a face covered with pimples, blotches, eruptions, blackheads and liver spots. These are all due to impurities in the blood. Cleanse the blood thoroughly and the blemishes will disappear.

"Everyone Looks at a Face Bearing a Lovely Complexion—It is Nature's Greatest Gift to Woman."

That's what Stuart's Calcium Wafers are intended to accomplish and do accomplish. Their principal ingredient is Calcium Sulphide, the quickest and most thorough blood cleanser known.

These wonderful little wafers get right into the blood and destroy eruptive substances present in it. In some cases a few days is sufficient to make a marked improvement. And when the blood is pure the whole system is a hundred per cent better.

Don't fret any longer about those blackheads, pimples, boils, tetter, eczema, spots or skin eruptions; they all go and "go quick" if you use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Go to any druggist anywhere and buy a box. Price 50 cents. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for failing hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

When you find yourself, as I dare say you sometimes do, overpowered as it were by melancholy, the best way is to go out, and do something kind to somebody or other.—John Keble.

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

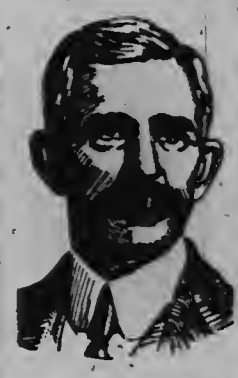
Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Heart Disease Almost Fatal to Young Girl



"My daughter, when thirteen years old, was stricken with heart trouble. She was so bad we had to place her bed near a window so she could get her breath. One doctor said, 'Poor child, she is likely to fail dead any time.' A friend told me Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy had cured her father, so I tried it, and she began to improve. She took a great many bottles, but she is spared to me today, a fat, rosy cheeked girl. No one can imagine the confidence I have in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy." A. R. CANON, Worth, Mo.

The unbounded confidence Mr. Canon has in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is shared by thousands of others who know its value from experience. Many heart disorders yield to treatment, if the treatment is right. If you are bothered with short breath, fainting spells, swelling of feet or ankles, pains about the heart and shoulder blades, palpitation, weak and hungry spells, you should begin using Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy at once. Profit by the experience of others while you may.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA

NOT an object of charity; not a veneering plant; not a place to cram; not a short-cut affair; no place for triflers or ne'er-do-wells; not a reformatory.

An institution run on business principles; expects and demands honest effort and strict obedience; offers courses in variety under splendidly equipped, trained, experienced and Christian teachers from the best Colleges, Universities and Conservatories. Graduates are among the elect women of the country. Normal graduates "make good."

Income nearly doubled in two years. More than Four Thousand Dollars spent in improvements and accommodations in the past two years. Has a right by every token to demand the earnest consideration of every Louisiana Methodist (we do not poach on the territory of any other Conference). Scores of friends and patrons of other faiths.

We want ten more earnest, ambitious girls at the beginning of the next year—Jan. 4, 1915.

Mansfield is on the map. Suppose you look it up. It is best to come and see.

CABBAGE PLANTS
GROWN FROM EXPENSIVE SEED
Early Jersey Wakefield
Charleston Large Type Wakefield
I pay from three to five times as much for Peter Henderson & Co.'s seed as other planters pay for ordinary seed. Actual figures, $3.50 per lb. for Wakefields, $4.00 per lb. for Flat Dutch, against 75c. per lb. for ordinary seed. My customers get the benefit in.
PERFECT PLANTS AT NO EXTRA COST
Why not plant cabbage grown from high-grade seed and raise a successful crop, rather than use plants from inferior seed and be disappointed in the results? It costs no more.
If I am out of the variety you want I will tell you. I NEVER SUBSTITUTE EXCEPT WHEN REQUESTED BY THE PURCHASER.
Prices by Express: 1,000 to 4,000, $1.50 per 1,000; 5,000 to 9,000, $1.25 per 1,000; 10,000 or over $1.00 per 1,000.

GIVING OURSELVES.

The one thing that counts is the giving, not of money, not of influence, but of ourselves to the world. It is far easier to endow a home for girls than to make a home for one girl; far easier to support a mothers' meeting than to support one stray lassie; far easier to send money to teach young women in far-away lands than yourself to teach those same young women when landed beside your own hearthstone. "These ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone." In the Master's sight the gift without the giver is nothing at all. Only when we bestow ourselves on the stranger within our gates do we follow the Christ who "loved us and gave himself for us."—Congregationalist and Christian World.

Positive proof from oldest Records that John baptized by Sprinkling. 68-page book, only 16 cents in stamps. Mahaffey Co., Box 8, Batesburg, S. C.

MISSIONARIES IN PRAYER.

We are wondering what will be the result of this dreadful European conflict, and to what extent it may paralyze missionary work. The Chinese are asking some very hard questions about the war. They ask, "Since the Christian nations are seeking to destroy each other, how much better are they than the non-Christian countries?" Does Christianity teach people to war?" "Can Christianity take from the hearts of men and nations the thirst for war or remove the causes which bring on war?" We are trusting and praying that the United States may have nothing to do with this horrible affair.—A. C. Bowen, Changchow, China.

No man is so absolutely and deeply happy as he who makes the one question of his life, "What is God's will concerning me?" and the one endeavor of his life to follow that will when it is revealed.—Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D.

NEW ORLEANS
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 62.—No. 3 Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3074.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1915. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"If we knew what hearts are aching,
For the comfort we might bring;
If we knew what souls are yearning
For the sunshine we might fling;
If we knew what feet are weary,
Walking pathways roughly laid,
We would quickly hasten forward,
Stretching forth our hands to aid."

It seems that the prohibitionists must always win two victories to make a State dry—one at the polls and the other in the Courts. But the cause notwithstanding is marching steadily on.

* * *

Referring to Billy Sunday in a recent editorial, the North American (Philadelphia) says: "Regarded by many uninformed persons as an exponent of novelty, he delivers uncompromisingly the old Gospel unadorned. His language is modernism itself, but his theology is as primitive as that of the fishermen of Galilee." If there is any other kind of theology that is lighting revival fires in the world to-day, we do not know what or where it is.

The Outlook says: The curious workings of conscience are exemplified in a letter recently received by a Southern railway. The letter inclosed a draft for $6.81 to pay for a trip four years ago on which the sender failed to pay fare for his boy, aged six. The amount included not only half fare but interest at six per cent." This may be a "curious working of conscience," but is a wholesome one. If a man has failed to be honest at any time, he ought to pay up—even if the swindled concern is a railroad, and the swindler a preacher.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, a professor in the University of Chicago and President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, according to a contemporary, thinks that "in our advanced stage of religious development war terms should be stricken from the Christian vocabulary." The Holy Scriptures would have to be considerably expurgated to accomplish this result, but it is scarcely to be thought that that would disturb Dr. Mathews. Those of his school are apparently seldom happier than when correcting the mistakes of the sacred authors.

There are many kinds of faulty vision, but perhaps the most common is that which sees the faults of others, but is blind to one's own shortcomings. It was to an aggravated case of this malady that the Master had reference in the Sermon on the Mount, when he said: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" The only cure for this terrible disease is for the moral nature of its victim to be cleansed and righted by the power of the Holy Spirit. How one views his fellow-men is a pretty good indication of his own religious status.

A HUMAN LINK.

The ships of ancient Rome were propelled into battle by galley slaves. These were the captives of war; some were men of proud lineage and royal birth. Chained to their benches, they plied the great oars with rythmic movement to the strokes of the master who beat the time. The conflict raging above them and around them meant little to them except in the case of their galley's destruction. Then, chained to their seats, they could not hope to escape, but would perish like rats in a cage. Yet upon those wretched men largely depended the fortunes of Rome on the sea.

In the Spanish-American War there were men who gave themselves willingly to a similar task. They lacked the fierce incentive of the battle raging above, a conflict they could not see, but they did their duty. And there is little said of them, the brave stokers who were faithful in the hour of battle, though only their hard toil in the grime and heat of the furnace made the movement of ships and guns possible.

The heroes on the deck above are crowned with laurel, and we name streets in our capitals in their honor. And all come home at last to "read their glory in a nation's eyes." But let us hope that some day the nation's esteem will guard with solemn round the last resting place of a dead stoker, and that his mighty, soot-begrimed form will be one of our marble figures of fame in places of renown.

For there are forces which we can not see, and which we do not always recognize and credit, which are moving forces after all. In the making of history there were men, little known to fame, who had a large part, as they brought on the stage of action other men celebrated as mightier.

Peter was a leader among the disciples, a bold, rugged figure, a unique personality, standing out among men. His brother Andrew is seldom mentioned. But Peter, with all his great achievement, was brought to Christ by the humble Andrew.

So the opportunity for great service, as men regard it, may not come to you and me, but we can live on in some one else who rises to mighty tasks. You may not be the giant Saul, towering above your fellows, and leading the hosts of Israel to battle like a king, nor even the bold young son of Jesse, who proves the king's suit of mail and can not wear it, yet slays the terrible Philistine; but you can be the king's armor-bearer when he goes forth to the conflict against the foes of the Lord.

Now Andrew did a very great work in introducing men to Christ. When he found the Savior precious to his own soul, he thought at once of some one else. And he returned from the home of the Master to lead his own brother to Jesus.

In the busy days that followed Jesus and his disciples withdrew once for a period of rest to an uninhabitated place on the northeastern shore of Galilee. But they could not escape the multitude. The people followed them to their retreat. Then took place the feeding of a great number of people. And again the connecting link was Andrew. He it was who found the only one in that vast throng who had any food, the lad with the loaves and fishes.

Many months passed before Andrew came into prominence again. On the last day of Christ's ministry, a party of foreigners came into the temple gate. They were doubtless "proselytes of the gate," Gentiles converted to the Jewish faith, who bad come to Jerusalem for the Passover. Before leaving the city, they wanted to see the man of whom they had heard so much. Now it seems that Andrew was known to possess the grace of introducing men to Christ, for the request of the Greeks was referred to him, and he brought the men to Jesus.

Dwelling upon these instances, we believe the loved employ of Andrew was that of bringing men to Christ. Not in striking sermons on great occasions, like his own brother Peter; not before kings and princes, in an august presence, like Paul; but in personal work, in invitations to individuals, quietly and lovingly bringing men to Christ.

And this is a work we all can do. Andrew was a human link, a link of love. The last bright link of the heavenly chain is Jesus, waiting to unite with the Father all the erring sons of men, the broken fragments of human lives. Andrew's great task was uniting broken, wasted lives with the Savior, making himself a living human link of love. And how many broken, wasted lives might be chained fast to the throne of God in heaven if there were more such links of love. For there are thousands of men without sympathy, without love, who might respond to a kindly word, to the hope of better things. Let us never despair of any man; let us never say of any in our day, "Ephraim is joined to idols, leave him alone." "Deep down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter—Chords that were broken will vibrate once more." Perhaps the trouble is not altogether with broken lives, but also with missing links of love.

To double the membership of your own church in one year might seem to you an impossible task. To multiply the number of Christians in Mississippi and Louisiana by two, might seem possible only as a simple piece of arithmetic. To add to the number of Christ's followers in the world, an equal number, in a year's time, might seem the dream of a fanatic.

But let us think more in terms of the individual. Christ does not save men by multitudes. He saves individuals who trust in him. The religion of Christ is not a community affair, but an intimate and right relation between Christ and individuals. A number of indivuals may be reached at one time by one man. We are not discrediting preaching. We are urging that it be aided by individual work. There is also a work for others beside the preacher in winning souls for the Master. And while the thought of doubling the number of Christians in the world in one year taxes the imagination, it seems quite practical to think of one Christian man or woman, filled with the love of Christ and men, winning one other to Christ in a year's time. For one man to win one other, from his own family, from his friends and associates, in the space of twelve months does not seem an impossible ideal of love and service. And that man is you, if you follow the example of Andrew.

SETTLED RIGHT.

However the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still Truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his rank be strong; if he be in the wrong,
The battle is not yet done.
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

O man bowed down with labor,
O woman young, yet old;
O heart oppressed in the toiler's breast,
And crushed by the power of gold,
Keep on with your weary battle
Against triumphant night;
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

WHITEFIELD AND SUNDAY.

It is an interesting coincidence that the religious denominations that are preparing for the Sunday revival campaign are at the same time celebrating the bicentennial of the birth of George Whitefield. There are points of resemblance between them.

Whitefield was the most remarkable preacher of his time in the number of persons to whom he preached and the effect produced upon them. Yet he was not a man of notable intellectual gifts, and even special students of sermonic literature do not now often succeed in reading his sermons. Rev. "Billy" Sunday has been extraordinarily successful in drawing immense throngs, and Scranton and other cities where he has had campaigns testify to the awakening of the conscience of the community, the elevation of moral standards and the very real improvement of the moral and religious life. But the most devoted admirer of the baseball evangelist will not pretend that his sermons will be read.

Whitefield was indebted for his power, as Sunday is now, to his extraordinary gift of dramatic oratory. We have some curious evidence of this power in Whitefield. One of his contemporaries said that he could pronounce the word "Mesopotamia" so that it would draw tears from the multitude. Benjamin Franklin, who, to put it in its mildest form, was not religiously emotional, has given a delightful account of the effect of Whitefield's eloquence when appealing for money for his orphan asylum. It first melted his determination not even to give the coppers in his pocket. Then it raised the heat of his sympathies to the point of resolving to give the silver coins he had, and when the collection was taken Franklin emptied copper, silver and gold coins out of his pocket, and gave everything he had with him.

Lord Chesterfield was even less likely to be carried away by religious enthusiasm; but when Whitefield was describing the sinner in the guise of a blind man approaching a precipice and leaning over the edge to recover his cane his realism was so hypnotizing that Chesterfield sprang to his feet in alarm, exclaiming, "Good God. He's gone."

For Whitefield, as for Sunday, Philadelphia built a hall or tabernacle. He preached to a crowd that filled the Germantown market-place. In the yard of Fagg's Manor Presbyterian Church there is a group of notable oaks which by local tradition are the identical trees under which Whitefield preached to more thousands than one can readily believe. One of the most beautiful country graveyards in this vicinity is that connected with the Neshaminy Presbyterian Church. Whitefield's diary records his preaching there with a more than usual consciousness of divine power. At Nazareth there still stands the building whose erection for an orphan asylum he procured.

The methods of the revivalist and missionary differ with the communion and the age, but all communions and in all ages have supplemented the work of the parish clergy with special forms of service, and especially with unusual gifts of oratory for the arousing of the religious susceptibilities of the multitude, to whom religion is apt to become mechanical and formal.

The Second Presbyterian Church in this city was the direct product of Whitefield's revival. Benjamin Franklin's careful computation of the number of perons who could hear Whitefield helps us to believe the astonishing traditions of his voice, and Franklin testifies that the amendment of the morals of the community was as marked as the furor over the most eloquent preacher of his day.—Philadelphia Record.

The statement that Whitefield was "the most remarkable preacher of his time" is doubtless correct, for he had more dramatic power than Wesley possessed. But the implication that Whitefield preached to more people than Wesley and produced greater effects seems very far astray. Few preachers in all history, if any, have reached greater numbers than Wesley reached, and, while it is doubtless true that Whitefield could move a whole audience more powerfully than Wesley could, the enduring results of Wesley's work were far greater than those of Whitefield's work; for Wesley was a great organizer as well as a great preacher.—New York Weekly Witness.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY AND A WEIGHTY OBLIGATION. WHAT WILL WE DO WITH IT?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler, D. D.

The greatest war recorded in history is now raging in Europe, and whatever may be its issue, the world will be all changed at its close. If Germany should be victorious, moral consequences will follow which will affect the destiny of mankind; and if England and the allies should triumph the results can not be less enduring and far-reaching. In any event the welfare of the race is involved.

The part the United States must bear in the future work of the world must henceforth be greater than ever, and especially in the missionary and educational enterprises, whereby the race of man must be evangelized and enlightened.

The missionary responsibility for the world must rest upon our people more heavily than ever. The Nations of Continental Europe have not borne any great part in the work of modern missions to the heathen world. Germany, which has done more than all the rest, has fallen behind the missionary efforts of great Britain and the United States. The English-speaking Nations have for the last hundred years been the evangelical and evangelistic powers of the world. But the war is wasting the resources of Great Britain, and the Churches in the United States must increase their offerings and intensify their zeal to make up for the loss which the missionary cause must sustain on account of the diminished power of the Churches of Great Britain to serve it. Hence our missionary obligation is doubled, and it must be met, however hard the times may be. The work of missions in pagan lands must not suffer. It were better to deny ourselves some of the necessaries of life, to say nothing of luxuries, than that Christian Churches in pagan lands should suffer want. Our people are more able than any other people in the world to bear this burden at this time. Our harvests have been plentiful and our barns are filled to overflowing. God has blessed us with peace and plenty in order that we may bless the world in this hour of its sore need.

In like manner we have an increased educational obligation. The German and Belgian universities are closed. The British universities are suffering very much. The French schools have not yet recovered from the war of 1870, and now they sustain further impairment. It is evident that the educational center of the world must henceforth be in the United States. What is our duty in view of this undeniable fact?

1. The colleges and universities of the Churches must be made far stronger than they have ever been; and for the increased resources which they require they must look to the Churches alone. It would be worse than idle to look to secular sources to meet these needs—it would be positively disgraceful and injurious.

It must be frankly confessed that the richest institutions in America are not evangelical in spirit—they are scarcely Christian in character. From the beginning of the alienation of Harvard College from the Church, a century ago, there has been a steady movement in the direction of alienating the strongest institutions from the Churches. Secularists, by their gifts, have promoted this process of alienation. There are forces now at work which are aimed at accelerating this denaturing process by dominating the stronger schools through donations and destroying the weaker institutions by over-mastering competition.

The Churches must meet this movement by enriching their own institutions and making them as strong as the strongest of the secular institutions. They are well able to do this, and the Christianity of our own and other lands must suffer if it is not done speedily.

It is not altogether a misfortune to mankind that the German universities are closed. Those institutions have propagated a rationalistic type of religion far too long for the good of the race. But if, with the shifting of the educational center of the world from Europe to America, the propagation of the same sort of rationalism is continued, what will be the profit? What man or nation ever increased the sum of human good by "swapping the devil for a witch?"

If Chinese and Japanese students are corrupted by the rationalism of Harvard and the materialism of Chicago, how much better will be their case than it would have been if they had suffered the same injury at Berlin or Heidelberg?

In this connection let it be remarked that thousands of students from pagan lands are now in American institutions of learning, and that most of them are in institutions, the atmosphere of which is distinctly unfriendly to evangelical Christianity. When they have returned to their own lands they will be obstacles in the way of our missionaries. The power of our investments in missions will be greatly reduced unless more of these foreign students are drawn into evangelical institutions, and this can not be done if the colleges and universities of the evangelical Churches are not speedily made as strong as the strongest of secular institutions.

2. The colleges and universities of the Churches must be held firmly to the evangelical principles and purposes for which they were founded. Institutions of learning are as prone to backslide as are individuals; and the schools of the Churches must be jealously guarded against false teachings and worldly tendencies. This cannot be done in institutions which are not owned and controlled by the Churches.

Some talk of the Churches doing a work of "co-operation" rather than of "operation" in schools and colleges. This is something worse than nonsense. It is really a proposal of educational simony. Men who talk this sleazy stuff wish to get the patronage of the Church without being subject to its authority. They wish to use the Church rather than serve it. They desire to get its money and its students while resenting its government and repudiating its teachings.

Why do not these advocates of "co-operation" versus "operation" apply their doctrine to the universities of the States? Will they dare to say a State should not own and control the university which receives annual appropriations from its treasury? Will they insist that an American commonwealth may "co-operate" with an institution of learning, but not "operate" it, although it taxes the people for money to support such a school and grants to it the power to confer degrees?

It is clear that these doctrinaires of "co-operation" are at heart opposed to an institution of learning being genuinely Christian in character. They are willing for any secular authority, whether it be a State or a self-perpetuating board of trustees, to own and control a college or university; but they are unwilling for any Church except the Roman Catholic to do so. Their motive is as manifest as it is unworthy.

It is impossible to have institutions that will serve the ends of evangelical Christianity unless the Churches erect, endow, own and control such institutions. States cannot make such institutions and irresponsible boards (miscalled independent) will not. Only the Churches can and will.

In this matter Southern Churches have peculiar obligations. The South is pre-eminently the home of evangelical Christianity. The degenerate forms of rationalistic religion have never been able to take root and flourish in our section. Southern Churches, therefore, can make evangelical institutions of learning more easily than can the Churches of other sections. The Southern atmosphere is friendly to the growth of such establishments.

And the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, ought to take the lead in this high matter. Our numbers, resources, and prestige enable us to do it. We may do a work in our colleges and universities now which will promote evangelical Christianity to the ends of the earth.

In Latin-America especially we may do a great work. If we will make our two universities, one at Dallas, Texas, and the other at Atlanta, Ga., what they ought to be, and what we are able to make them, we may propagate Methodism throughout all the countries south of us. Students from Mexico, Central America, the West Indies and the Northern parts of South America would prefer to attend universities in the mild climate of the South rather than insitutions in the colder regions of the North, provided they can find equal advantages in our section. Herein is a great missionary opportunity and obligation. What will we do with it?

There is much talk of securing for our country the trade of Latin-America, and that is a most important matter. But it is far more important to become the educator of Latin-America. The North American and South American Continents cannot be bound together firmly by ties of commerce alone. They will become fast friends when they think and feel alike. Our two Methodist Universities, if they are richly endowed and adequately equipped, will serve this end more effectually than all the consuls and commercial agents who have been or can be engaged to accomplish it. In this matter our commercial interests and our religious duty coincide.

"HOW I FILLED MY CHURCH."

By Rev. M. A. Matthews, D.D.

(Dr. Matthews is well known in West Tennessee and North Mississippi, having served as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Jackson, Tenn., a number of years ago. The Westminster Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Washington, of which he is now pastor, has over 5000 members, and is said to be the largest Presbyterian Church in the world. It has been largely built up since Dr. Matthews took charge of it.)

It is not a pleasure for me to talk about myself and therefore I must decline; but if you will let me answer your questions with no reference to myself, I shall do so.

1. This Church has been filled for nearly eleven years. Most of the time it is crowded, and scores and hundreds have been turned away. The audience has in it from 55 to 70 per cent of men. Frequently there are from six to eight services running at the same hour in the different rooms of the Church.

2. The results accomplished are entirely due to the operations of the Holy Spirit. We pray much, expect much and get much.

3. The pure, simple gospel is preached. Sinai and Calvary are held up to the people. The vicarious atonement is emphasized; the sacrifice of Christ is presented daily; his deity and his mediatorial work are kept before the people. The whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel, is preached.

4. We make the gospel apply to every condition, circumstance, and point of a man's life. We deal with his social, domestic, commercial, political, civic life, with the gospel and only the gospel.

5. Every service is an evangelistic service. We never preach the gospel or finish a sermon without making an appeal for immediate decision and confessions of Christ. In other words, we try to demonstrate a passion for souls with profound love for God, implicit confidence, faith and trust in Christ and in the leadership of the Holy Spirit.

6. We do not have a sermonette after a long musical program of questionable ecclesiastical music. Every member of the choir must be a Christian and spiritual music must be used, but that program is kept in its minor place. The sermons are not dictated by the clock. Time enough is taken to present the case of sin, produce conviction in the hearer's mind and ask for the work of the Holy Spirit to produce conversions.

7. Every man, woman and child in this Church is supposed to have something to do and is required to do the thing assigned. Personal work and personal evangelism are keynotes.—The Christian Herald.

BOOKS.

By Rev. W. H. Doss, Jr.

There are many of them. There are many different kinds. Some are good and helpful; some are harmful, and some are even dangerous. Bad books have poisoned the minds of many and blasted their whole lives. Then there are many books that are just nothing at all. They are as so much chaff that is good for nothing except for the wind to drive it away or to be burnt in the fire.

A long while ago the inspired writer said: "Of making books there is no end." Whether this was "forth-telling" or "foretelling," it is certainly very largely true to-day. Books come from the press by the thousands and the reading public devour these productions like some mighty monster ever calling for more. How rare is it that we get a book out of this vast flood of new productions that lifts one up and gives inspiration and renewed vigor to one's life and thinking!

Literature has been commercialized. It has remained until these modern times for writers and authors to become wealthy from the products of their pens. Now men turn out all sorts of productions like some manufactory—the greater the production, the greater the sales and the greater the income. Publishers, many of them, have gotten at the same thing. All kinds of alluring titles, bindings and illustrations are invented to beguile the reading public.

How much chaff comes along with it all! We read a book review. The review is misleading. The title sounds great. The book is bought. Then the purchaser finds that the bookseller has the money, but he has some kindling. There are times when this chaff is sold in places where we might very reasonably look for something better.

From whence is help to come? Motion pictures, many of them, are censored. But one would hold up his hands in horror at censoring books. When is the public to be dealt with squarely about this matter? The author of a good book blesses the reader thereof. A good book is a great help. A bad book is a menace. Its author is stealing character. A book of chaff is a deception and a thieving of the money spent for it, and of the time spent in reading the same. Think while you read.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: It has been my purpose to write something about the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, which met at the beautiful "old-new" town of Columbia, on the east bank of the Pearl River, in Marion County, on Dec. 9, 1914. All agreed that the beautiful new church built during the year by Brother Sharbrough and his faithful flock is one of the most conveniently arranged and handsome houses of worship that we have in the Mississippi Conference. The people of Columbia did themselves great credit in every respect in entertaining the Conference. Every preacher had the best home, and the attendance on all the sessions of the Conference and the preaching services was the best it has ever been my pleasure to see. Brother Sharbrough was an ideal host.

The spirit of the Conference was very brotherly indeed; so much so that the few things that might have marred the occasion were overcomo in the spirit of abounding good-will that prevailed.

Something over fifty changes were made—not an unusually large number. I think that as few mistakes were made as one would see in any like number of appointments, and I predict that the outcome at the end of this year will prove this to be the case.

The presidency and preaching of Bishop Denny came up to the highest mark of expectation. He is thoroughly at home in the chair and is a master of assemblies. He is conscious of his strength, but it is plain to everyone that he is governed in his dealings with men by a spirit of brotherly kindness and Christian courtesy. He regards the other man. His sermon on Sunday morning was great in all respects. In length it was an hour and forty minutes, and yet none tired during this time, and many said he could have gone on longer. The Bishop's descriptive powers are great, and at many times his sermon was as beautiful as an idyl.

All through the sermon there was sermonic value and merit, but at the close it was plain that all along he had been leading up to the master thought, and then it burst out into a great climax as he unfolded in syllables of fire the unsearchable riches of Christ, that led Paul on from one point to another, until he stood beside the block, and from that lofty point of observation saw the prize, bright and shining, of his and our high calling.

As Chas. E. Jefferson says, "A sermon like that is not a manufactured product, but a spiritual creation. It is not a machine which a man can construct in his sermonic shop, and set it running in the pulpit, like the electric toys which one sees sometimes on the corners of the street. A sermon is an exhortation, a spiritual vapor emerging from the oceanic depths of the preacher's soul. It is an emanation, an efflux, an effluence flowing from an interior fountain hidden in the depths of personality. It is an efflorescence, an outflowing of beautiful things hidden in the blood. It is a perfume from spiritual blossoming in the garden of the heart. It is a fruit growing on the tree of a man's life. 'A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.' Make the tree good. A sermon is the life-blood of a Christian spirit.

"A preacher dies in the act of preaching. He lays down his life for his brethren. He saves others, himself he cannot save. The pulpit is a Golgotha in which the preacher gives his life for the life of the world. Preaching is a great business. To do it as God wants it done, a preacher must be a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

W. H. SAUNDERS.

Fernwood, Miss.

If you mean to act nobly, and seek to know the best things which God hath put within the reach of men, you must fix your mind on that end, and not on what may happen to you because of it.—George Eliot.

Church News

The Dallas District of the North Texas Conference reported last year 1859 accessions to the Church.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate says that there are 2500 women preachers in the United States.

The Supreme Court of Missouri has handed down a decision affirming the union of the Cumberland and Northern Presbyterian Churches to be valid.

The number of Sunday school scholars in Canada is 729,000, and in the United States the number is 15,597,718. These figures do not include officers and teachers.

The Virginia Conference, which is the largest in the Connection with the exception of the North Georgia Conference, has within its bounds 119,764 Church members, and 91,827 Sunday-school scholars.

The Florida Conference has again levied a $2000 assessment for the benefit of the Florida Christian Advocate. We do not doubt that this was wise action. Southern Methodists, as a rule, do not seem to appreciate as much as they ought the service rendered by their press and the importance of strengthening it.

Bishop Murrah, Bishop McCoy and Bishop Mouzon have been named as a special committee to suggest a new course of study for our young preachers. Their recommendations will be considered and passed upon by the entire College of Bishops in their annual meeting next May.

Dr. W. E. Thompson, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Tampa, Fla., states that in a recent local option election in that city he challenged a voter, accusing him of having voted six times, but was met with the indignant protest that he had voted only four times. It was a pity that this citizen should have been done such an injustice.

A New Year's card distributed among his parishioners by Dr. C. L. Goodell, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church of New York City, contained the following suggestive message: "We face a year of crises among Nations, Churches, and individuals. It will be a great year for those who greatly meet it, and a sad year for those who drift or shirk. Let us call in every reserve and mobilize our army for a victorious campaign."

Zion's Herald says: "An item is going the rounds of the religious press to the effect that Rev. Abijah Hall, a Boston Baptist minister who died recently, was the first to preach on Boston Common. With the Jesse Lee and Whitefield celebrations fresh in mind, which brought out the preaching of these Methodist worthies on Boston Common before Mr. Hall was born, the item is, to say the least, an interesting piece of misinformation."

From the Los Angeles Conference notes in the Pacific Methodist Advocate, we take the following: "Victor Hugo's masterpiece will be given in dramatic recital by Miss Eleanor Miller, of Pasadena, next Sunday afternoon, January 3, in Trinity auditorium, at 3 o'clock." Let the theater-going Methodists be a little patient, and if the present trend of things keeps up, possibly they will soon be able to get what they want in their churches without having to go to the opera-houses.

A distinguished Methodist minister, in speaking to us a few days ago of Bishop Hoss' recent article in the Nashville Christian Advocate on the relation of the two Episcopal Methodisms in the United States and his brilliant paper on Bishop McKendree in the last number of the Methodist Review, said: "He may have the body of a superannuate, but his head has not lost any of its vigor." This remark was fully justified by these two recent utterances of the Bishop, which are up to his very best standard. What a thinker and writer he is! We do not believe that American Methodism has ever produced a larger man.

While going to the train in a motor bus at Flemingsburg, Ky., some days since, Bishop E. R. Hendrix came very near being hurt. The conveyance, for some reason, turned over and several persons were injured, but the Bishop, we are glad to state, escaped with only a good shaking up. The Central Methodist Advocate says: "On the previous evening, in speaking to his congregation about the providence of God, the Bishop said that it had been his daily prayer for years that he would be able to continue his life journey without having a fractured bone in his body, and although he had traveled widely by land and sea, God had so far answered his prayer in that particular, and that he was trusting that the same divine favor would continue to the end."

A NOTE FROM BROTHER CRISLER.

My Dear Doctor Meek: Please state through the Advocate that the Hattiesburg District is the only one in the Conference that has paid anything up to this time on Missions. Three pastoral charges, namely: Collins, Broad Street and Main Street, have made substantial remittances. The district stewards held a most pleasant and satisfactory meeting on January 6. The presiding elder's salary was fixed at the same as last year and a general forward movement along all lines was planned.

Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, always brotherly, acceptable and strong as a preacher everywhere throughout the District, is growing more and more in the affections of the preachers and people.

Revs. W. L. Linfield and H. Mellard are hard at work and have made a fine impression on their congregations and upon the people of the city. Their own people are enthusiastic in their praise.

We had a great congregation present on Sunday, January 10, at 11 o'clock. The year promises to be the best yet. Yours sincerely,

Jan. 12, 1915. CHAS. W. CRISLER.

WHEN THE METHODIST HOSPITAL WILL OPEN.

"When will our Methodist Hospital open?" is the question coming from every quarter.

That depends entirely on the result of HOSPITAL DAY throughout the patronizing Conferences. It is for the Church to say.

The plan adopted by the Conferences was formed especially for the "hard times." That excuse is gone. The plan is simple, reasonable, workable.

It does not expect large contributions; it therefore seeks to multiply the small ones. This means it must multiply the collecting agencies.

Each Sunday school is asked to raise from $5 to $100, according to its ability, for the Methodist Hospital, and each church is asked to give from $10 to $250, as it can afford. Any school or church can do this much and should. There are good people in every community who will give this much individually if they are asked.

The plan puts it up to the pastors and Sunday school superintendents If they get in earnest they will get the cash. They can clear themselves by putting it up to their churches and Sunday schools in an enthusiastic spirit.

Though the amount asked of each church and school is so small the total from the four Conferences will enable us to make necessary alterations and additions and open our Hospital with capacity for 75 or 80 patients—if only each does what is asked.

How vitally important it is that each church and Sunday school do what it can. That is all that is asked. Surely the Church has a right to expect this now.

We appeal to you, beloved pastors and superintendents, in behalf of the suffering ones it is our duty to heal; we appeal to you in behalf of the honor of the Church which has been the instrument in God's hand of saving your souls; we appeal to you in the name of Him who died for your redemption, and commanded, "heal the sick," in the same sentence with "preach the gospel." See that YOUR churches and YOUR Sunday schools do all they can.

If any one who wants to do this is troubled about how to proceed I will be glad to give him a plan that will raise twice the money asked.

Remember, you are helping determine the date for opening the Methodist Hospital. God help you to hasten it! H. M. ELLIS.

THE HAGUE CRITIC.

We suggest that critics instead of being divided into "Higher and Lower," be divided into "Hague Critics"—and the other kind. The "Hague Critic" is the kind that conducts his campaign against the Bible according to the Hague rules for war. Among the provisions of Article 23, it is prohibited "To make improper use of a flag of truce, of the national flag, or of the military insignia and uniform of the enemy." In fact it is an order that combatants shall fight under their own flag and in their own uniform. What a revolution would be wrought if the Hague Rules should obtain in religion. Will it not be well to ask the critic when next you hear one getting ready to fire his opening gun: "Are you a 'Hague Critic'—or the other kind?"—The Bible Champion.

SUNDRY THINGS.

Mr. Editor: I think occasionally. Fact! May be hard for you or your readers to believe. True nevertheless.

J. T. Lewis is interested in the undergraduates. This is well. That his interest is real was manifest while he was on the Committee of the Second Year. I remain on that committee. It is my purpose to give the brethren written examinations this winter by correspondence. I believe all the committeemen might do this. It will be a part of my business this year to see that no man fails in the Class of the Second year. Let's help these brethren. They need it. They deserve it. We owe it to them.

Another Matter: A copy of the North Texas Annual Conference Minutes is before me. I note that page 3 is given to "Standing Rules." Some of them are as follows:

Rule 1.

"Each Presiding Elder at his District Conference shall appoint a District Auditor who shall collect the reports of the preachers of that District to the Annual Conference, audit the same and hand them to the Statistical Secretary by the close of the first day's session of the Annual Conference."

Rule 11.

"The Joint Board of Finance and the Board of Education shall make their reports to the Conference not later than the Saturday morning session; said reports to lie on the table until the next regular session."

Rule 12.

"The appointment to the Presiding Eldership shall automatically vacate membership on any Conference Board."

There are also other worth-while rules, but these suffice.

Our Conference gives the last few hours to thinking about the appointments. Even when little is said some mighty loud thinking is done. We rush through important business with an assurance that is more apparent than real. We have a whole year to wonder why we did some things and to resolve not to do so any more. But we do. We have done so, and we will continue to do so it seems. We are capable of doing business well. Our business is worth doing well. So far as the whole Conference is concerned some of our most important business is not given due consideration. We ought to do more business the first four days or stay a day longer. It is impossible to get a clear idea of a voluminous report read under the stress of an "APPOINTMENT HOUR." Yet I witness that again and again; important matters are passed with such a rush that 75 per cent of the brethren know practically nothing of them. Vote? Yes, they vote with enthusiasm, and hope no other report will be so long, "lest we fail to make that train."

We consider long and well the appointments, long and well the Standing Boards (the P. E's even had a meeting prior to the session of our last Conference to make the nominations, which was well). Why not give something like the same consideration to all the more important reports? "The Boards do that?" Sure! If that is all that is necessary why not just read them for the information of the Conference and let them go to record without vote. Just as well do it. EVERY ITEM THE CONFERENCE CONSIDERS SHOULD BE WELL CONSIDERED. Let us take more time, brethren. We will then do more satisfactory work, more abiding work.

One Other Thing.

It is to be greatly regretted that adverse criticism has gotten into the prints with reference to our Bishop Waterhouse. That he purposely wounded the most sensitive soul in the Conference is not believed by any man who had personal contact with the man. His whole bearing was kind, considerate, brotherly. I am sure others felt as I did when the appointments were read: "A brother made them. He was and is one of us. Blessings on him and us, and the charges to which we go."

Finally.

The editorials that appear in our Conference Organ please me so much that I must say, Amen! A great good year to you personally, Mr. Editor—and the banner year for the Advocate.

Postscript.

My second fourth year begins here so favorably, my people have received me so kindly that I am more than pleased. You know a "fellow" sometimes desires a change till he gets to Conference. There, about the second or third day, he "has a change of heart." Usually he has had a talk with his presiding elder. Ahem! Well, in this case I didn't ask for a change. I was on "easy street." But now I am so pleased with the outlook that I can truly say, "I was never happier or more hopeful in all my ministry." I AM GLAD I DO NOT HAVE THE MAKING OF MY APPOINTMENT. As an addenda I will sign my name. You may print it addendum if you prefer the singular form.

THE ONE PER CENT ASSESSMENT.

Our Methodist people are quite familiar with the fact that nearly all of the Annual Conferences have been providing for the growth of the Superannuate Endowment Fund by making assessments for it. Not all, however, have done so. Some four of the larger and three of the smaller Conferences have not acted favorably, if at all. The last General Conference enacted a provision that each Annual Conference should make an assessment for the Superannuate Endowment Fund "of a sum not less than one per cent of the amount paid for ministerial support." This, as will be seen, includes presiding elders' salaries with pastors, being one per cent of both. Calculated on the basis of the figures of 1913, this gives an assessment of more than $50,000 per annum. Attention of all the Conferences was called to this law in the annual communication sent out by the Board of Trustees. We are fearing that a few of the Conferences overlooked this item or misconstrued its meaning. Will not the presiding elders please see that this very important matter is not left out or minified and save our Conference Claimants from inadvertent wrong at the hands of their friends?

Please refer to Paragraph 515 of the Discipline of 1914 and see the law which is sufficiently explicit for the guidance of every one. Let me insist that every preacher give attention to this important matter, even though your Conference may have made an oversight. If, perchance, this assessment was not sent out, you can proceed, nevertheless, in accordance with the law, which is to safeguard the interests of the Conference Claimants.

JNO. R. STEWART,
Sec. Superannuate Endowment Fund.

THE HARRISTON (MISS.) CHARGE.

Since so many of the brethren are speaking complimentary things about the people in their new fields of labor, I feel that a word from this charge will not be out of order. The people received us cordially and seem to be glad that we are to labor together another year in the Master's vineyard. Many of them are very thoughtful in dividing the good things that they have to eat with the preacher's family. I received a box by mail the other day from Harriston, filled with fruit cake, Christmas cake and sauce, the best that I ever saw; and sometimes we get a package by freight. The people are good to us and I love them and am glad of the privilege of serving them another year.

I see many things that look encouraging and if there are any spots on the new year's sun I am not able to see them with my naked eye and I am not looking for a telescope to search with. The joys of the past year I cherish, but the disappointments I try to forget. The task before us is great and the effort should be greater. Every year should be a year of advancement, and every day a day of service. We have no time to brood over the past if we gather the blessings of to-day.

There's a little bug called the fire-fly,
The lightning-bug by name;
He does not whistle, nor sing, nor cry,
He does not bite nor sting.

He does not work like the ant and bee
When all is clear and bright,
He seems to say, "Nobody needs me,
I'll wait till it is night."

Then the bats that see his tiny spark
Will catch him every time,
For he rambles about in the dark
With his headlight on behind.

Yes, the past was glorious, and it is pleasant sometimes to reflect on its glorious history; but in so doing we might catch a glimpse of the phantom of lost opportunity. Our safest way is to shine ahead and "walk in the light," and strive to make the future more glorious. Our only opportunity is to-day, and our only hope is in the future.

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and not to wait."

Lorman, Miss. J. F. CAMPBELL.

BILLY SUNDAY-GRAMS.

Any man that turns his back on Jesus Christ goes to hell.

The hour has come for plainness of speech on the part of preachers.

I know it's almost unpopular now to be enthusiastic for Jesus Christ.

I tell you, people of Philadelphia, you can't go against God without you get it in the neck.

I hear Churches praying for an ingathering when they ought to be praying for a sifting.

Some people, some preachers, do not believe in revivals. Neither does the devil, so you are like your daddy.

If you haven't got religion enough to believe in revivals, get down on your knees and pray until you get it, or get out of the Church.

There isn't a Church to-day that wasn't born in a revival, and there isn't a Church to-day that, if it doesn't believe in a revival, won't die of dry rot.

If good preaching could have saved Philadelphia, she would have been in heaven long ago. You need something else, and I'm going to give it to you.

I'm in favor of everything the devil is against, and I'm against everything the devil is in favor of—the dance, booze, the theater and the people who have cards in their homes. Oh, yes, I'm against that rotten, licentious, hell-begotten dance that sends more girls to hell than anything else.

Too much of the preaching to-day is too nice, too pretty, too dainty—it does not kill. A little grammar is all right, but don't be a big fool and sit around and criticise because the preacher gets a word wrong. I never think of grammar, I just gather up the truth and hurl it out, and if it is jagged on the edges, why, let her rip, that's all.—North American (Philadelphia).

The day is coming when all rebellion shall cease, and peace be everywhere. The day is coming when all sorrow shall vanish, and joy be everywhere. The day is coming when all discord shall be silent, and angels leaning from the battlements of heaven shall hear but one word encircling earth with music: "All nations shall call Him blessed."—Henry Van Dyke.

"Every sower must one day reap
Fruit from the seed he has sown.
How carefully, then, it becomes us to keep
A watchful eye on the seed, and seek
To sow what is good, that we may not weep
To receive our own."

REV. ROBERT J. HARP, D. D.

By Rev. J. L. Pierce, D.D.

R. J. Harp was born in Lawrenceburg, Tenn., on April 29, 1829. He died in Shreveport, La., on July 24, 1914.

These dates cover a long period; and were filled by almost every character of service possible to a Methodist Preacher, both in times of war and peace. He was a circuit preacher, station preacher, presiding elder, editor, and publishing agent. These various and honorable positions he filled with his wonted energy, fidelity, and force.

He was past middle life when the writer first knew him, and filling the responsible position of presiding elder of the Shreveport District. His lifelong habit of faithful service to God and man had generated a store of resources and of force, apparently inexhaustible. His heart glowed to the end with the delight of service. He was a standing illustration of the Master's principle that the greatest vindicate their title to high distinction by being the servant of all.

He had learned to look at man through his Master's eyes. To him no human being was common or unclean. He saw the divine in all men, or the possibility of the divine, and strove with unwearied patience and skill to develop and perfect the divine lineaments. Like his Master, "The bruised reed he would not break, the smoking flax he would not quench." He propped the reed and healed its bruise; he fanned the flax and poured in oil, until the one became a rod of Jehovah's strength and the other a fire burning brightly to his praise.

Brother Harp's mind was of a decidedly logical cast. This characteristic of his mind, together with the fullness of his information, enabled him to discuss his text with a thoroughness and satisfactoriness seldom equaled.

While magnifying his office as a preacher, and equal to the demands of the many styles of preaching, he yet liked the evangelistic style most of all, and in this style of preaching was at his best. He knew the worth of a human soul—knew its divine origin and immortal destiny. He knew that beside the soul, the astonishing magnificence of creation is poor. When laboring therefore directly for the salvation of the people, he drafted upon all his powers of body, mind, and soul, and poured forth all the treasures of his spirit with a white-hot intensity that was in the highest degree effective. The writer has heard him when he was visibly clothed with divine power and preaching with the plainness, the power, the persuasiveness, and effectiveness of a prophet or apostle.

He was unusually devoted to his family. They were his constant pride and joy. The wealth of love lavished upon them was reciprocated; each member of his family loving him with a strength and tenderness and constancy, that time, nor eternity, nor life, nor death, could shake or quench.

The long and useful and honorable earthly career is ended. "Home he has gone and taken his wages." When he drew near the gate of pearl, it opened inward—opened by the hands of those he had helped and who preceded him and awaited his coming. He entered vast and bright eternity all vivid with God's love—where instant vision is perfect knowledge and perfect joy; and where immortal labor is to him, immortal rest.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

To the friends of Christian Education, and all readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, I wish to say, Port Gibson Female College still prospers. The holidays have passed into history and the girls have passed from their homes to the college again. All the pupils who were with us—88 in number—except one have returned to the college. That one is detained because of sickness in her home. She writes that she will return, as soon as she feels safe in leaving the sick ones. Three new pupils have enrolled.

Teachers and pupils, all look refreshed after a two weeks' rest from books, and "grits and gravy," and have entered upon the duties of the schoolroom with such alacrity as indicates willingness and determination.

We are glad to report to our friends that we have not had a case of serious sickness in the college this session, and that almost every girl that is with us has increased in weight since she came to us. The ruddy cheek, the elastic step, the hearty laugh, the quick repartee, the rich, innocent jokes, the ready obedience, diligent study, and satisfactory recitations, all of which indicate good health, perfect contentment, and cheerful, faithful work, are in abundant evidence.

We believe these facts should convert every one who may feel at all skeptical as to the need of Port Gibson College and its possibilities.

The institution fills a niche in the educational propaganda of the Church that no other institution is filling. It reaches a territory that no other school belonging to our Church reaches, and is bringing Christian education within the reach of dozens of the deserving youth of our race, who would, without the existence of the institution, be deprived of such privileges.

Because of these facts, we appeal to our friends to come to our aid. We need your prayers, your patronage, your money. We have room for just a few more in the hoarding department. In order to get these places filled, the college is offering scholarships to a few. If you have a friend whom you wish to help, write us, at once, for a scholarship.

Talk for the College, pray for the College, patronize the College, pay to the College, visit the College—in fact, do all you can to help build up the College, and we will give to the Church, Christian workers who will be quite helpful in the Lord's vineyard. Respectfully,

T. J. O'NEIL, President.

TAKES ISSUE WITH DR. ELIOT.

The "new religion" of Dr. Charles Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, came in for severe criticism yesterday in the sermon of the Rev. Dr. G. Woolsey Hodge, rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension, of Philadelphia.

"If the Church is impotent," he said, "it is because men like Mr. Eliot stay outside of it and create schisms. He tells us to return to the true teachings of Christ. Well, if Christ is only a rude Galilean peasant, as he says, why should this advanced world turn to him? His claim that Christ is not divine is not worthy of discussion.

"He insists that all progress is due to science. Then why has not science stopped this war? Finally, Dr. Eliot describes the blessings of his new religion, tells us that it molds human character. Isn't that just what Christianity always has done? Belief in Christ and his teachings and institutions has been the most potent force the world has known in the development of character. It conquered heathenism in the old world; so, I believe, it will triumph over the recrudescence of heathenism in the modern world."—The North American.

AT HOME WITH JESUS.

On Wednesday morning, two days before Christmas, at 8 o'clock, the whole community was shocked and greatly grieved when the sad intelligence was given out that dear little William, the three and a half year old son of Brother and Sister Reagan, and a grandson of Brother and Sister T. W. Holmes, had been badly burned.

In a few moments the house was crowded with neighbors and friends offering sympathy and assistance. Everything that loving hands could do was done to relieve the little sufferer; but notwithstanding these tender ministrations and the skill of the faithful physician, at 8 o'clock at night—just 12 hours after the terrible happening—the little spirit took its flight back to God who gave it.

William was the idol of his father and mother, grandparents, and every member of the family, and quite a pet and favorite with the whole community. He was a bright, attractive child and we all miss him. The writer misses the little voice that so often called out as he passed the house, "Hello, Brother Cottrell." The grief-stricken father said, "If it were not for the fact that he has gone to a better world, I could not stand it." The broken-hearted mother, as she bowed in humble submission to God's will, said, "If he must go, I thank God that he did not let him stay here and suffer." But for the quick response to his screams and the extinguishing of the flames by his aunt Eugenia, the accident would have been more horrible. The little fellow, no doubt, was impressed that he would not get well; as from time to time he would call out to different members of the family and friends to hold him, seeming not to want to show any partiality between "Grand-daddy," "Papa," "Edna," "Fannie," "Maxwell" and others. He called several times for his baby sister to be brought in so that he could see her. Just before the end came, as they had been talking to him about Santa Claus and Christmas presents, he said, "Grand-daddy, I won't need any Christmas presents now."

No, dear little William will not need them now; he has gone to enjoy the bliss and happiness of an endless Christmas in the presence of the One whose birthday we were just beginning to celebrate, and who, while on earth, said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me." His little body was laid to rest in a little vault in the Tylertown cemetery; the funeral service, which was held in the Methodist Church, was conducted by the writer, assisted by Brother T. H. King, who for four years was the beloved pastor of the family. It was also the desire of the family, that Brother J. E. Williams, one of their former pastors, and the two faithful Baptist pastors, Brothers Quinn and Davis, should be present and take part in the services, but it was impossible for them to do so. Four little boys served as pall bearers. A number of children, among whom were some of his playmates, sang "Little Feet Be Careful."

The large crowd attending the services, and the beautiful flowers, were evidences of love, sympathy and friendship. But, sorrowing ones, you must look to Him who is the source of all comfort; his grace is sufficient; bow in humble submission to his will; look away from the grave; Little William is not there, but in the bright beyond where you have a new tie that binds you to the skies. "He shall not return to you, but you shall go to him." So,

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence,
He hides a smiling face."

"Is it well with the child? It is well."

WHICH?

Two lovely baby-houses were sent to two small maids,
Alike in every feature from chairs to window shades.
Exactly one month later, as I was passing by,
These self-same baby-houses I happened to espy.
The one was dusted neatly, the beds spread up with care,
The counterpanes were spotless, the curtains fresh and fair;
The dollies looked so happy, with garments whole and clean;
A dwelling kept more tidy, for dolls, I've rarely seen.

Now turning to the other, I saw a scattered heap
Of dishes, clothes and dollies, with gray dust coated deep.
The remnants of a party had not been cleared away,
And upturned chairs and tables in sad confusion lay.
I'd ask all dolls the question, had I the choice to give,
In which of those two houses would you like best to live?

FREDDIE'S MISTAKE.

Julia Graydon.

Freddie lived in the country, but he was spending the winter in the city with Grandpa and Aunt Nellie.

He was just six years old and had never been sick in bed, and he loved to be out of doors. So Aunt Nellie used to take him a walk every day. And one cold afternoon just after a snow-storm they were taking their usual walk, and Freddie was using his bright little eyes as he always did.

Suddenly he said: "Aunt Nellie, what does that card mean? That one on the red brick house."

Aunt Nellie looked across the street, and then she said: "Why Freddie, that means that a little boy or girl is sick in that house and can not go out to play."

Then Freddie said: "Spell it, please." So she spelled it, "M-u-m-p-s—mumps." And by and by, when they came to another house, Freddie said: "There is another card; spell that one;" and this time she spelled, "M-e-a-s-l-e-s—measles."

And as they passed other houses with cards on them Freddie said finally: "My! Aunt Nellie, what a lot of sick little children, I'm glad I'm not sick. See me slide"—and he slid across the pavement in pride; his little cheeks as red as roses.

Then he stopped, and looking up at her, said: "Oh but I'm sorry for them!"

"Freddie," said Aunt Nellie, "would you like to do something to make them happy?"

"Yes, indeed," said Freddie, delighted at the thought.

"Well," said Aunt Nellie, "I'll write down their numbers. I mean above the doors, do you see, Freddie?" And she began to write.

This was new to Freddie, for in the country where he lived they did not have numbers above the doors.

When they reached home Aunt Nellie brought out some pretty post-cards, and some red linen books, and then she said: "Now, Freddie, you and I will make scrap-books for the little sick boys and girls." And after they had finished pasting them in they put the books in envelopes, and inside she wrote, "With love from Freddie Holmes."

The next day Freddie went out for a walk with Mary, the cook, and when he came back he ran up-stairs and wrote something on a piece of paper, and then he asked Aunt Nellie for another book, and some cards. And the next day Freddie received some nice little notes from the mammas of the sick children, but among them was one in an old man's writing, and this is what it said: "Thank you, dear little boy, for the pretty scrap-book—and I wish you'd come to see me sometime. I had a little boy like you long ago."

Aunt Nellie looked astonished as she read it, and then she said: "Why, Freddie, did you send Mr. Griffith a book?"

"Yes, indeed, Auntie, I did," said Freddie. "His house had a red card on it, and his number is 212."

Then Aunt Nellie began to laugh. "Oh, Freddie," she said, "that was not a sick-card; that card said, 'For Rent,' and that means Mr. Griffith is going to move to another house." And she did not tell Freddie how afraid some of the children were of old Mr. Griffith. Instead, she said: "You can go to see him sometime, dear." But to Grandma she said: "To think that our little Freddie has helped to soften his heart, and all the time he thought he was sending a book to a sick child. We'll let him go over to-morrow to see Mr. Griffith."

And as for Freddie, he was not sorry, either, that he had made a mistake, for Mr. Griffith gave him a beautiful train of cars, and begged him to come again.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

John and James were twins, fourteen years old. Their father was very wealthy. On every birthday they expected a costly present from him. A week before they were fourteen they were talking over what they most wanted.

"I want a pony," said James.

"And what do you want, John?" asked his father.

"A boy."

"A boy?" gasped his father.

"Yes. It doesn't cost much more to keep a boy than it does a horse does it?"

"Well no," replied his father, still very much surprised.

"And I can get a boy for nothing to begin with."

"Yes," replied the father hesitatingly. "I suppose so."

"Why, papa, I know so. There are lots of 'em running around without any home."

"Oh, that's what you are up to, is it? Want to take a boy in and bring him up, do you?"

"Yes, sir. It would be a great deal better than the St. Bernard dog you were going to buy me, wouldn't it? You see, my boy could go about with me, play with me—and I could do nice things for him too, couldn't I? He could go to school, and I could help him with his examples and Latin."

"Examples and Latin? God bless the boy! What is he aiming at?" And Judge Roding wiped the sweat from his bald head.

"I know," laughed James. "He wants to adopt old-drunken Peter's son."

"Yes, papa, 'cause he is running about the streets as dirty and ragged as he can be. And he's a splendid boy, only he can't go to school half the time 'cause he hasn't anything decent to wear."

"How long do you want to keep him?"

"Until he gets to be a man, father."

"And turn out such a man as old Pete?"

"No danger of that, father. He has signed the pledge not to drink intoxicants, nor swear nor smoke, and he has helped me, father; for when I wanted to do such things he told me his father was once a rich man's son and just as promising as James and I."

"Do you mean to tell me that you ever feel like doing such things as drinking, swearing, smoking, and loafing?" asked his father.

"Why, papa, you don't know half the temptations boys have nowadays. Why, boys of our set swear and smoke and drink right along when nobody sees them. I am trying to surrender all—every vice, every bad habit. I don't see how I could enjoy a dog or a pony when I know a nice boy suffering for some of the good things I enjoy."

"You may have the boy, John. May God bless the gift!"—Pure Words.

DICK'S HAPPY THOUGHT.

CHILD LIGHTS.

Rev. W. H. Huntley, D.D.

"Death came"—what mother brings him forth and how?
Sin bears him here, in groans and heavings of despair;
Ill nursed at anguished breasts, denied all share
In heaven's plenty Yonder, Then, or Now.

Sad death! no Childhood sweet, no shape, no color clear,
No Love to suckle at, no sun kiss and no smile;
No cup but hemlock black, no appetite but guile;
All mildew-poisoned and all witherings of fear.

"Christ came"—A Baby to a mother's tender breast.
See! as he comes, that Star, that silver winged throng
Shaking the world with glory-sounding far the Song
Of Life in place of death; instead of Labor, Rest!

Time is no Father while through sin he undertakes
The span of Life to sunder—run Life's short stream dry;
Come little tiny master! bridge the stream and lie
Dear in Love's lap which Home and Mother makes!

Always the babe wins through; Home stirs and lives
To store best essences, and drink deep of joy;
To music silence breaks, cleans Love of cold alloy;
Draws full from Heaven's heart, and Gives—and Gives!

And Jesus, Child of God, come span the canyon space,
Death's gulph to cut off men from Love and God;
Your tomb his prison make, firm tread the sod,
And Christlike keep the child which saves alive the race!

HOSPITAL DAY.

Remember Hospital Day for the North Mississippi Conference is "Sunday, January 24, 1915, and on circuits each succeeding Sunday till each church has held its HOSPITAL DAY." It is to be hoped that all our pastors in North Mississippi will observe this day. Read Brother Ellis' statement on page four.

ALL BUT FORGOTTEN.

In the Centennial of the Battle of New Orleans, recently observed in the city of that name, the stirring scenes of a hundred years ago were recalled and the deeds of Old Hickory were justly celebrated. In an imposing river parade from the city to Chalmette, in orations there, in the raising of British and American flags, and the salute of guns, in the splendid drilling of our troops, and the concourse of vast throngs; in the moving pageant representing the return of the victor, and his reception in what is now Jackson Square; in brilliant banquets and receptions, in great parades by day, and fireworks display by night, all honor was paid the memory of the iron man who saved the metropolis of the South a century ago.

But the name of another man, just as true and just as brave, who did his best, and fell mortally wounded in the hour of defeat, was hardly mentioned, except of necessity in connection with the hero of the day.

But after the fireworks had gone out in the darkness, and the shouting had died, after the great centennial of Jackson's victory was over, a few persons proceeded quietly down the Mississippi to the ruins of an old plantation house, where Sir Edward Packenham died a hundred years ago. There in tribute to the brave soldier who gave his life on a foreign battle field, they hung a wreath of flowers on an old dismantled pillar.

There is something fine and touching in that simple but beautiful act. The world justly rewards the victor, but often unjustly forgets the nobility of the other man who went down in defeat. From the vantage of history and earthly glory, Sir Edward Packenham had the misfortune to be the vanquished.

But he gave his all to his country in the hour of defeat. And no man can do more or nobler than that. For this is the best gift man can make, the gift of self. It is high heaven's best gift. Perhaps when God declared his purpose of saving the world, there was no lack of shining volunteers, who begged each to fly to earth and give himself to the fallen races of men, though the mission would bring bitterness, and in the end death and shame. But not one of ten thousand angels, whose hearts were purity, and whose breath was love, would have been heaven's best gift. But that was heaven's best gift hanging on the cross, for it was the gift of God himself. And let us see, no matter what the verdict of history may be, that the man is truly great who does his best, who gives himself.

That wreath, faded by now, hanging on the pillar of a ruined plantation house down the river, reminds the writer of the all-but-forgotten grave of a man who is doubtless little known to fame. Some one in love long ago, spared not expense to mark his last resting place in a fitting way. Cribbing of marble surrounds the grave, and a heavy marble slab entirely covers it. But after the allotted span of life that loving friend must also be gone, and few are left to know who was buried there three score and ten years ago.

An elderly lady, living in the neighborhood, said that she had heard that he was reared in a wealthy home, and against his parents' wishes, gave up affluence to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The grave is just outside a brick wall which shuts in another burying place, the remains of an old neglected cemetery, thick now with large trees and undergrowth, enclosed in the edge of a large field lying outside old Cheneyville, Louisiana. Being informed of the grave, the writer and one other visited the spot one beautiful Sabbath afternoon. Finding a way through the wire fence, and pushing away the briers and undergrowth, we stood in the sacred, but well-nigh-forgotten spot, with bowed heads. After a time we began the loving but tedious task of deciphering the inscription on the heavy slab. The ravages of time, and the weather stains of seventy years, had blackened the marble, and all but erased some of the letters. But at length we thought we made out the following, which I have to-day taken from a memorandum made at that time:

SACRED.

to the Memory of the

REV. ALEXANDER M. WHITNEY, who died Oct. 6, 1842, in the 26th year of his age, while at his post as an Itinerant Minister of Christ in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"Ah! stop dear friend, and read in mine, your certain doom.
May not your body soon like mine be in the tomb?
Why there, you read, I died in youthful bloom.
How soon the grave will bind you to its gloom.
I left my home to preach Earth's Savior Crucified,
Then closed like him my work by prayer and died.
Now, reader, strive in heaven with me to meet
Earth's blood-washed throng at the Redeemer's feet.
Your joys eternal there shall be complete."

May God help each one who reads these lines to heed the last three inscribed on the tomb of this all-but-forgotten follower of our Lord and Master who faithfully gave himself! R. H. H.

SOME FACTS CONCERNING OUR NEGRO POPULATION.

We have on our table the "Negro Year Book for 1914-15," edited by Monroe N. Work, of the Tuskegee Institute of Alabama. It is a paper-bound volume of 448 pages and contains a vast amount of information concerning our colored population in the United States. Those who are given to looking at the situation and doings of the Negroes in their own immediate locality and, without further investigation, reaching the conclusion that they are making little or no progress as a race, would doubtless have their eyes opened by a careful reading of this book.

Take, for instance, the question of illiteracy among the colored people of the United States. The percentage of Negro illiterates ten years of age and over was in 1890, 57.1; in 1900, 44.5; in 1910, 30.4. The amount of money applied to their education is constantly increasing, as is also the enrollment in the schools maintained for their instruction.

Not less remarkable is the showing made by the Negroes in the acquisition of property. From 1900 to 1910 the value of domestic animals owned by Negro farmers increased from $85,216,337 to $177,273,785, or 107 per cent; the value of poultry from $3,788,792 to $5,113,176, or 35 per cent; and the value of implements and machinery from $18,586,225 to $36,861,418, or 98 per cent. During the same decade the value of the lands and buildings owned by colored farmers advanced from $69,636,420 to $273,501,665, or 293 per cent.

The Churches seem also to be making steady progress in their work among the Negroes. There are now among them not less than 4,250,000 communicants, and they have in their Sunday schools approximately 1,750,000 pupils. The value of their church property is between $55,000,000 and $60,000,000.

In two respects, however, the trend among our colored population seems to be in the wrong direction—that toward divorce and crime. The marital statistics among them are as follows:

"In 1910 there were 3,059,312 Negro males 15 years of age and over. Of these 1,083,472 were single, 1,748,228 were married, 189,970 were widowed, and 20,146 divorced. Of the 3,103,344 females, 15 years of age and over, 823,966 were single, 1,775,949 were married, 459,831 were widowed, and 33,286 were divorced."

The record of crime since 1870 shows an increase of percentage considerably larger than that among the native American whites. The following are the figures for our colored population, North and South, per 100,000 of our colored population: 1870, North 372, South 136; 1880, North 515, South 221; 1890, North 773, South 284; 1904, North 765, South, 220; 1910, North 722, South 323. It is fair, however, to say in this connection, that the percentage of crime among the Negroes of the United States is less than that among the emigrant races now coming to this country. The commitments to prison in 1904 per 1000 of population were as follows: Mexicans, 4.7; Italians, 4.4; Austrians, 3.6; French, 3.4; Canadians, 3.0; Russians, 2.8; Poles, 2.7; Negroes, 2.7. Even as regards the matter of rape the Negroes have the advantage when a comparison is made with most of these foreigners who have found a shelter beneath our flag.

Students of the Negro problem in the United States would do well to secure and carefully examine the "Negro Year Book for 1914-15." It is the best edition of this annual that has been issued and ought to have a place in the library of all who are interested in moral and sociological questions as they relate to our cosmopolitan population. The price is 25 cents; by mail, postpaid, 35 cents. Order of the Negro Year Book Company, Publishers, Tuskegee, Ala.; or if you prefer, doubtless our Publishing Agents, Messrs. Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., and Dallas, Texas, will take pleasure in procuring it for you.

THE GRENADA COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

Writing under date of January 15, Rev. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College, says: "I send you a statement showing the amounts received for Grenada College up to the present time. As we all know, the time was about the worst we could have had for taking a collection, but I have heard from 42 churches. The collections on both the Conference subscription and "College Day" reports to date total a little over $900, with perhaps some $1500 yet to be collected. The result is good under the circumstances. The matter should be brought to the attention of every congregation in the Conference before it is dropped."

We most heartily concur in the last suggestion made by Brother Countiss. Even if the remaining subscription of $1500 should be paid in full, we would still be $600 short of the $3000 that we set out to raise. We therefore hope that the pastors in the churches which did not take a collection on "Grenada College Day" will do so at their earliest opportunity and report to Brother Countiss. We must push the campaign to wipe out this indebtedness, and there should be no delay in carrying it to a successful completion. We can do so if we will.

THE PROHIBITION "FLYING SQUADRON."

On next Sunday, January 24, the "Flying Squadron" of prohibition speakers who are to tour the State of Louisiana next week will begin their operations in New Orleans. A number of speakers of national prominence will be heard in the Churches of this city both in the morning and evening, and in the afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a great mass meeting at the Athenaeum, which will be addressed by ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, of Tennessee, and Dr. P. A. Baker, President of the National Anti-Saloon League.

The following assignment of speakers to churches in the city has been made: Dr. A. C. Bane will speak at the Prytania Street Presbyterian Church at 11 a. m., and at the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church at 7:30 p. m.; Dr. A. J. Barton will speak at the St. Charles Avenue Baptist Church at 11 a. m., and at the First Baptist Church at 7:30 p. m.; Sam Small will speak at the First Methodist Church at 11 a. m. and at the Canal Street Presbyterian Church at 7:30 p. m. Dr. G. W. Morrow will speak at the Rayne Memorial Church at 11:30 a. m.; Dr. G. W. Young will speak at Felicity Methodist Church at 11 a.m.; Rev. A. W. Turner will speak at Parker Memorial Methodist Church at 11 a. m.; Dr. Baker and Ex-Governor Patterson will speak at the Third Presbyterian Church at 11 a. m.

We hope that the pastors and people in the other towns at which these speakers are to appear will make complete preparation for them, and that next week will be a memorable one in the history of the prohibition movement in Louisiana.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Oklahoma Conferences have adopted the Texas Christian Advocate as their organ, instead of the Western Methodist.

The Methodist Ministers' Wives' Association will meet with Mrs. Ahrens, at 1645 State Street, on Thursday, January 21, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Rev. A. B. Barry, of Pachuta, Miss., has our thanks for 5 renewal subscriptions from his charge. Brother Barry has a habit of taking care of all the interests of the Church where he labors.

Rev. H. F. Tolle states that his work at Biloxi, Miss., has opened up very satisfactorily. Brother Tolle is one of the best equipped and most successful young ministers in the Mississippi Conference.

Bishop W. A. Candler is in Cuba, having gone there a few days ago to hold the Cuban Mission Conference. He was accompanied by Dr. A. J. Lamar, of Nashville, Tenn., one of our Publishing Agents.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our growing young pastor at Myrtle, Miss., reports that the work in his charge has started off well. He continues to remember the Advocate in his rounds with gratifying success.

"Everything is moving on well at our new University." So writes Rev. J. D. Wroten, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is attending the Theological Department of Emory University, at Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. J. A. Wells, of the Topisaw (Miss.) charge, has our hearty thanks for several subscriptions to the Advocate, recently sent us. He states that he hopes to be able to do much more for our paper this year than he did last year.

Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, La., says: "The people here gave us a kindly reception upon our return to them for the second year. My work is in fine shape and we are expecting great things from the Lord during the Conference year now beginning."

The address of Rev. F. L. Applewhite is Route Number 3, Tylertown, Miss. We acknowledge our indebtedness to Brother Applewhite for 7 subscriptions to the Advocate sent in on the 15th inst. He regards the outlook in his charge as encouraging.

Rev. R. P. Neblett has entered energetically upon his work at Ripley, Miss., and is expecting a successful year in his new field. His congregation observed the "Week of Prayer" with beneficial results. Brother Neblett's letter brought us two subscriptions to the Advocate, for which he has our thanks.

Since the session of the North Mississippi Conference at Starkville, Rev. G. A. Baker has been changed from Mooreville, Miss., to Cochrane, Ala., an appointment in the Columbus (Miss.) District, and has now taken up work in his new field. He will tell us of his reception and the outlook in his charge in the next issue of the Advocate.

We acknowledge the reception of the following invitation: "Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Baker request your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Gabrella, to Dr. Linwood Lewis Johnson, on Wednesday afternoon, January 27, at 2 o'clock, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Acona, Miss." We extend in advance our congratulations and best wishes.

A friend sends us the following announcement of interest: "Dalton Davis Crichlow was born on January 21, 1915. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Crichlow, of 924 Lowerline Street, New Orleans, and a grandson of Rev. R. A. Davis, of the Louisiana Conference." We congratulate the happy parents and grandparents upon this addition to their family circle.

From Coldwater, Miss., Mrs. C. L. Graham writes as follows: "The people of our church are delighted with Brother Roberts. His sermons are excellent and we feel that we have one of the very best pastors and preachers that can be found anywhere. Our Sunday school is better than it usually is at this season, and our Woman's Missionary Society has had the best year in its history."

Rev. J. W. Ramsey is already quite busy in the work at Heidelberg, Miss., his new appointment. He gave us 1 new and 2 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate last week. He continues to be pleased with the outlook in his field.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, the Sunday School Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, will reside at Sardis, Miss. Let his correspondents take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Rev. A. L. Davenport sounds an optimistic note from the Chalybeate circuit, one of the appointments of the Corinth (Miss.) District. He is hard at work and confidently expects a fruitful year in the Master's service.

Rev. Paul F. Daniel, Logansport, La., says: "We have been given a hearty welcome by the good people of this charge and the prospects indicate a great year's work." We trust that Brother Daniel's expectations will be fully realized.

We take the following from Herald-Progress, issued at Sumner, Miss.: "'Bishop Waterhouse made it possible for me to have a happy Christmas,' said an enthusiastic Methodist brother on Monday. 'How so?' we asked him. 'Why,' he replied, 'by sending Brother Sharp back to Webb. I could not have been happy this Christmas if Brother Sharp had left us.'"

The Editor spent the latter part of last week in Central Mississippi looking after urgent personal business, and did not return until last Monday. The charming editorials in this issue of the Advocate, signed "R. H. H." were written by Rev. R. H. Harper, the brilliant young pastor of the Parker Memorial Church of this city, who generously came to our assistance.

Rev. C. T. Floyd reports that his second year on the Abbeville (Miss.) charge has begun with promising prospects. He has called for lists of our subscribers at all his appointments, and states that it is his purpose to keep the Advocate circulating among his people. We dare say that our mailing files will soon show the good results of Brother Floyd's work in behalf of the Conference organ.

Bishop J. H. McCoy, of Birmingham, Ala., spent Sunday, January 10, with the congregation of the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, Miss., and in a few minutes raised more than $10,000 for the magnificent new house of worship which that flock has partially completed. Among the most liberal contributors were Major R. W. Millsaps and Mr. T. B. Lampton, who gave $1000 each. These were additional contributions. Major Millsaps gave $10,000 to this enterprise in the outset. The pastor of this church is Rev. W. G. Henry.

Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Educational Secretary of the General Board of Missions, will make a speaking tour through Louisiana within the next few days. He will deliver addresses at the following places: Houma, January 23; Alexandria, January 24; Monroe, January 25; Shreveport, January 27; New Orleans, January 29 and 30. Dr. Rawlings is a speaker of unusual force and eloquence, and there is a treat in store for those who are so fortunate as to hear him.

Mrs. Mary F. Savage, of Biloxi, Miss., writes: "I voice the sentiment of the membership of the First M. E. Church, South, of Bay St. Louis, in stating that we are glad that Rev. G. A. Guice has been sent to us for another year. As a preacher Brother Guice is conscientious, forceful, and eloquent, and as a pastor he is all that could be desired. The parsonage, presided over by Sister Guice and her sister, Miss Ella Costley, has ever a cheerful fireside."

In renewing the subscription of Sister S. D. Dove to the Advocate, Rev. T. M. Bradley says: "The year that the Advocate was born Mrs. Dove, then a girl, subscribed to it, and she has been taking it ever since. Her health is not very good now." We are pleased to have this long-time friend of the Advocate to continue with us as a reader. We regret to know that she is not strong physically, and we pray heaven's richest blessings upon her in life's even-tide.

The Board of Education and the Legal Conference of the Louisiana Conference held meetings in New Orleans last Tuesday. The following brethren were present at the session of the latter body; Dr. J. M. Henry, Chairman; Mr. W. W. Carre, Secretary; Dr. R. H. Wynn, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, Mr. S. H. Meyer, and Mr. W. B. Thomson. We also noted the presence in the city of Rev. C. A. Battle, of Baton Rouge, who came to attend the meeting of the Board of Education.

Rev. W. S. Shipman, presiding elder of the Durant District, writes as follows: "Please state that the quarterly conference at Louisville, Miss., has been changed to Tuesday, February 16. At the recent meeting of the pastors and laymen of the District at Ackerman, it was resolved to make an every-member canvass in every charge on March 10. I trust that every pastor will commence at once to get ready for this day. Appoint your missionary committees immediately, brethren!"

Rev. L. P. Wasson, of Shaw, Miss., who is one of the choice young men of the North Mississippi Conference, sends us several subscriptions from his charge, and makes the following reference to his work: "I am giving a dining to my board of stewards to-day. We have been hard hit by the stringent times, but are making a vigorous fight to keep our church up to its former standard." Brother Wasson serves an excellent people, who will not let the interests of Zion suffer if it can possibly be avoided.

We have lately received a copy of the Seed Catalogue for 1915 of Arthur G. Lee, a seed merchant of Fort Smith, Ark., and wish to compliment this firm on the issuance of this beautiful book. Mr. Lee has been in the seed business in Fort Smith for sixteen years, and has succeeded in building up a very large and satisfactory business, which has increased every year. It is not likely that such a business could be developed without fair dealing and good seed. This industry also has to commend it to our people the fact that it is in the South.

Under date of January 16, Rev. G. A. Morgan, of Opelousas, La., writes as follows: "Brother May, our presiding elder, came down this morning to hold our first quarterly conference. During the session of the conference he received a message that his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Alva May, was very ill. A few minutes later he received another message announcing her death. He returned home this afternoon." We greatly regret to be informed of this sad occurrence, and we extend to Brother May and all the other sorrowing relatives our deepest sympathy.

Rev. B. W. Lewis reached his home at Utica, Miss., on December 24, and was met at the train by a number of his parishioners and conducted to the parsonage, where everything was in readiness for him and his family. He states that he has never found anywhere a kinder and more generous-hearted people than those in his present charge. We regret to know that Brother Lewis has had considerable sickness in his family since Conference, three children and Sister Lewis having been quite ill. We are glad to state, however, that the children have all recovered and that Sister Lewis is now improving.

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, of West Point, Miss., favored us with a club of 7 subscribers from his charge last week. Referring to his work, Brother Mitchell says: "We enter upon the new year with bright prospects of success. We have been given a most cordial welcome, and the people vie with each other in showing us courtesies." Brother Mitchell is one of the strongest preachers and most successful workers in the North Mississippi Conference, and he had a new church enterprise well under way at West Point, Miss., when the Great War in Europe, which has so paralyzed the industries of the South, unexpectedly began.

Rev. J. T. Leggett, of Meridian, Miss., who as a presiding elder ranks among the very best, writes: "Our Pastors' and Laymen's meeting, held on January 6, was a great success. The attendance was large, and the harmony and enthusiasm surpassed that of any similar meeting I have ever witnessed. We have made a most excellent beginning in the work, and I shall hope for the accomplishment of large things for the Master during the year!" We regret to know that Brother Leggett has been indisposed with la grippe, and we trust that he will soon be entirely rid of all the effects of that tenacious malady.

We take the following from a personal letter written by Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Memphis, Tenn., to the Editor on January 15: "Rev. J. G. Johnson, of the Black Hawk circuit, who helped me to secure $1000 for our Methodist Hospital enterprise on the Potts Camp circuit, when he was the pastor there, and who helped me to get a like amount from the people of Acona, Miss., last year, is in the Baptist Hospital here now, where he recently underwent a very serious but successful operation. He is doing well." We regret to know that Brother Johnson found it necessary to submit to surgical treatment, but are happy to be informed that he has passed safely through the trying ordeal. Let the brethren remember him in their prayers.

Under date of January 16, Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., writes as follows: "That princely layman, Mr. P. H. Enochs, of Fernwood, Miss., and I have for the past few years taken a sincere delight in giving the Cuban Conference a dining during each annual session. The greatest honor ever conferred upon me was that of making me an honorary member of the Cuban Conference. I was due in Cuba this year, but could not go. Next year I shall go even if I have to take steerage passage. You must go with me. To-day at 3 o'clock p. m., in Pinar del Rio forty missionaries will pray for Brother Enochs and myself. We are both enjoying religion and are happy!" The dining referred to by Dr. Cooper was given this year in the Hotel "El Globo." One of the menu cards lies before us and, so far as we are capable of judging (we do not know Spanish), the brethren had a sumptuous repast. Referring to these annual dinings given by Dr. Cooper and Brother Enochs, Rev. E. E. Clements, the pastor-director of Candler College, says: "This occasion has come to be one of great inspiration and uplift, binding the brethren together in closer bonds of fraternal love."

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. Otherwise the obituaries will be edited down to 200 words.

IVAN CALHOUN FERGUSON, infant son of Rev. and Mrs. T. A. Ferguson, of Williamsburg, Miss., was born on Nov. 21, 1914, and went to heaven on Dec. 31, 1914. His little body was laid to rest in the Holmesville, Miss., Cemetery on his father's 27th birthday, Jan. 2, 1915. For one month and 10 days the Lord let the little fellow remain with his parents, and then took him to heaven to await their coming and that of other loved ones. The precious little fellow is safe and happy, and I pray that the Lord will bless and comfort the parents and enable them to say from the heart, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." The thought of heaven will now be more precious to the parents than ever before. They cannot now afford to miss the goal.—
J. A. WELLS.

On the 11th of December, 1914, God called Sister Beard from her quiet, sweet home in Monroe to one of those beautiful mansions with him in the great life beyond. Just why he did this we cannot tell, but we do know that she was a patient, uncomplaining, Christian sufferer. For months she calmly and heroically waited for God's call, knowing that she could never again be well in this life. Most devotedly did she love her husband and two children, but she was completely resigned to go when he called. She was a Christian in the most spiritual sense. Before her marriage to Mr. J. C. Beard on April 5, 1887, she was Miss Lena Rivers Thompson. She was born in Summit County, Miss. on Feb. 18, 1869. She became a member of the Methodist Church when a little girl and was ever a true, loyal member and faithful Christian until her death. She left a husband and two daughters; their loss was heaven's gain.
C. C. MILLER.

Miss MALINDA PHARR was born on July 5, 1885, her parents being J. Holland and Glady Montgomery Pharr. From her infancy she was enveloped by the influence of a fine Methodist home, and the result was she purposed in her heart that the God whom her parents worshiped should be her God. She never lost sight of that purpose. On Sept 15, 1897, she united with the M. E. Church, South. That day she began her service to the Church and to God. She was a good woman, a faithful Christian, a devoted daughter, and the comfort of her parents in their old age. She stayed with them 29 years 4 months and 27 days. A sad accident caused her death. On Nov. 25, 1914, her clothing ignited, causing a painful burn from the effects of which she could not recover. On Nov. 26 we conducted her funeral service. It was a sad Thanksgiving day, because she had gone from us, yet a day of thanksgiving because of the knowledge that we shall meet again. Her pastor,
W. W. HARTSFIELD.

Mrs. STELLA BAILEY was born on June 20, 1881, and died on Jan 10, 1915, at Oakdale, La. The body was brought to Pollock and interred in the Pollock cemetery. Sister Bailey leaves to mourn her death, her husband, Mr. J. P. Bailey, and two little girls, one 5, the other 8 years old; her mother, Mrs. J. L. Pinkston, and a sister, Miss Gladys Pinkston. Sister Bailey was not a member of the Church, but she had been converted and the Methodist Church was her choice. She left a very sweet testimony by stating she was perfectly prepared to meet her God. Shortly before her death she tried to show her mother a beautiful light that was shining in the room, but the literal eye could not see it. The burial service was conducted by the writer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Mauser of the M. P. Church, after which the Woodman Circle took charge of the body and performed the last sad rites. May the God of all comfort bless the bereaved hearts, and may they realize they have now one more tie in Heaven.
E. G. WOOD.

Mr. G. B. JOYCE was born on Oct. 30, 1827, in Upson County, Georgia. His father moved to Talbert County while he was an infant. In this county he remained until he was 12 years of age, after which they moved to Alabama, where he remained until he was grown. He was married to Miss Keziah Jane McGowen in St. Austine, Texas, in August, 1864. To this union were born nine children—six boys and three girls. His wife passed peacefully to her reward in Leesville, La., Dec. 12, 1899. Rev. C. C. Joyce, their oldest son, and a minister in the Congregational Church, died three years after his mother's death. Two boys died in infancy. Three daughters and two sons are still living. Brother G. B. Joyce gave three years of active service to the Confederacy, and was a brave and daring soldier. After the war he and his wife made their home in Natchitoches Parish near Grappes Bluff, for over forty years. The old farm still remains. Brother Joyce was a strict member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and served on the board of stewards in Davis Springs Church for a number of years. He died on Dec. 23, 1914, aged 87 years 1 month and 20 days. For several years before his death he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. W. M. Brown, in whose home he died. The writer had been acquainted with Brother Joyce for many years. When I preached in that country 25 years ago, I frequently made his house my home. He and his family were dear friends of mine. I thank God I had the pleasure of seeing him face to face last summer, while helping Rev. G. D. Anders, in a revival meeting at Davis Springs. Brother Joyce was a true Christian, a good neighbor, a good citizen, a loving husband, and devoted father. His life was above reproach, and his influence for good continues to live. He died in the triumphs of a living faith. He leaves 31 grandchildren and 8 great-grandchildren. One of his sons-in-law, Rev. E. C. Cargill, is a noted Presbyterian minister, residing and preaching at Clarendon, Ark. Farewell dear friend for a while. We shall meet again in that house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. With much love and sympathy for the bereaved,
S. D. HOWARD.

APPRECIATORY OF DR. BLACK.

(Resolutions adopted by District Stewards of the Jackson, Miss., District, held in Jackson on Jan. 5, 1915.)

Whereas Dr. W. C. Black, who had been a member of the Mississippi Conference for a number of years, who was the father of our Canton pastor, M. M. Black, passed to his reward on yesterday, Jan. 4, 1915, being a gain to heaven but a great loss to us, therefore,

Resolved 1. That we tender to Brother M. M. Black and the other relatives of our departed brother our heartfelt sympathy.

Resolved 2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Brother M. M. Black, and also to the other relatives, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to the Jackson papers.

SAGE TEA PUTS LIFE AND COLOR IN HAIR
Don't stay gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens hair so naturally that nobody can tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET
Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.
Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF
Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

From the Field.

New Augusta, Miss.

We find everything in good shape for a successful year's work. Although we have been here only a few days, we feel thoroughly at home. The ladies had all in readiness for us in our cozy little home. Everything was clean and comfortable, and a delightful supper had been prepared. We cannot see that they left a single thing undone. Every one is unusually good to us. I will do what I can throughout the year for the interests of the Advocate.—Robt. E. Selby.

Porterville, Miss.

We arrived at our seat of labor about Dec. 28, and were very cordially received. We have some good people here. We are trying to get our plans for the new year perefected, so as to bring the best possible results for the good of the people and the advancement of the Master's kingdom. We are pleased with our work, and are happy to know that we have a place in which to labor in the Master's vineyard. This is our first year in this kind of work. Pray for us.—R. H. Clegg, P. C.

Pride Ct., La. Conf.

Dear Brother Meek: I will drop you a few lines. My work this year is on the Pride Circuit. I had the first quarterly conference in the Baton Rouge District, which was held at Oak Grove, on Jan. 9, 1915. We had a fine conference and a splendid dinner. Brother Bowman and I came back to Pride Sunday and he preached in the Baptist Church, as we have no church at Pride yet. We are planning to build one, however. We have an acre of land and a part of the lumber on the ground.—G. E. Craig.

Verona, Miss.

I desire to say that I am very proud of my new home—Verona. I find some of the best people in the world here. They all know how to be good to a preacher and his family. They have already filled the pantry with good things to eat and have furnished some nice new furniture and bedding. I think we have the most delightful home in the Conference. I am looking for a good year in every respect. If you wish to spend a few pleasant days away from home just come to Verona and put up with us. I find that Rev. A. W. Langley is in high standing with the people here. He had been their pastor for the past four years. This is the best charge in the Aberdeen District.—W. N. Dodds.

Fernwood, Miss.

Everything looks promising in this charge and our people are planning to do a good year's work, and to make it the best year in the history of this appointment. Brother Selby, our presiding elder, was with us on the 9th and 10th inst. On the 9th our first quarterly conference was held, with a good attendance of the officials. Earnest and painstaking care was given to all the interests that come before a first quarterly meeting. On Sunday, at 11 a. m., Brother Selby preached on the all-important question of pastoral evangelism, and made a strong and earnest appeal for the pastors to give more attention to doing the work of an evangelist. He made it appear very plainly that success in this line of the pastor's work depends very largely on the attitude of the laymen of the church, or pastoral charge. Brother Selby's ministry always inspires our people, and they are glad for the time of his visits to come.—W. H. Saunders.

Wheeler, Miss.

Please allow me to say a few words through your paper. I was read out for Wheeler at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference. I returned home at once and commenced to get ready to move.

We arrived at this place early in the afternoon of Dec. 19, and were met by two of the brethren, who escorted the preacher and his family over to the parsonage. There we were given a cordial welcome by a number of ladies who had a blazing fire and a fine dinner prepared which we greatly enjoyed. Everybody has met us with a smile and we are trying to smile in return. We set to work on the third Sunday in December and last Sunday we finished one round. Everything indicates a good year. I never felt so optimistic in all my life. The congregations have been fine so far, in spite of the unfavorable weather. We intend by the grace of God to make Wheeler circuit one of the banner circuits within the next four years. We have the material to do this. Look out, brethren; watch us grow!—A. H. Henry.

Booneville, Miss.

Since I last wrote the Conference year of 1914 has passed, and at its close many changes took place. A number of preachers were moved. Among the number was our pastor, Brother S. A. Brown, who had served us for four years so faithfully. He was given a good appointment at Okolona, where he met with a hearty welcome. There is no truer man than S. A. Brown, and may God bless his labors and give him souls for his hire! Booneville got in his place one of the strongest and most efficient men of the North Mississippi Conference, for which we thank God and the Bishop and his cabinet. There is no man in the Conference we would rather have had sent us than Brother Lee M. Lipscomb, and he and his excellent family on their arrival here were accorded a hearty reception. He has preached for us four times and had large and appreciative congregations at each service. His sermons were strong and effective, and all whose good fortune it was to hear him were delighted. He has entered into his work in earnest and we predict for Booneville a great year, and under the leadership of Brother Lipscomb we will have it if we will do our part; for without the support and help of the church neither he, nor any other minister can accomplish much. This writer has been personally acquainted with Brother Lipscomb for seventeen years and knows him to be a man of God and an untiring worker in the vineyard of the Master. The board of stewards at its first meeting fixed his salary at $1500, an increase of $150. Brother Mitchell held our first quarterly conference on January 3 and 4 and preached two excellent sermons. We are happy over the appointment of Brother Lipscomb to Booneville and are looking for and expecting large things as a result. Pray for us.—Hardy W. Rees.

The Sunday School.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL

Promotion Day.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

One of the most important and interesting days of the year in a graded Sunday school, is Promotion Day. This day in the Sunday school corresponds to Commencement day in our high schools and colleges, and the same changes automatically take place, viz: the entire graded department of the school moves forward one year. The students advance, the teachers do not. They remain in charge of the same grades as teachers of the students advanced to them. Without promotion day properly observed no school can rightly claim to be graded, however well the pupils may be classified, and no matter how well adapted may be the lessons. It would be like a primary teacher in one of our public schools teaching the primer year after year to the same pupils, never passing them on to the first and second readers. The system would fall down. At the close of the first year, the pupils cease to be first year pupils, are supposed to be prepared for something higher, better adapted to their stronger mentality, and ample provision should be made for their advancement to a higher class.

Promotions are made from class to class, and from department to department. When from class to class within a department, promotion is had by giving to the advancing pupil a promotion card properly filled out and signed, stating that the pupil is advanced from a certain class to another certain class within a certain department; while if the promotion is from a department to a department, a diploma is given stating that fact. These promotion cards are about the size of an ordinary post card, while the diplomas are about twelve by fourteen inches and beautifully engraved. These supplies are to be had from our own Supply Department at Nashville, and cost but little.

Every graded Sunday school has a standard of efficiency for each department adapted to the age and mental development of the pupils. Among the things usually required—adapted to the ability of the class, of course—are attendance, punctuality, deportment, lesson, contribution, handwork, correlated work, etc. On each of these and other points, as may be agreed upon between the departmental superintendent and her teachers, each pupil is graded each Sabbath by the teacher. In some schools monthly reports are sent to the parents as in the day schools. On promotion day, percentages are run up, and pupils are promoted with or without honor as they have made the required percentage for honor. This percentage is, of course, placed low enough to be in reach of each pupil. Each school has its own way of indicating honor pupils. Some give to honor pupils the certificates as above referred to, passing the pupils who did not make the required grades on to the higher class without certificates. Other schools give to all promoted scholars a certificate, but indicate on the certificate of the honor pupil that the required honor grade has been made. This is usually a small gold star put in a prominent place on the certificate. This I think is by far the better plan.

As the school term of a graded Sunday school begins with the first Sunday in October, Promotion Day is the last Sunday in September. All the classes then having been reorganized, are ready for the new work. Much should be made of this day. If at all possible, the entire school should be assembled in the Sunday school auditorium by departments and classes, and after a program more or less elaborate, the importance of the day should be stated by some one who can do so clearly, and, beginning with the Cradle Roll, promoted students should be called by name, one by one, and certificates given. Teachers can then take charge of their classes and make such announcements as they deem needful.

Brother pastor and superintendent, have you tried this? It will gratify you greatly to see how thoroughly your school will become imbued with a spirit of enthusiasm. It will surprise you to see how hard your students will strive for honorable mention, if you hold them strictly to your standards. Try it.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By R. H. B. Gladney.

The first thing we want to know, is the goal of our General Sunday School Board for this quadrennium, which is as follows:

1. Three hundred thousand increase in our Sunday school enrollment.
2. One hundred thousand increase in the membership of our Wesley Bible Classes.
3. Fifty thousand enrolled on the Cradle Roll.
4. One hundred thousand enrolled in the Home Department.
5. Twenty-five thousand enrolled in Teacher-training Classes.
6. Four hundred thousand increase in the circulation of our Sunday school periodicals.
7. One million dollars from the Sunday schools for missions.
8. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars from Children's Day offerings.
9. An earnest seeking for the conversion of all the unconverted connected with our schools and the deepening of the spiritual life of all our people.

The Sunday school's goals for the North Mississippi Conference during the present year are as follows:

1. Ten thousand increase in our Sunday school enrollment in the different departments.
2. Fifty standard Sunday schools.
3. Five thousand conversions.
4. Two thousand dollars from Children's Day offerings.

This is a great task, but we know that God is able to do these things, and exceeding abundantly more, if he can find a few people that he can use each day. Some hints as to how we may do this work will be given soon. Let us pray, plan, and purpose to do great things for our Lord.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER LONG.

Dear Brother Meek: God has permitted me to see more wonderful progress in our Sunday school work this last year than ever before. I have been impressed with the great number of young men and women who have attended our conventions. Some have criticized our work and have made some statements that are far from correct, which reflect upon the whole leadership of the Church. I have kept my mouth closed, but have looked to God in prayer and have seen his movements go on. A friend said the other day: "Long, I don't see how you please everybody, you have so many different denominations and men to deal with." My answer was: I only try to please one, the triune God—Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and oh, how I fail!

Mississippi has as fine a lot of Christian men and women as are in the world. They ought to be led into greater activities. Some of them are being closed up, shut in, by narrow leadership, or better still, by a lack of leadership. Anybody can hold a job, but it takes men of vision and faith in God to do greater things. God help us to loose ourselves. I am glad to count you a friend and co-worker for him. (Matt. 1-21). God bless you! W. FRED LONG.

DON'T RISK YOUR LIFE

Don't let a wound or bruise or sore go neglected. A neglected skin wound often leads to blood poisoning, a disease hard to cure and sometimes fatal. Treat the afflicted spot with Gray's Ointment; it quickly allays the pain, heals the wound, and frees you from all danger of troublesome after-effects. For nearly a century Gray's Ointment has been an indispensable remedy for all abrasions or eruptions of the skin; boils, ulcers, sores, burns, cuts, bruises, etc. "I have used it in my family for more than fifteen years and have not found any ointment equal to it," writes Mrs. E. E. Coleman, Mt. Jackson, Va. Only 25c a box, at druggists. For free sample, write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

WALNUT GROVE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are back again in our parsonage home at Walnut Grove. To those who are acqnainted with the people of this place it is perhaps unnecessary to say that they gave us a "pounding" and left with us enough groceries to last several weeks. Words are too feeble to express our appreciation of the kindness of the people of both the Methodist and Baptist churches, who left us these nice things to eat. When we returned from the Annual Conference we found in our barn enough corn to last several months and enough syrup to last the entire year; but the best of all remains yet to be told, we found a warm welcome awaiting us. We have now begun work for the new year and the prospect for success is bright. Pray for us, and may God bless you, Brother Meek.

How To Make the Quickest, Simplest Cough Remedy

Much Better than the Ready-Made Kind and You Save $2. Fully Guaranteed.

This home-made cough syrup is now used in more homes than any other cough remedy. Its promptness, ease and certainty in conquesing distressing coughs, chest and throat colds, is really remarkable. You can actually feel it take hold. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough—relieves even whooping cough quickly. Splendid, too, for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it in a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you—at a cost of only 54 cents—a full pint of better cough syrup than you could buy for $2.50. Takes but a few minutes to prepare. Full directions with Pinex. Tastes good and never spoils.

You will be pleasantly surprised how quickly it loosens dry, hoarse or tight coughs, and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, be sure and ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

Dear Dr. Meek: The year starts off well in the Baton Rouge District. Every man is at his place and notes from various points indicate that all are making a good start. Battle at the First Church, Baton Rouge, has gripped the situation, and all are delighted. Cudd, at Keener Memorial, has captured his people, and the work promises well at that point. My second bachelor is hard at work on the Pride Circuit, and the irrepressible Craig is placing material on the ground for a church, and hopes to build a parsonage also.

J. B. Fulton at Baker has made a good beginning, and last Friday a son was born in the Baker parsonage, and all are well.

Brother C. A. Battle has been appointed Commissioner of Education for the Baton Rouge District by Bishop Candler and is getting ready to push that important work.

Yours fraternally,

H. W. BOWMAN.

OUR DAILY LIFE.

Our daily companionship with Him should be the saving power of all our living. We should begin the day in prayer with him. It will strengthen us for the day's tasks and temptations. We should every morning read a few of his words. They will go with us, sweetening all the day and making tender and compassionate our hearts beside setting the tone of all our transactions. Above all, true companionship is to look at all men and all problems through his eyes, to take his attitude toward life. This is to have the mind of Christ. Christ is manifested to the world not through sermons but by the daily witness in our lives. When Christians are all Christlike there may be no more reproach of Christianity by the world. The world may not accept him, but it will know him as he is. Perhaps when he is thus shown forth he may draw all men to him. The world's idea of Christ is largely formed from the lives of his disciples.—From the Congregationalist.

Jesus called his disciples out of the world only that he might send them back into the world. His "Come unto Me" was swiftly followed by "Go ye into all the world."—W. H. P. Faunce.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

ATTENTION, WOMEN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE!

The Mississippi Conference annual meeting will be held in Columbia, Miss., Feb. 5-10. An outline of the program will follow in a subsequent issue of the Advocate.

District Secretaries are urged to be present on the opening day, when Mrs. Hume Steele, our Council guest, will conduct the Workers' Conference.

Auxiliaries are asked to send the names of their delegates AT ONCE to Mrs. Tom Ford, Columbia, Miss.

This should be, and will be if each one of us does her part, the best annual meeting that shall have been held in the history of the Conference.

The Columbia auxiliary with its splendid officers, their pastor, and the people of the town stand ready to do all in their power to make it the best. Let us pray earnestly for God's blessing on the meeting.

Mrs. H. L. McCLESKEY,
Conference Recording Secretary.

FROM FIRST CHURCH AUXILIARY SHREVEPORT, LA.

With the year 1914 the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, began its third year as a united organization of both the Foreign and Home departments.

A steadily increasing membership, an enlarged subscription list to the Missionary Voice, and greater attendance at the regular meetings, all give evidence to the activity of the society.

It has always shared fully in local charitable work, having for years maintained a night school and a city misionary.

To this work has been added a generous share in the expense of the magnificent new church building, including the gift of the organ, so that the financial strain has been heavy but the women are meeting it bravely.

In the pursuance of their work the division of the society into circles, averaging twelve members each, under efficient chairmen has proved a practical plan. The circle chairmen look after their individual members, hold one or more meetings in the homes each month and collect the dues. The society meets twice a month in regular session.

At one of these meetings a literary program is given, followed by a social hour with light refreshments. The opportunity thus afforded for friends to meet and exchange greetings, and to welcome new members has been an especially pleasant feature, and has done much to promote good will and fellowship.

The subject of Christian Stewardship has been thoughtfully presented during the year, and systematic giving has been earnestly advocated, the circle leaders working specially toward that end.

Several distinguished guests have lent inspiration and cheer at the meetings, among them Mrs. Motts Martin from the African Mission fields of our sister Presbyterian Church, Miss Godat, our new representative in foreign mission work; our Conference Corresponding Secretary of Foreign Department, Mrs. A. P. Holt, and the eloquent Mrs. S. S. Harris, for years a leader in our work in China.

We earnestly pray, not for larger opportunities for service, but for deeper consecration and spiritual insight which shall enable us to lay hold of the work all about us and render us more efficient servants in the cause of our Lord and Master.

MRS. NETTA S. EGLIN,
Press Agent.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The auxiliary at Mount Olive has sounded an encouraging note by reporting "all dues, pledges, etc., have been paid in full." Would that all of our auxiliaries could report the same. This auxiliary has been very busy this year. They report: "A nice box sent to the orphanage on the free cars, and have made 34 night shirts for grown boys from material sent from the home. We sent a nice box to the Mary Ellis nursery in October; three times during the year have given substantial aid to a superannuate preacher's family; have had our parsonage painted and put some new furnishings in it. When our new pastor came we tried to give him a warm reception, had fire in four rooms, a hot supper and a generous pounding waiting for him."

As soon as the auxiliaries elect their delegates, and that should be at once, send their names to Mrs. Tom Ford, Columbia, Miss. Our annual meeting will be in session Feb. 5-9 and as several changes will necessarily be made a full attendance is urged. The delegates should come to this meeting instructed by their auxiliaries as to pledge, boxes of supplies, place of invitation for the next meeting, and all measure bearing upon the work advicated by their auxiliary. And let every auxiliary be in constant prayer for the success of the meeting, that the officers and delegates may have divine guidance, and that wise plans may be formulated and carried out.

MRS. J. L. NEILL.

OUR WORK ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

At Alameda, Cal., the work for the Japanese shows a steady growth and deep interest. Here we have the largest Japanese Sunday school in the United States, and the attendance shows how much alive they are. On Sunday, Dec. 6, despite the rain, 62 little Japanese children were present. The superintendent and teachers are all Japanese and it is a beautiful sight to see how earnestly and faithfully they discharge their duties.

This is not the only activity at Mary Helm Hall. A Japanese Woman's Bible Club was organized four years ago. On this same Sabbath, the members met to celebrate the anniversary of their club. They have an enrollment of 40 with an average weekly attendance of eighteen. The rain and cold could not keep these enthusiastic women at home; 17 of them with their babies, braved the weather. As it was a special occasion light refreshments were served, consisting of rice and tea with Japanese cakes.

Our Korean Mission in San Francisco is growing in interest. At a recent Sunday night service 35 men and women and a number of children were present. Two little Korean girls sang in English. It is a fact of some significance that the women are attending these services so well.

CALOMEL DYNAMITES YOUR LIVER! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and You Don't Lose a Day's Work

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working; headache and dizziness gone; stomach will be sweet and bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and can not salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of Calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

PURE RICH BLOOD PREVENTS DISEASE

Bad blood is responsible for more ailments than anything else. It causes catarrh, dyspepsia, rheumatism, weak, tired, languid feelings and worse troubles.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been wonderfully successful in purifying and enriching the blood, removing scrofula and other humors, and building up the whole system. Take it—give it to all the family so as to avoid illness. Get it today.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT STEWARDS AND PREACHERS' MEETING.

In compliance with the call of the presiding elder, Rev. H. S. Spragins, the preachers and laymen of the district met in Clarksdale, Miss., on Monday, Jan. 11. All the preachers, save three, were present and five of the charges were represented by laymen. The afternoon of Monday was devoted to the business of the District Stewards' meeting. On Monday evening Brother Ward preached a very helpful sermon on the Lordship of Jesus in our lives.

Brother Spragins had prepared a very efficient programme for the preachers' meeting, which provided for the discussion of various phases of the three subjects: Evangelism, Missions, and our Sunday School Work. Each speaker showed previous preparation for the work assigned to him, and it seemed that each had sought to make both head and heart preparation for the meeting. It is the concensus of opinion that this was one of the best meetings of its kind ever held in the district. The entire day of Tuesday was consumed with the discussions, but all felt that the day was profitably spent.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas we are facing unusual conditions, as we approach the work of a new year in our district, and whereas we will be called upon for our utmost efforts to render efficient the forces at our command, and that we may bring to full fruition the work, discussions and inspiration of this meeting, therefore be it resolved,

1. That we begin immediately preparations for a great revival campaign in our district, urging every pastor to put himself wholly into this movement.

2. That we heartily co-operate with our Field Secretary, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, in the Sunday school work.

3. That we adopt the monthly plan of contributions to our Orphanage and remit same through Brother Halfacre, our district agent.

4. That we raise our collections, or at least a part of them, at the earliest possible time.

5. That we at once begin a campaign for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and where possible, raise a fund sufficient to put the Advocate in every Methodist home.

6. That we make this a year of great missionary activity in all our charges and that we make a supreme effort by all possible means to bring all our people to a better knowledge of our missionary work, and that we raise our Home and Foreign Mission contributions by the first of April. SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

OUR ACID STOMACHS, GASES OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapepsin" digests 3000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time it! In five minutes all stomach distress will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas, acid, or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach remedy in the whole world and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes, how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.

Woman Finally Recovers From Nervous Breakdown

Impoverished nerves destroy many people before their time. Often before a sufferer realizes what the trouble is, he is on the verge of a complete nervous breakdown. It is of the utmost importance to keep your nervous system in good condition, as the nerves are the source of all bodily power. Mrs. Rosa Bonner, 825 N. 18th St., Birmingham, Ala., says:

"I have been suffering with nervous prostration for nine or ten years. Have tried many of the best doctors in Birmingham, but they all failed to reach my case. I would feel as if I was smothering; finally I went into convulsions. My little girl saw advertised in the papers and I at once began to take it. I continued to take it for some time and now I am well."

If you are troubled with loss of appetite, poor digestion, weakness, inability to sleep; if you are in a general run down condition and unable to bear your part of the daily grind of life, you need something to strengthen your nerves. You may not realize what is the matter with you, but that is no reason why you should delay treatment.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

has proven its value in nervous disorders for thirty years, and merits a trial, no matter how many other remedies have failed to help you.

Sold by all druggists. If first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned.

A GREAT DAY FOR GALLOWAY MEMORIAL CHURCH.

Dear Dr. Meek: January 10 was a great day for Rev. W. G. Henry and the members of the Galloway Memorial Church, of Jackson, Miss.

The First Methodist Church had been razed to the ground and the rubbish removed. A new one, a splendid edifice, worthy of this great city and its great Methodist congregation, was planned. Forty thousand dollars and much labor had been expended upon it. But men became discouraged, and the work was discontinued for a whole year. Services were held in the old Epworth Hall, formerly a church. But it was inadequate. Fourteen hundred members, to say nothing of strangers, could not be comfortably seated. The Sunday school was accommodated largely by the grace of the city school officials, and many of the hardy students of Millsaps College recited in uncomfortable quarters. The great, half-finished building stood as a reproach and a menace. There was neither the sound of the hammer nor the click of the trowel. Silence, ominous silence, reigned. The hearts of pastor and people longed for the completion of the new church. The women of the societies prayed and planned and made a few hundred dollars.

With a wonderful new year resolution, with a re-awakened faith, a new vision, a renewal of confidence, a revival of hope, came the emotion that is always followed by action. A meeting was held. Bishop J. H. McCoy, of Birmingham, a brother beloved, full of gifts and graces, eloquent and earnest, was invited to be present on Sunday, Jan. 10. He came in the spirit and power of the Master. Many of the brethren met him. He delivered one of the strongest and most eloquent of sermons which, though it lasted a full hour, never wearied the audience, but delighted them from start to finish. The sermon completed, an earnest appeal was made and in a short while, the $10,000 called for by the Bishop was subscribed, and four hundred more. An effort is being made to make the amount $15,000.

Work will now be resumed on the new structure and it is hoped that in the near future, the great edifice, one of the most capacious in Southern Methodism, will be completed, received and dedicated to the service of Jehovah. Then will this splendid temple, erected to God and dedicated to his holy name, not only reflect the love and gratitude of those who will worship within its walls, but it will always remind the worshiper of the noble, godly, sainted Bishop whose name, associated with pleasant memories, will be an attraction to its holy precincts. May God's shekinal glory abide in Galloway Memorial Church!

CHURCH EXTENSION AID.

By W. F. McMurry.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Church Extension will be held about May 1. This is the meeting where applications for aid are considered. That those interested may know exactly how to proceed, the following is submitted:

1st—All applications must be made upon the printed form provided by the Board for that purpose. These application blanks may be had without cost by applying to this office.

2nd—After the application has been properly prepared, it should be sent at once to the Secretary of the Annual Conference Board as the following rule provides:

"Every application for consideration at the hands of the General Board must first receive the approval of the Board of Church Extension of the Conference from which it comes, and said approval must be given at the regular meeting of said Board or of its Executive Committee held in the month of March. Said Boards or Committees shall consider all the applications from their respective Conferences and forward such as they approve so as to reach the Board's office at Louisville, Ky., by April 1 of each year. Each application so approved must have the action of the Conference Board written therein, certified by the President and Secretary, and all the applications from a given Conference must be, by the Conference Board, graded and marked in the order of their relative importance, and the Secretary is hereby directed not to put on the Calendar any application not in conformity with this rule."

3rd—The mid-year meetings of the Conference Boards or their Executive Committees are held in March. Do not fail to have your applications in the hands of your Conference Board Secretary by March 1.

4th—Personal representation in the interest of applications by other than members of the Board is not permitted, as the following rule declares:

"The Board has not time to hear oral arguments and statements in behalf of applicants, and while considering applications for aid, its doors are closed. Representations other than those contained in the application can be made in writing or through members of the Board. A different rule would be obviously unfair to applicants too far away or too poor to send representatives."

5th—It is well for building committees to remember that the general financial depression which has embarrassed so many building operations, has also affected the Board of Church Extension, and particularly at the point of its receipts from outstanding loans. It is therefore not in position to take care of all the financial problems arising, many of which are due to the lack of foresight on the part of building committees. Some of our brethren seem to think that there is no end to the Board's resources. This is a mistake.

6th—For further information, application blanks, etc., address W. F. McMurry, Corresponding Secretary, 1025 Brook Street, Louisville, Kentucky.

OBITUARY.

Brother W. W. McGHEE was called home to rest on Dec. 28, 1914. He was born in Pickens County, Ala., on Nov. 17, 1848. He moved from there to La Fayette County, then to Chicasaw County, Miss., and on Nov. 27, 1882 to Philips County, Ark., returning later to Chicasaw County, Miss. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, and a faithful steward in our Church. Brother McGhee had pneumonia and was ill only six days. All was done for him that could be done by his physician and loving friends; but his work on earth was finished and God called him to his reward. His many relatives and friends sadly miss him, yet they mourn not as those who have no hope, but are looking forward to a happy reunion in that home where there shall be no more partings forever.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

Few colleges have made greater progress than Whitworth College in recent years. Second term begins January 27, 1915. Special rates to as many as ten students.

After the many excellent talents which have come to us from Whitworth College during the past ten years, I feel impelled to write you of their superior studentship and splendid preparation, not only technically but musically, which has been on a par with the best schools of this country. I congratulate you upon your splendid music department, and its high standard. In each case students from Whitworth College have been able to take their places in the front rank. It is always my pleasure to indorse Whitworth College.

Faithfully yours,

BERTHA BAUR,
Directress Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

I am very much pleased to say that the work in examination for Professional License by students of Whitworth shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your girls have submitted excellent papers—and several very excellent. I am gratified, really proud, that our church schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

Sincerely and truly your friend,

G. W. HUDDLESTON,
Pres. State Board of Examiners.

Editorial

"My life is but a weaving
Between my God and me;
I may but choose the colors—
He worketh steadily.
Full oft he weaveth sorrow;
And I in foolish pride
Forget he sees the upper,
And I the under side."

The "trail-finders" is Billy Sunday's name for sinners beginning to seek salvation. That sounds decidedly Western, but the designation is a most suggestive one. Man is by nature lost and there is a trail leading to safety and home that he needs to find. Happy is he who discovers and ever keeps in this pathway to the skies!

The Jackson Daily News, referring to human beings, says: "We are merely sheep." This utterance can scarcely be called Scriptural; for St. Matthew tells us that when the Son of man shall take his seat upon his judgment throne and all nations are gathered before him, there will be goats as well as sheep in the mighty throng. Indeed, we are afraid from the way people are living in this day that the latter may be far outnumbered.

It is said that during his four years in the gubernatorial chair in South Carolina, Mr. Blease pardoned 3165 criminals, an average of more than two a day. At one time, shortly before the expiration of his term, he issued pardons to 1534 persons. The new year has already begun to bring its blessings, and not the least of these is the retirement from office of this notorious politician. Let us hope that we shall never see another like him in so high and responsible a place.

Hiram Powers, the American sculptor, once said to Mr. Angell, "The great need in the schools of our country, is the education of the heart." The more skilful the hand the more dangerous the sword it wields. Unless back of the hand is a heart we might better have left the hand untrained. It is exactly so with the faculties of the mind. The mere fact that they have been skilfully disciplined is no guarantee that they will not work the basest moral and social wrong. Out of the heart are the issues of life.—Our Dumb Animals.

We believe that the saints ought to persevere, but not that that they are Divinely forced to persevere. Keeping ever at the work of seeking and serving Christ is the only way to reach high attainments in the Christian life. Holiness and spiritual strength are thrust upon none; they are possessed only by those who have sought them with an intelligent, passionate, and prolonged earnestness. The high prizes of the Kingdom are not for the complacent and easy-going. If the latter enter heaven at all, it will be in the rear of the procession.

SOME VIEWS OF A LIBERAL THEOLOGIAN.

Dr. William Hayes Ward, who for many years was the editor-in-chief of the New York Independent and who is still on the editorial staff of that widely circulated journal, has for some months been giving the public in its columns a series of papers on "What I Believe and Why." These discussions have covered a wide range and have been to us chiefly interesting as a revelation of the extent to which this distinguished gentleman has wandered away from the teachings of orthodox Christianity. In Dr. Ward's paper, published in The Independent of January 18, occurred the following utterance:

"The doctrine of the immortality of the soul is one of vital importance, not because our duty to be good would be different if we believed the soul not to be immortal, but because disbelief in it would lead a multitude of careless souls, perhaps most of us, to say with Paul's too hasty language, 'If the dead are not raised up, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' But yet the nature of the future life is something that we can know very little of from the light of nature, and the purely figurative language of Scripture leaves us with little more than the conclusion which nature gives us—that the God of all goodness will do what is just and right. It is a remarkable fact, accordingly, that teachers of the Christian religion have very nearly ceased to preach heaven and hell to the people; and it must be because they think the doctrine of future rewards and punishments less important and less definite than their fathers did."

What a cold, nebulous, and uncertain thing the so-called new faith is! The placing of the disclosures of the Divine Revelation as to the future life almost, if not quite, on a parity with the faint intimations of nature shows to what an extent Dr. Ward has discredited the Holy Scriptures. To be sure, the sacred writers do not tell us definitely all about man's state and surroundings in eternity, but they do tell us emphatically that he will live forever and give us considerable information on the subject. They have not by any manner of means left the whole future wrapped in doubt. As clearly as language can state it, they have affirmed that the righteous shall be rewarded and that the wicked shall be punished. They state explicity that those who accept and live for Christ will be given an entrance into the everlasting Kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world and dwell therein in peace and joy forevermore.

Dr. Ward's suggestion that it would still be man's duty to be good if there were no hereafter, lacks much of being convincing. It might possibly hold as to one's own personal morality, because of its beneficial effects upon one's self; but what incentive would there be to toil and sacrifice and suffer to benefit others, who themselves were also creatures destined to live for only a few brief years. With man thus stripped of his dignity and glory and reduced to a mere animal, the extent to which others would feel that it was worth while to struggle to help him would, to express it moderately, be vastly lessened. The proof of this is clearly seen in the little concern manifested for the condition of the masses of the people in heathen lands. Perhaps no doctrine that Jesus taught has exercised a more far-reaching influence in human affairs than that of the immortality and infinite value of the human soul.

With the future existence of man and its cognate doctrine of his accountability to God in the day of the judgment swept away, there would be little left upon which to predicate a system of moral obligations, and Dr. Ward does well to express his fear that "careless souls, perhaps most of us," would no longer be constrained to be good. Some may be surprised that he should pronounce the language of St. Paul "too hasty;" but that is rather mild for a progressive theologian. Only a few weeks ago we saw in the Methodist Times (London) where Dr. Jackson, a professor in a Methodist theological school in England, in discussing a certain religious question declard that Paul did not understand it; and going further, he declared that Christ also was ignorant on the subject. But of course our infallible modern scholarship comprehended it fully.

Paul's language was not "too hasty." He was making the point that sacrifice for the Christian cause was not worth while if there be no existence beyond the tomb; and in this he was right. If human life ended at the grave, with the disappointments, and sorrows, and heartaches incident to it, it would not be worth living. It would be the most inexplicable tragedy in the known universe, and the only sensible thing for one to do would be to get out of it the utmost possible enjoyment.

We fear that Dr. Ward is correct in the view that heaven and hell are not as much preached as they once were. And possibly that is one reason why the preaching of this day is less effective than was that of the fathers. And it may also to some extent account for the recklessness with which men, amid life's disappointments, are disposed to commit suicide and plunge into eternity. It is quite noticeable that the ministers who are to-day the most successful in influencing men to forsake the paths of evil still preach vigorously the doctrine of future punishment, as does Billy Sunday, for instance. We saw in a leading secular daily a few days since the statement that Christ never did such preaching. Evidently the writer of that editorial is not much given to reading his Bible. Jesus never used slang, but he was at times terrific in his arraignment of evil and preached hell with a startling and overawing emphasis, as he did in the case of the Rich Man and Lazarus and in his discourses recorded in the ninth chapter of Mark and the twenty-third chapter of Matthew.

If one's belief in a future state were as nebulous and uncertain as that of Dr. Ward seems to be, we can very readily see why one would be but little concerned as to what might await one in eternity. And in our opinion, just such a vagueness of faith is largely responsible for the religious indifference and widespread worldliness now prevailing among the membership of our churches. One of our great needs is to have eternity and its awful isues made more real to us.

NOT IN VAIN.

Helen Hunt Jackson.

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter and to give
A second luster to some tear-dimmed eye;
Or e'en impart
One thought of comfort to an aching heart,
Or cheer some wayworn soul in passing by;
If I can lend
A strong hand to the fallen or defend
The right against a single envious strain,
My life though bare
Of much that seemeth dear and fair
To us on earth, will not have been in vain.

MEDITATION.

Every man knows that there is in us a contradictory element that makes for unrighteousness, an indwelling evil, and how patheticaiiy feeble we are to deal with it! We may do a great many things ourselves, but we never can shake our life free from the element that tyrannizes over us and brings our best imaginations and ideals and designs to naught. Here comes in the grand doctrine of the power of the Spirit for the rescue of our life. * * * And here is my consolation as I battle, day by day, with my baser self: the divine Spirit is with me. Although God's Spirit finds me like a leper's house, it shall leave me like a holy temple, like a stately palace, full of all thoughts and affections and ideals and aspirations that are pure and noble. Do not struggle with yourself by your own power. Identify yourself with the Spirit that worketh in you mightily, and he shall finally present you without "spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing."—W. L. Watkinson (England).

OPEN DOORS.

By Charles MacCulloch.

The doors of most of our Methodist churches are kept closed except on Sundays and a few special occasions. I am thankful the builetin on our church reads: Open daily from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. for rest, meditation and prayer." I am glad the number of our churches is increasing where some part of the building is open every evening. Why not an open house by way of a social parlor and reading room for whoever may be passing by? But too often for the major part of the time the church is closed up tight.

So also in too many of our churches, the door of opportunity to enter the church on probation is closed, except during a brief season of revival effort, and possibly on communion Sundays. In an increasing number of churches, I am led to believe, every Sunday an opportunity is given by the pastor, during the singing of the closing hymn. Quite a large number regularly accept these invitations. Comparatively few persons who are not members of the church attend revival meetings. But many do attend the regular church services, and should be given every possible opportunity to join the church. The Holy Spirit may be striving with the unsaved when we least expect it, as the two following incidents will show:

A young man not at all satisfied with the manner of life he was living, resolved that he would start in the new year by "turning over a new leaf." He went into a Methodist church where a watch night service was being held, to make known his purpose. The usual order for such a service was carried out—songs, sermon, love feast, testimony and closing prayer at midnight. But no opportunity was given to any person in the large audience who desired to begin the new year with a new life to make it known. This young man, and possibly others, went out that new year night with the same old life. Too bad the minister was so interested in the well-being of the saints that he forgot all about the sinners present.

The pastor unavoidably detained from being present at his regular mid-week prayer meeting, left an old doctor, who was a local preacher, to take charge. After reading a passage of Scripture and making a few not very inspiring remarks, the doctor sat down, saying: "The meeting is now open; go on with it." It did not go on very well, and those taking part between long pauses seemed to do so from a sense of duty rather than as a privilege. At last it was time to close. The doctor got up and said in a stereotyped way: "I don't suppose there is any one here who wants to get religion, but if there should be, they will manifest it by rising." To the surprise of every one, a young man stood up. The meeting assumed a different character at once. The young man was invited to come to the altar. Prayer was offered in his behalf, and he went forth rejoicing in the Lord. He united with the Church and became an active Christian worker.—New York Christian Advocate.

A VETERAN PREACHER ON PREACHING.

The following extract is from the pen of Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte, an ex-moderator of the United Free Presbyterian General Assembly of Scotland, on the kind of preaching he would set himself to do if he were permitted to begin his life over again. It it counsel worth heeding from a veteran preacher without a peer in the Scottish metropolis. He says: "If I were young again like you, I would do differently. I would not lecture so much on Eurociydon, and on the times when the gospels were writ, as I used to do, and as William Law compiains that so many of the young ministers of his day did. But I would labor like Richard Baxter, and with all my might, at things necessary; and, as a dying man to dying men, I would preach on the great texts, as Matthew Arnold somewhere counsels all preachers to do. I would preach on Richard Baxter's Sin and Misery, and on Pascal's profound inquietude, and on his angelic greed of happiness; on imputed and on infused rightcousness; on evangelical holiness and everlasting iife; on secret and unceasing prayer, and on the text: 'Lord, teach us to pray;' on humiiity, on patience, on meekness, on inoffensiveness, on forgiveness of injuries, and on doing to others in everything, as we would have them do to us; and on love to God and our neighbors as ourselves. For my part, nowadays, I care less and less for any other preaching than that, be it ever so schoiarly and eloquent and true. And it is for that reason that I never weary of the great Puritans, and of those preachers and writers who have in them the Puritan element of an intense inwardness and reality."—Christian Index.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Laura F. Montgomery.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any peopie." Prov. XIV:34.

I regret exceedingly the defeat of the prohibition amendment in Congress. However, I think it is only a temporary one, for I am a firm believer in the ultimate triumph of the right. My dear mother used to liken some things that were wrong and appeared to be prospering to the tide on the seashore when it is going out: though it often seems to be coming in, in reality each wave breaks a littie farther out.

I believe that when the merchants are fully awake to the true state of affairs, and realize how they are helping to support the saloons, that most of the money that is being spent in these places would be spent with them if there were stringent temperance laws; that then, if only for seifish reasons, they will be more than anxious for the enactment and enforcement of these laws. It will thereafter cease to be a question of State's right to them, and will become an intensely personal one instead; and they will help to see that the law is carried out, that prohibition does prohibit.

Those who refuse to uphold this righteous cause are like Meroz of which Deborah sang: "Curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

The recent blow to this great moral issue, makes our land present a sad contrast to Russia where the Czar has made his noble stand. It would seem that with the many, many grand thinkers that we have been blessed with to mold our opinions, that this country's place would be in the front of the battle; or, to give a pretty iliustration that I think has been used before, like the heart of the Bruce, to which Lord Dougias, as he was about to throw it into the midst of the affray, spoke those nobie words: "Pass to the fight where thou wert wont to go."

There is a siiver lining to the cioud though, for this land is being blessed. Our king and some of our "princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness."

The Bible says: "He that is not with me is against me." The temperance cause is God's cause. It is a part of the work of his great Church—the work of which the hymn speaks when it says:

"Zion stands with hills surrounded,
Zion kept by power divine:
All her foes shall be confounded,
Though the world in arms combine."

CONFLICT.

There is an old adage which says: "It would be a poor sailor who had gained his whole experience on smooth water." And there is another which teiis us that "it would be a poor soldier who had gained his entire experience in a country where there was no enemy." It seems that God has so ordered it that conflict is essential to success of both inanimate and animate creatures. The kite rises against the wind. Geoiogists teli us that there once raged a conflict between fire and water and that where this conflict was greatest the highest mountains and deepest gorges are the result. Each breath we breathe takes into our bodies a flame of oxygen which would very soon destroy it but for the fact that in another breath we take a draft of nitrogen which neutralizes the deadiy effect of the oxygen. The water that we drink contains one part of oxygen to two of hydrogen and these two eiements war with each other in destroying and in supporting the body. No man ever achieved greatness unless he had first overcome in many a sharp conflict. "There is no royal road to success." "The battle is to the active, the vigilant, the brave." The Bible is full of iliustrations bearing out this proposition. We shall not pause to name them. The world's history in secular affairs is but one iong story of CONFLICT.

Knowledge and ignorance are daiiy contesting for the supremacy. Right and wrong are at each other's throats all the time. Heaven and Hell are having a constant warfare for our souls. The conflict is on us and about us and we must fight. There is no escape from it. It is a case of "sink or swim." We are here, whether by our own wish or not, and necessarily we are in the midst of the battle of life. Whither are we going? "Quo Vadis?" if you please. Each soldier, each individual, must win in his own conflict. There is no room for shifting the responsibiiity which is upon us. It is a personal responsibiiity. My neighbor has his own difficulties to fight and overcome. I must do my own fighting and win my own battles—if they are ever won. "Wherefore let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

CHRIST'S BAPTISM—IS IT AN EXAMPLE FOR US?

By James L. Greenway.

There has been so much of argument and disputation on this question of Christ's example as binding upon every Christian that we think it is time that this matter should be, if possible, settled. To help do this is the purpose of this article. The questions to be answered are simply these: Was Christ's baptism John's baptism? Or, was it Christian baptism? Or, was it ordinary Christian baptism? Is what Christ received at the hands of John, in any sense, an example for us?

I proceed to answer these questions in their order:

1. Christ was not baptized with John's baptism. What was John's baptism? It was a baptism unto repentance; and, secondly, of faith in him that was to come. These were its two great points. "And he said, 'into what then were ye baptized?' And they said, 'into John's baptism.' And Paul said, "John baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him that should come after him, that is, Jesus.'" (Acts XIX, 3; 6; Matt. III, 2, 6, 11; Luke III, 3; Mark I, 4, 5). This, then, being the essential character of John's baptism, could Christ have received this? Had he any sins of which he could repent? Could he look forward to a coming Christ, when he himself was that Christ? Then we know that those who had received John's baptism were afterwards rebaptized. (Acts XIX, 5.)

2. Was the baptism of Christ, that we call Christian baptism? Christian baptism is with water, by a properly authorized person, and 'in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.' The fact is, Christian baptism was not instituted until three years after this period. Dr. Hibbard well says: "John began to preach and baptize six months before our Lord entered upon his public ministry." Those who affirm that John administered Christian baptism involve themselves in the following absurdity: That Christian baptism was administered six months prior to any official act being performed by the Founder of Christianity: that is, that the initiating ordinances of the Christian system existed six months previous to Christianity itself. Christian baptism is a sign and seal. It is a sign of regeneration, of purity, of the work of the Spirit within. It is also a seal of our fidelity to God, and his faithfulness to us.

Now, I ask, could John have performed Christian baptism? And, if he could, could Christ have received it? Could he have been baptized in his own name? If we have the idea that Christ's baptism was a sign of the baptism of the Spirit, then, certainly it was not by immersion; for the Spirit of God descended on him (Matt. III, 16; Luke III, 22; John I, 32). It is then settled, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that Christ's baptism was neither Johannean (the Baptist) nor Christian. What then does it mean? Why was it performed?

Observe here, first of all, that Christ was now thirty years of age (Luke III, 23). Mark, also, states that this was the period of life, or age, at which the Jewish priests were initiated into their office (Num. IV, 3, 23, 30, 39, 43, 47). Now, then, no possible doubt can exist of this: Christ comes to be initiated as the great "High Priest of our profession." What otherwise, can Christ mean when he says: "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." The righteousness of what? The moral law? No he had always fulfilled that. He could but mean the righteousness of the ceremonial law.

Be it remembered, Christ was not descended from Levi, but from Judah. He was foretold as a "priest after the order of Melchisedec." Now he could not have been ordained, or initiated into the office of a Jewish priest, but he was to combine in himself all that the priesthood comprehended. But what was the mode of initiation of a Jewish priest? In Ex. XXIX, 4, Moses was commanded to "bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and to wash them with water." All will admit that no Jewish priest could have performed this office for Christ, as he was of the tribe of Judah. But John knew his character and saw his present design; hence he consented to perform this rite, and, as he had been circumcised, and, when twelve years of age, had been made a "child of the law," so he was washed by John in the waters of the Jordan and constituted formally a priest. It was as a priest that he cleansed the Jewish temple, and when they asked him, "By what authority he did these things," he answered. "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?" That is, was it of divine or human authority? And they dared not answer, "For all held John as a prophet." And if he was a prophet of the Lord, what he did was of divine authority.

We come now to the question, Is Christ's baptism, in any sense, an example for us? We answer positively No,' and for the following reasons: 1. If Christ meant it for an example for us, why did he not say, as in the other great sacrament of the Church, "Do this in remembrance of Me?" But not a hint is given us that he intended it as an example for us. 2. If he designed it as an example for us, why did he wait until he was thirty years old? Did he mean that as an example for us? Are we not to be baptized until we are thirty years of age? This would be a preposterous position to assume. 3. Then, again, why did he wait until "all the people were baptized?" (Luke III, 21). What did this mean? Why was he not baptized earlier? Are we to wait in like manner?

We now conclude by saying it is high time that all immersionists should stop the cry, "You must follow your Master," "You must imitate Christ's example in baptism." And we venture to say that no man or woman ever did, ever can, or ever will follow Christ in what John the prophet did for Christ, the Great High Priest.

"HEAL THE SICK."

"Heal the Sick" (Luke 9:2) commanded Christ, and he put it in the same sentence with "preach the gospel." And he has no more annulled the one command than the other.

"Heal the sick." It does not say HOW. Each one is left to do it the best way, yes, any way he can.

As long as there is ANY way there remains the obligation.

There certainly is a way, an excellent way, today. There are the surgeons, physicians, nurses, and medicines. Knowledge, skill and curative powers are at our service if we will employ them.

There are many, many diseased and injured ones. The need is very great and the calls are very urgent.

Who could spare the time to attend to all? Who afford the cost of ministering to all who suffer? One's own business and family would be neglected. Besides, it would be but inadequate knowledge and bungling service we would carry to the task.

But there it stands: "Heal the sick." And we know that the magnitude of the obligation, and the difficulty of its performance never operate to free us from responsibility. They but emphasize the urgency of the duty.

Here our Church comes to our help. It will build HOSPITALS and in its organized capacity "heal the sick." This opens the way for us all.

We can contribute to the building and maintenance of our Church HOSPITAL and it will represent us and be our agent in accomplishing this blessed service—our agent in proportion as we bear the cost.

Yes, it will cost us something. Certainly, as Christ's ministry to suffering, sinning humanity cost him—oh, so much! The cost shall but measure our love and loyalty to him who gave the command and gave his own life for us.

Only as we pay the cost can it be our ministry. So my Church is seeking to provide the way, the BEST way, for me to obey this urgent command. Here is my way to "heal the sick." And only in obedience to this command may we hope some day to hear him say to us in blessed approval, "I was sick, and ye visited me."

DESERVING AND NEEDY INDIAN STUDENTS.

To the Readers of the Advocate:

We want our friends throughout the Mississippi Conference to know the situation in regard to our Indian students, Tom and Loula Jackson. They were with us at Montrose College until Christmas and were perfectly contented, and did splendid school work. They are bright and eager to learn, and seem to be ambitious to fit themselves to be of service to others of their needy race.

The President of the school here has been responsible for their financial obligations, and has paid their bills. The expenses of their maintenance until Christmas amounted to about $58. This does not include $20 which we were only too glad to allow a young man on his board, for teaching them (they were taught in private classes).

We have received contributions amounting to $21.50 from Christian friends throughout the Conference. This leaves a balance of $36.50, due on their living expenses before Christmas. It was with aching hearts that we saw them leaving our doors because the money was not forthcoming to help them. In the face of the hard financial situation; we were compelled to let them go home. However, we are hoping and believing that God will put it into the hearts of his children to assist these simple-hearted, innocent Indians who have come out of the forest, asking to be taught the white man's learning and religion. If we could see our way clear to finance them, we would be so glad to have them finish the session with us. Anyway, we are going to begin in time to plan some way for them to come back in the autumn when school opens.

I wonder if there are any who read this appeal that will fail to see our responsibility to the long-neglected, and oft-times ill-treated, Red Man?

Montrose, Miss. MRS. J. S. PURCELL.

A SOUND UTTERANCE.

The New York World says: "A disinclination of American schoolboys to play old-time games like prisoner's base, leapfrog and blind man's bluff is attributed to the competition of baseball and the movies. But the new generation of schoolboys naturally wants nothing to do with childish things."

The present day custom of parents' allowing their children to "put away childish things" before the child is prepared by age and proper training to do so, is causing the gravest concern to thoughtful people everywhere. Conscientious physicians, educators and moral teachers of world-wide prominence, are constantly uttering their warning against allowing the school girls and school boys, at the formative period of their lives, to be fed on such physical and mental excitement as the nightly "trot," or whatever you may call it. Physicians tell us that the dance craze, for so they pronounce it, is bound to have a bad effect on the delicate nervous system of the girl, at least. From school teachers everywhere come the same reports: the children are doing little in their school work; if they are not "trotting" they are thinking and talking "trot." How can their poor excited nerves calm down to the hum-drum work of the schoolroom in a few hours? To say that the children are but the products of a frivolous age—a time when even the very elect seem to have been swept from their moorings of conservatism, does not alter the serious consequences upon the coming generation of mothers and fathers. After the present diet of "trots" palls upon the satiated nerves of the children, as it will, they will demand to be fed on stronger tonics. What next?—Deer Creek (Miss.) Pilot.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

MEETING OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The first meeting of the new Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference took place, upon the call of Dr. Henry, the Chairman, in the First Methodist Church of New Orleans, January 19 and 20. The spirit and plans of this meeting may be briefly characterized by the three words, Organization, Publication, Realization. A summary of its work shows its purpose first to organize thoroughly for the carrying out of the plans proposed by the old Board, and endorsed with great unanimity by the Conference, for putting Centenary College upon a firm and permanent financial footing; and to this end the Conference Secretary was instructed to use all the machinery of the Board, including the District Commissioners appointed by the Bishop, in getting into close touch with the whole membership of our Church in the State. The duties and relations of all the officers and agents of the Board were carefully defined, and the whole machinery of the Board was placed in a position to co-operate with Dr. Wynn in the campaign inaugurated and committed to him at Shreveport for the adequate endowment and equipment of Centenary.

As a part of the organization, a publicity department was provided for, and definite plans were laid, for keeping the plans and progress of the campaign fully before our people through the Advocate and by other means.

This organization of the working force and of the plans for publicity was planned as the starting point of a thorough-going and persistent campaign to place before the Methodists of Louisiana for definite action, the proposition to raise $200,000 for Centenary College within the next five years.

The actual realization of these plans is intended to follow the immediate relief which is to be given to the College through the raising of the special cash collection which the Conference ordered to be taken in every charge before March 31. The pressing of this collection was left in the hands of the District Commissioners, with the recommendation that a Sunday or series of Sundays be set apart in each district when it shall be taken. It was felt by the Board that every effort should be made to secure this amount in full.

In all its discussions, the Board recognized the critical situation of our educational work, and the serious difficulties and discouragements that it has to face, but was a unit in the profound conviction that Centenary College must be maintained and greatly strengthened by the raising of the proposed fund. It was the common feeling that this historic institution which has done so much for the State and the Church in the past has a great mission for the future. From a careful survey of the field, it was confidently hoped and expected that it would be possible to announce at Commencement that a good proportion of the proposed amount is definitely secured. Our people in Louisiana are able to measure up to the challenge of this situation, and when they have been made to realize the need, the response will come.

The interests and needs of Mansfield College, though less critical, were carefully considered, and plans were made to bring both these institutions more constantly before the patronizing public with a view to enlarging their fields of service.

The plans of the Board and interesting items of progress will be set forth from time to time in these columns.

For each member of the Church in the State, the present duty is to keep in touch with the plans as they are developed and be ready to cooperate in a great united effort for this far-reaching work.

W. WINANS DRAKE.

OUR PLEDGE AND OUR PLAN.

Perhaps there has never been a time in the history of Methodism in Louisiana when the subject of Christian education was so much on the hearts of Methodist preachers as it now is. At the last session of the Louisiana Annual Conference in Shreveport an evening session of the Conference was held, over which Dr. J. M. Henry presided, and the entire hour was given to the consideration of the educational interests of our Conference. At that time it was made clear that several thousand dollars must be placed in the hands of President Wynn in order to meet the current expenses of Centenary College. The need of this money was made clear, as well as the importance of raising it and handing it over at once.

In order to meet this demand a resolution was offered, levying a special assessment of $6000 on the Conference, the same to be taken and the proceeds paid to the Treasurer of the Board of Education before March 31. It is possible to levy assessments as the easiest way to postpone the solution of a serious problem. I write that sentence advisedly: such is the result of a special assessment to those who feel the need and must meet the bills that come due if the Church does not respond and raise the money called for. This special assessment must be considered and its demands met. Not merely the question of paying bills that come due, nor the question of making easy the way of the men to whom the problems of education are committed are at stake, but the conscience and honor of every preacher in the Louisiana Annual Conference.

This is one time that the money must come. Those who have faced the issue know whereof they speak. Methodism is terribly in earnest concerning the future of Christian education under the hand of our Church in this State. Results, and large results at that, must be had. The retiring Board of Education provided for the appointment of District Commissioners of Education, and by a unanimous vote the Conference endorsed that plan. In pursuance of it, Bishop Warren A. Candler appointed seven men to fill the places as follows: Alexandria District, G. E. Cameron; Baton Rouge District, C. A. Battle; Lafayette District, A. S. Lutz; New Orleans District, W. W. Drake; Monroe District, A. I. Townsley, Ruston District, J. M. Henry, and Shreveport District, G. S. Sexton. Seven more capable men could not have been found in the whole Conference. They have been appointed upon the recommendation of the Conference by the Bishop, and their leadership should be looked to as having authority. We have faith enough in the rank and file of our preachers to believe that there is not one who will not co-operate, to the fullest extent, with these men, in order to accomplish the work in hand. We have faith enough in these seven men to believe that there is not one of them who will fail to answer to Dr. Wynn on the 31st day of next March with his district assessment in full.

The first work that these District Commissioners of Education have in hand is the raising of the six-thousand-dollar assessment for the maintenance of Centenary College. It is our purpose to keep before the readers of the Advocate the progress that these seven Commissioners make toward meeting this assessment. It is a big guess as to which one will answer with the whole assessment first; and is there one of the seven who will be content to report with any less than the full amount? With the $6000 in hand, Dr. Wynn will be in fine shape to move forward with Centenary College work, while these same Commissioners, directed by Dr. Wynn through the organization of the Conference Board of Education, will proceed to the greater work of endowing the college and providing it with modern and adequate buildings and equipment.

A. J. GEARHEARD.

SHREVEPORT METHODISM.

The Methodist preachers of Shreveport are planning a simultaneous city-wide evangelistic campaign for the month of March. Beginning at the same time, each pastor is to preach in his own pulpit for a week, after which time the revival is to be continued with the helpers, who have been engaged, doing the preaching.

The aim is three-fold: to awaken the Church, to get the unsaved converted and into the Church, and to ameliorate the moral conditions of the city. To this end we desire the prayers of all the brethren.

We now have seven centers of Methodist activity in the city: Centenary College and six pastoral charges.

Dr. Wynn and his co-workers have already done a great work in Centenary since he became president, and if they can have adequate financial backing, they will accomplish a work that will eclipse even the former glory of this historic old institution. It is to be hoped that every Methodist in the State will show his appreciation of the good work already done and his confidence in what can be done by helping immediately to raise the Centenary Special.

Dr. Sexton's pastorate at First Church has been a marked success. He has shown himself to be a most capable leader, and is beginning the new year with an outlook for the greatest year in the history of this great Church.

Rev. R. W. Tucker has taken hold of the pastorate of the J. S. Noel, Jr., Memorial Church with a depth of consecration, pulpit ability, and statesman-like leadership that prove him to be a skilled workman in the kingdom of our Lord. We expect this church to steadily advance to its rightful place of strength, prominence, and usefulness.

Only a very few years ago it was proposed to disband the Texas Avenue Church and a "faithful few" met to discuss the proposition. But to-day it is one of the livest churches in Methodism. Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir seems to have the love and confidence of the entire membership; the people are consecrated, zealous, and active; and the membership is growing, and every department of the work is vigorously advancing.

Brother I. T. Reams is making a splendid beginning as pastor of the Queensborough Church, and we anticipate a year of progress and prosperity for this good pastor and people.

Bossier City and Cedar Grove are new charges. Rev. W. B. Perritt is making an excellent beginning at Bossier City. He has received about 17 members into the Church since Conference, and at some of the regular services the place of worship could not hold the people. Plans for a new church are being projected.

A nice church building was erected at Cedar Grove last year, and now the good people have purchased furniture for the pastor, Brother C. F. Staples, and are planning to build a parsonage.

Shreveport is a vigorous, growing city—the most active center in Louisiana. It is drawing into its citizenship all classes of people. Methodism is stronger than any other denomination here. This not only gives us a greater opportunity, but it places upon us a tremendous responsibility. Truly, "the field is white unto harvest" for Methodism in Shreveport to-day. May the Lord of the harvest give us wisdom and strength for the glorious work to which he has called us!

With love to all the brethren,

I am yours fraternally,

WM. H. COLEMAN, P. E.

LAY DELEGATES TO THE DISTRICT CONFERENCES IN LOUISIANA.

There has been some diversity of administration as to the number of lay delegates to which each charge is entitled in the District Conference, different rules being followed in different districts. The rule published in the minutes of the session of 1909, page 59, is that in addition to the preachers and the recording stewards "one lay delegate for every fifty members, or fraction of three-fourths of that number, from each pastoral charge shall be elected by the quarterly conference."

A careful search fails to reveal any subsequent rule, so that this seems to be the rule in force. The new Discipline adds to it the charge lay leaders. If this is the rule, our practice should conform to it. If it is not satisfactory it should be changed. The Editor of the Minutes has cordially accepted the suggestion that this, with other standing rules, should be published in the Minutes each year, so that it can be easily referred to. If anyone can find a later rule it would be well to publish the fact, and so secure uniformity in our practice.

Fraternally,

W. WINANS DRAKE.

MORE LOAN FUNDS.

By Dr. W. F. McMurry.

On New Year's eve I reported a total increase of $84,843.07 in the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension for the nine months of the fiscal year. Twenty days of January have brought in twelve contributions, the total amount of which is $4374.76. The smallest of these was $1; the largest, $1250; and there were two of this amount given by two aged women of Maryland to constitute a Memorial Loan Fund for their sister. The total increase in the Loan Fund Capital for the fiscal year to date, January 20, 1915, is $89,217.83.

We must have the balance, $10,782.17, necessary to make the $100,000 for the fiscal year, by March 31.

DOING AN IMPORTANT WORK.

The Anti-Saloon League continues to do a great work in Mississippi. Though very quiet in its operations, the League keeps eight of the best detectives it can secure employed almost regularly; and during the year 1914, it was instrumental in apprehending, convicting, and fining 189 violators of the law. These fines ranged from $25 to $500 and from 30 days to 90 days in jail. Money sent to the League, of which I am now the superintendent, will not be misplaced, but will bring a rich harvest in law enforcement and in enlightening our people on this living, burning question. Agitation and education must be pushed now while prohibition has many vantage grounds, as these are the price that must be paid for the annihilation of the manufacture, sale, and use of the iniquitous liquor business. Can not several who may chance to read these lines send to the League, at Jackson, Miss., a remittance? All remittances will be thankfully received and wisely used.

THE WET AND DRY SITUATION JAN. 1, 1915.

The Exact Status of Territory on that Date; Important Court Decisions During 1914, and the Immediate Prospect in the Various States as Regards Temperance Reform.

Alabama.

Eight wet counties and fifty-nine dry. There were no elections during the past year. The Legislature meets January 12, 1915, and is thought to be favorable to the drys. A Statewide prohibition bill will be offered.

Arizona.

Voted for prohibition November 3, 1914. Law went into effect January 1, 1915. Majority about 3500. Enforcement laws are in preparation.

DR. P. A. BAKER,
National Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League.

Arkansas

Automatically becomes dry each January 1 under the Going law which requires consent of a majority of all white adult men and women before a license can be granted in any unit. On December 31, 1914, six counties had wet spots and sixty-nine were dry. The courts during 1914 materially strengthened the prestige of the Going law by various decisions. A fight for Statewide prohibition will be waged before the Legislature meeting January, 1915.

EX-GOV. M. R. PATTERSON, of Tennessee.

California.

One hundred forty-seven supervisorial districts are dry and one hundred twenty-three wet. Eighteen counties are entirely dry outside of incorporated towns, and only ten are entirely wet. There are ninety-eight dry incorporated cities and towns. Only two cities were lost during the past year, and one supervisorial district, while three supervisorial districts have been won. California rejected Statewide prohibition by a majority of 169,145 on November 3, 1914, but a law differently drawn is expected to change the result in the future. Dry measures which will be offered to the Legislature meeting January, 1915, are: a county unit local option bill; a dry zone bill protecting universities and normal schools; and an abatement bill directed at "blind pigs."

Colorado.

Voted dry November 3, 1914. Majority, 11,572. Law to go into effect January 1, 1916.

Connecticut.

Ninety dry towns, seventy-eight wet. Four elections were won during 1914, and one lost. The 1915 Legislature will be asked to submit a constitutional amendment to provide State prohibition, which would bring the question to a vote at the earliest in 1918, but possibly not then.

Delaware.

Two counties dry, one wet. Court decisions have outlawed many drinking clubs. Delaware will probably have a fight for State prohibition in 1917.

District of Columbia.

The Jones-Works law has reduced the number of saloons to 300 and strict administration of the law will eventually reduce the number to 225. During 1914 the Supreme Court of the District has held that contracts for attorneys' fees contingent upon success in procuring or transferring liquor licenses are void as against public policy. A congressional fight to make the district dry is in prospect.

REV. A. C. BAIN, D.D.,
of San Francisco.

Florida.

Thirty-eight dry counties, ten wet. State is ripe for prohibition.

Georgia.

Under Statewide prohibition. Law permits the sale of "near-beer." Measures will be pressed before the Legislature meeting in January to knock out the "near-beer" saloons and secure better enforcement.

Idaho.

Twenty-one dry counties, twelve wet. Twenty-one cities of 1000 or more population are dry, and only twelve are wet. The State has strong anti-liquor legislation. The Legislature elected last fall is pledged to State prohibition, and the State is expected to go dry in 1915.

Illinois.

Fifty-three totally dry counties, and forty-nine wet. About 1100 saloons were voted out in 1914. In one election last spring 114 Illinois cities and villages which were wet went dry.

Indiana.

Sixty-two wet counties, thirty dry. Thirteen elections were won during 1914, and six lost. The wets gained two saloons and lost forty-five. Court decisions of moment were: one holding that liquor agents can solicit orders in dry territory; another, that the proprietor of a saloon is not responsible for the actions of his bartender if such actions are contrary to orders; a third, holding that the drys are not required to show affirmatively that a majority vote in an election is cast against saloons. Constitutional prohibition is hoped for in 1918.

REV. A. J. BARTON, D.D.,
of Dallas, Texas.

Iowa.

Twelve wet counties, seventy-nine dry; eight other counties with only one town having saloons. The Supreme Court during the year ruled that the finding of liquor in a public place of business without a license to sell is proof that it is there for illegal purposes. Another decision held that any person owning a revenue stamp in Iowa without a license to sell liquors can be held responsible for selling liquors and enjoined against keeping a nuisance. The Legislature, which meets in January, 1915, will be asked to repeal the mulct law, thus closing every saloon and brewery and leaving statutory prohibition as the fundamental law of Iowa.

REV. G. W. YOUNG, D.D.,
of Louisville, Ky.

Kansas.

Statewide prohibition excellently enforced. Candidate running on a resubmission platform and polling full strength of wets in the election November 3, 1914, got only nine per cent of the vote.

Kentucky.

One hundred and six counties dry, fourteen wet. Seven of the latter have saloons in but one place, and three have saloons in but two places. No territory has been lost in Kentucky in more than three years. Of fifteen wet counties voting in 1914, nine voted dry. The 1914 Legislature enacted a strong local option law, an extraordinary anti-liquor shipment law, and a very positive search and seizure law. It is expected that a Legislature will be elected in 1915 that will submit Statewide prohibition, resulting in an election in 1917. Colonel T. M. Gilmore, editor of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, in that publication of October 10, said in regard to Kentucky: "It is more than probable that if the question of Statewide prohibition were submitted to the people to-day it would be adopted, and some think by a very considerable majority."

REV. G. W. MORROW, D.D.,
of Detroit, Mich.

Louisiana.

Thirty wet parishes, thirty-four dry. An election won in 1914, none lost.

Maine.

Statewide prohibition; no Legislative change in 1914.

Maryland.

Ten dry counties, eight wet. It is believed that Statewide prohibition would carry in Maryland.

Massachusetts.

One city carried for no-license. There will be a number of elections in January, February and March. Several liquor bills were defeated in the last Legislature, and some dry measures will be asked of the 1915 session.

Michigan.

Thirty-four dry counties, fifty wet. Nine out of twelve elections in 1914 were won by the drys; one still in the courts. During the year the Supreme Court repealed an amendment to the general liquor law giving the right to township boards and villages and city councils to reject liquor bonds. There may be a Statewide fight in 1916.

GOD'S CARE.

God takes care of you, my child,
  Every hour of the night,
Every hour of the day,
  In the dark and in the light.

God sees all you do, my child,
  Every word you speak, he hears,
And he knows your every thought
  Sees your smiles and knows your tears.

You are God's own little child
  Love him, praise him, serve him, too,
He will help you every day
  Give you grace his will to do.

ROVER.

"I guess he'll have to be shot, Sid. He isn't fit to have around in that shape any longer."

"But—father—"

"I know you think the world of him, my boy. He's been a good, kind playmate for you, but he's gone blind, or as good as blind, gets under our feet and runs into things and smashes them. His hair comes out all the time, and he isn't pleasant to smell, and your mother's tired of having him around under foot, and—the fact is, he's had his day, and I think you'd better take your gun and shoot him. Do it to-day, Sid. It's a holiday and you can take him off into the woods, where nobody will see you. Remember, now, I expect you to do it to-day."

Big, fourteen-year-old Sidney March, who an hour before would not have believed it possible that he could cry like a girl, hid his face against the wall as his father went out, and sobbed as if his heart would break. Kill Rover!—dear, loving old Rover! And his hand, of all the hands in the world, to do the dreadful deed! It all seemed like a frightful dream—that stern, unexpected order of his father's that had come upon him like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky.

As he stood, shaken with sobs, something moist and cold was pushed into his hand, and looking down through the blur of tears, he saw Rover's dim eyes raised to his, and heard the dog's tail heavily thumping the floor.

"Oh, Rover! Poor, poor old fellow!" cried the boy, falling on his knees and clasping his arms about the old dog's neck. "You little know what's got to be done to-day. Oh, but I can't. I can't!"

The old dog licked his master's streaming face and whined softly. He did not quite know what the matter was, but he realized that Sidney was in trouble, and his faithful dog-heart was distressed.

"Yes, I know you'd like to help, Rover, you good fellow," sobbed Sidney. "But there's nothing you can do, poor Rover—just nothing."

The boy rose and walked unsteadily to the hat-rack, half blinded by tears, and took down his cap.

"Come—old fellow!" he choked. "We will go out and—have one more quiet look around the place, anyway. We won't go off into the woods till afternoon—not, not till 'most night this time, Rover, boy."

Sidney's little sister, Lucy, was playing in the summer house, as he and Rover went out. She had all her dolls around her—such a collection of them, of all colors, sizes, and shapes! Sidney almost smiled through his tears, as he looked in and saw that curious house party. They were all grouped around a miniature kitchen—a playhouse within a playhouse—and in this three-walled kitchen was the cunningest little range, with tea-kettle, frying-pan, and even a set of tiny flatirons. The sunny-haired child seemed so happy among her dolls. It would be too bad, Sidney thought, to say anything to her about the tragedy that had just come into his life. Besides, she wouldn't understand—not as he understood.

Sidney and Rover passed on and went into the garden. There was the big sage bed. Sidney had been raising that to pay the cost of Rover's license another spring. It was doing finely, but the boy turned away with a lump in his throat. What difference did it make now whether the sage thrived or not?

Suddenly, old Rover raised his head and sniffed the air. For a moment he stood irresolute and dimly comprehending. Then he bounded heavily away toward the summer-house, crashing through slender trellises and trampling flowerbeds. In vain Sidney shouted after him to stop him. The old dog for once paid no heed to his master's voice. Then, all at once, a gleam of understanding came to Sidney, and he dashed after the dog.

He could see it now—a little thin veil of smoke floating out of the summer-house! Rover's keen sense of smell, that even age had not dulled, had detected it while it was still but a puff, a pale little ghost of the fire, and had distinguished its odor from the familiar smell of burning wood.

Just as Sidney started to run he heard Rover crash blindly against the side of the summer-house; but he did not see the old dog pick himself up, smell for the doorway and stumble in.

Not until that moment did a child's scream ring out on the air. The fire Lucy had been lighting and playing with at the instant ceased to be a wonder and beauty for her and became pain. It had spread from the little range and the scattered paper and the doll's dresses to her own light frock and, quick as a serpent's strike, had stung her!

Sidney slipped off his coat as he ran. There was a piece of burlap lying across the top of a barrel in his path, and he snatched that, too. He saw his mother rushing from the house, but he was nearer than she, and was the first to burst into the summer-house.

Lucy lay on the floor, where the leap of the old dog had upset her. Only a small part of the front of her dress was burned—merely a charred strip under Rover's body, as he lay across her legs. Sidney lifted the dog off, and saw that his sister was safe. Then he threw the burlap over the burning dolls, and smothered the flame. The whole thing was over in a minute, and mother and son carried the sobbing child into the house, Rover following behind, with a strong smell of singed hair about him, and his tongue lolling out of his mouth.

When Mr. March returned from his office in the evening and heard what happened, he caught up little Lucy and strained her to his bosom for a long time. Then he went over to where old Rover was lying on the rug, stooped down and patted the grizzled head.

"If any one ever harms a hair of that dog," he said, "I'll—I'll—" Then he broke down.

And Sidney stole out into the shed and hugged himself for joy.—James Buckham, in Boys and Girls.

THE STORY OF THE BLARNEY STONE.

Now and then we read of some distinguished person risking his life and limb in an attempt to kiss the Blarney stone. No spot in Ireland is more of a favorite with tourists than that of Blarney Castle, with its famous stone still in its walls. Round this stone clusters much of romance and superstitution.

Tradition has it that after Cormac MacCarthy had built this castle he chanced one day to save an old woman from drowning. She, to show her gratitude, offered Cormac a golden tongue which should have the power of fluent persuasiveness, a tongue that could influence men and women, friends and foes, as he willed.

To get this, however, Cormac must climb to the keep of the castle, let himself down in some difficult way, and kiss a certain stone in the walls situated about five feet below the gallery running round the top. It is said that MacCarthy followed the old woman's directions with great minuteness, kissed the stone, and at once obtained all the eloquence which had been promised him.

This story is widely told in Ireland, to say nothing of the other countries of the world, and it has made Blarney one of the best-known castles in the world.

The famous stone is held in place by two iron bands suspended from the very top of the stone battlements. A row of iron spikes has been placed on the top of the battlements above the stone to prevent foolhardy adventurers from attempting to kiss the stone by being let down over the walls by the heels, as was the custom at one time.

Now the pilgrim to this shrine of eloquence must get down on his knees, or lie flat on the stones, bend the body at the waist and thrust his head and shoulders down about three feet through a square opening in the stones opposite the cornice, and in this position turn his neck and kiss the stone from the under side. An attendant with good muscles must be at hand to hold the heels of the one who attempts to kiss the stone, else by the law of gravitation he will topple over and go through the hole to the ground, a hundred and twenty feet below.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THAT BAG OF HEAVY STONES.

If a boy should try to run a race with a bag of heavy stones flung over his shoulder, he never could hope to win against those who were running without any such hindrance to keep them back.

Some one has said that bad habits are like a bag of stones. Every bad habit that a boy forms keeps him down and prevents him from doing his best. Stop your bad habits, boys, and then you will be able to run a good race in the journey of life, and will not be ashamed of your record.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

Editorial

THE OX IN THE DITCH.

The following is from The Christian Index, the official organ of the Baptists of Georgia, which has a great constituency, but which like many other religious papers is feeling the effects of these stringent times:

"An ox is a very serviceable animal. He is good to pull, and seldom balks. He takes the yoke upon his neck uncomplainingly, and makes an effort to pull everything that is put on him. He deserves good treatment at the hands of his master. His ability to serve depends upon it. A poor ox that is down in the ditch is worthy of being pulled out.

The Christian Index is the Baptist ox of Georgia. It pulls for the Baptist faith. It pulls for Baptist schools and colleges. It pulls for Ministerial Education. It pulls for Ministerial Relief. It pulls for the orphans: It pulls for the Hospital. It pulls for State Missions. It pulls for Home Missions. It pulls for Foreign Missions. It pulls for the pastors and churches. It pulls for our Baptist cause the world over. It has never balked, and its complaints have been few.

The old Baptist ox has just entered upon its ninety-fifth year of service. Its feed has been cut short during the past year. It is now poor and is down in the ditch, more than $12,000 deep. It ought to be pulled out. It can not pull itself out any more than a man can lift himself over a fence by his boot-straps. It will take 6809 men and women to get it out. Will they pull it out, or will they let it stay in and die?"

Substituting the word Advocate for Index and Methodist for Baptist and making a few other small changes, which we shall trust our readers to do in their minds, this statement admirably describes the service and present situation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. We have a large number of delinquent subscribers who could set the feet of our mired ox on terra firma by merely paying what they honestly owe. Help your Methodist ox AT ONCE, brethren. If you allow him to remain longer in the mud, he is certain to become injured and crippled. Let us all immediately go to pulling together and get him out. The welfare of all the interests of the Church demand this.

A GREAT DAY IN NEW ORLEANS.

Last Sunday was a great day for the prohibition cause in New Orleans. The seven eminent speakers whose pictures we are carrying on another page and also Rev. A. W. Turner, superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, spent the Sabbath in the city and delivered ringing messages against the liquor traffic. Good reports reached us concerning the attendance at all the churches where these campaigners were heard and as to the impressions that their utterances seemed to produce. It was our pleasure to hear Rev. Sam Small at the First Methodist Church at the 11 o'clock hour. Age has visibly left its marks upon this once noted evangelist, but he is still a graceful and very impressive speaker. His address was logical, clear-cut, and convincing. He held the close attention of his large audience, and we dare say some of the things that he said will not soon be forgotten.

The rally at the Athenaeum in the afternoon brought out an immense audience and was in every respect a great occasion. The first speaker was Dr. P. A. Baker of Ohio, President of the National Anti-Saloon League. He is a man of unusual platform ability and he soon had the large gathering under the spell of his magnetic influence. No man in the United States is better informed concerning the evils of the rum traffic than Dr. Baker and he knows how to set them forth in a telling manner. He was at times roundly cheered by the great concourse of people before him. At the conclusion of his remarks, Dr. Baker introduced ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, of Tennessee, who delivered an entertaining and eloquent speech that lasted more than an hour. Mr. Patterson is a much frailer man physically than we had expected to see, and in this respect he presents rather a striking contrast to his distinguished father, the Hon. Josiah Patterson, who possessed a large and stalwart frame. His style of oratory is easy, graceful, and winning—very much like that of Bob Taylor. He is a rhetorician rather than a reasoner, and pleases more than he instructs. He has little of the passion and force that characterized Lamar and Galloway and his voice is not strong, or varied in tone, or of unusual compass and reach. But he has a fine imagination, a ready flow of language, considerable humor and some pathos, and is very much at home on the platform. His address was well received and at times he was enthusiastically applauded.

The influence of the work done in New Orleans last Sunday ought to prove helpful to the prohibition cause in this city and State, and we congratulate Rev. A. W. Turner, the leader of our forces in Louisiana, upon the success of the meetings held here, which he had been instrumental in arranging. The seven gentlemen who were heard in the Crescent City, together with Dr. Louis Albert Banks of Delaware, O., and Dr. Howard H. Russell, the founder of the National Anti-Saloon League, have scattered out over Louisiana and will be heard this week in most of the leading towns of the State, closing their itinerary in Shreveport next Sunday. We sincerely hope that their campaign among us will give to the temperance cause throughout this commonwealth such an impetus as it has never before had and mark the beginning of a better day for our people in the battle to drive the saloon from our borders.

In this connection, we desire to call attention to the summary of the prohibition situation throughout the United States that we are giving our readers in this issue of the Advocate. It is well worth a careful examination, and there is much in it to cheer and inspire us in our struggle for the overthrow of this gigantic and strongly intrenched evil. Beyond any doubt, the future is bright with promise.

ALABAMA AGAIN IN LINE.

The following dispatch was sent out from Montgomery, Ala., on January 22: "Alabama will become a prohibition State on July 1 under two related measures which became law to-night without executive approval. Within a few hours after Gov. Henderson had vetoed the bills and had appeared in person before the Legislature to ask that the prohibition question be submitted to voters at a special election, both houses voted down his proposal and re-passed the bills by overwhelming majorities. The vote in the House on re-passage was 73 to 29. In the Senate it was 24 to 10. The prohibition measures practically re-enact the prohibition law repealed in 1911 after it had been in force two years. Under the 1911, local option law all but eight of the sixty-seven counties have voted dry."

This is indeed good news. We are glad to see Alabama again in her rightful place, alongside nearly all of the other Southern States, in the prohibition column. It is a proud distinction which now belongs principally to the South to be leading in the noble crusade to rid the American Nation of the blighting curse of the liquor traffic. And in spite of the desperate expedients that are being used to check it, this movement is sweeping triumphantly on. The time, in our judgment, is not far distant when there will not be a legalized saloon beneath the American flag. May God speed that happy day!

WHAT MR. BRYAN THINKS ABOUT IT.

Perhaps the two most sagacious political leaders in the United States are ex-President Roosevelt and Hon. W. J. Bryan, Secretary of State under the present National Administration. As interpreters of the trend of public sentiment these men are generally conceded to be past-masters, and it is quite significant that both of them are showing a decided disposition to line up strongly with the prohibition forces. As an illustration of this fact, we take from an editorial (written by Mr. Bryan) appearing in the January number of The Commoner the following deliverance concerning the recent defeat in Congress of the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution:

"While the brewers and distillers are congratulating themselves that the prohibition forces could not secure a two-thirds majority, they are looking with blanched faces and trembling hearts upon the declaration, solemnly made on roll-call, that a clear majority of the people's representatives in Congress are arrayed against rum selling. As it only requires a majority to pass laws, the liquor interests see in the vote on the amendment the beginning of the end of their supremacy. The death knell of the saloon has been sounded and it is only a question of a few years when the business, now made an outlaw, will be driven from the highways and forced into the secret places, where, after a few years more of fugitive life, it will meet its death. From now on the liquor business can consider itself a fugitive from justice, living in constant fear of arrest and punishment.

"Many who voted for the prohibition amendment were opposed to its submission at this time, but, when compelled to vote yes or no, they preferred to ally themselves with the temperance forces rather than run the risk of being counted on the side of the saloon. Others, who have fought the liquor interests in their several States, voted against the submission of the amendment at this time because they preferred to center the fight on the States where it is an issue rather than to have the attack scattered over the entire country. These will be for a national amendment whenever they think the time is ripe for such action and in the meantime they will redouble their energies and enter with still more earnestness into the State contests against the liquor interests. The temperance element will not deal harshly with the man who voted 'No,' provided he is in the forefront of the battle in his State, but woe unto the man who pleads 'State rights' against national prohibition and then allies himself with the liquor interests in his State! He will find it difficult to convince his constituents that his arguments against the exercise of national authority on the subject expressed his real reason for voting 'No.'"

IF NOT GAMBLING, WHAT IS IT?

The Times-Picayune last Monday in giving on its front page "a gist of the news," referred to Dr. S. H. Werlein's vigorous sermon against the betting being done on the races in this city, delivered on the preceding evening, as follows: The Rev. Halsey Werlein attacked what he called 'race track gambling' at the First Methodist Church." If the betting on the races now going on openly in this city is not "gambling," we should like to have our distinguished contemporary to tell us what it takes to constitute that vice. Dr. Werlein's utterance was timely, to the point, and none too severe. It ought to be caught up and echoed by every pulpit in New Orleans. From what we have heard, we doubt if anything taking place in this section of the country has ever brought together in a community such an aggregation of "toughs" as have the races now being conducted here. It is a striking illustration of that familiar passage of Scripture: "Where the carcass is, there the eagles (the vultures) will be gathered together."

We hope that others will join in with Dr. Werlein until the moral sentiment of the entire community is thoroughly aroused against this new and hurtful evil that has sprung up among us. Neighboring towns and cities ought also to speak out against it: for its baneful influence is not confined to New Orleans, but reaches out into other communities and States. No municipality can live to itself, and if it fosters vice, other places cursed by it have a perfect right to protest against it. The moral people of this city need this assistance.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. J. S. Parker, the widow of the late Rev. J. S. Parker of the Mississippi Conference, requests us to state that her permanent address is 117 Bushman Street, Hattiesburg, Miss.

At the meeting of wives of the Methodist ministers of New Orleans at the residence of Mrs. Ahrens last week, Mrs. R. H. Harper was chosen president of the organization, and Mrs. A. J. Gearheard was elected secretary. The meeting is stated to have been a most enjoyable one.

Rev. R. P. Goar, of the North Mississippi Conference, writes: "Please state that there is no Palestine postoffice, though that is the name of my charge; nor do I get my mail at Pittsboro, Algoma, Miss., is my post-office. The people have given me a royal welcome and the outlook is good!"

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss., gave us on the 11th inst, a club of 5 subscriptions from his charge. We scarcely need to say that we are grateful for this good work in behalf of the Conference organ. It is Brother Sharbrough's habit to take care of all the interests of the Church in his field.

In renewing his subscription, Brother Jeff H. Havens, of Vancleave, Miss., adds: "The Advocate has been coming to my home for 37 years, and I think that it has grown better under your care." We are pleased to have this long-time reader of our paper to continue with us, and we trust that he will still find its pages interesting and profitable.

In remitting to have the Advocate to continue to come to her home, Sister Laura A. Delap, of Natchez, Miss., writes us quite an interesting note touching briefly upon the past. We may let our readers see it next week. This elect lady has been a faithful worker for the Master's cause for many years, and the way shines with increasing brightness before her.

Rev. C. J. Nugent, of the Kentucky Conference, is visiting relatives in New Orleans. He also has lately spent a few days with his kindred in Mississippi. He is looking remarkably well.

We have in hand an appreciation of the late Dr. W. C. Black by Dr. H. M. DuBose, of Atlanta, Ga., which will appear at an early date. Dr. DuBose was requested by the deceased to write this sketch of his life.

Brother R. F. Harrison, of Luella, La., in a note to the Editor, says: "Dr. Goodell's sermon on "Tolerance and Intolerance," which recently appeared in the Advocate, was very fine—the best that I have ever read on that subject, and most appropriate for these days."

In some unaccountable way, Dr. J. L. Pierce, whose beautiful tribute to Rev. R. J. Harp appeared in last week's issue of the Advocate, was located at "Gainesville, Miss." Of course, it should have been Gainesville, Texas. Dr. Pierce is one of the best known Methodist ministers in the Lone Star State.

Rev. T. V. Peters, who wrought efficiently on the St. Tammany Circuit for four years and was assigned to the McDonoghville Church, near this city, at the late session of the Louisiana Conference, has made an auspicious beginning in his new field. He is a hard worker and a young minister of much promise.

We are carrying in this issue of the Adovcate a statement from Dr. T. J. Bailey, the State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Mississippi, which is of much importance. Let the brethren read it carefully and give Dr. Bailey their hearty co-operation. The cause which he represents deserves attention and support.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting on Monday, Jan. 18, is reported to have been an unusually spiritual one. It opened with an impressive devotional service conducted by Dr. Felix R. Hill, pastor of the Felicity Street Church, Brother Holmes, the presiding elder, states that our pastors in this city are doing beautiful team work. This is as it should be.

From Camptl, La., under date of Jan. 23, Rev. E. L. Cargill sends us the following brief message: "Mrs. R. W. Murphy, the mother of Rev. H. C. Murphy, who is serving as supply in our Conference, was buried here last Tuesday." We regret to be informed of this sad occurrence, and we pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously comfort and sustain the bereaved.

We have heard it stated that Rev. M. L. Burton, who served the First M. E. Church, South, at Gulfport, Miss., with such great acceptability during the past four years, but who did not take work this year because of the state of his health, will reside at Crystal Springs, Miss., where he owns a home. The people of that choice community are fortunate indeed in securing Brother Burton and his family as residents.

We have lately received a personal note from Rev. C. H. Ellis, of Camden, Miss., who took a superannuate relation at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. He refers cheerfully to having put off the harness, and says: "I trust it will prove to be a blessing to me. I may write you concerning it later." We shall be glad to have any message that this worthy veteran may see fit to give us at any time.

We acknowledge the reception of an attractive invitation to a social meeting of the "Nine Plus Bible Class" of our Sunday school at Amory, Miss., which was held on Thursday evening, January 21. A significant feature of this invitation was the injunction, "Leave your purse at home." Did anybody ever hear the like? Dr. A. C. Baker is the teacher of this Class; Mr. S. A. Grady is the president, and Mr. J. C. Wax, secretary.

A card from Rev. L. W. Cain, of Leland, Miss., bearing date of January 20, stated that his daughter, Miss Rubine, was operated on for appendicitis by Dr. J. D. Smythe at the Greenville Sanitarium on the 17th inst. She passed safely through the ordeal and was doing well when Brother Cain wrote, but was not entirely out of danger. We trust that ere this her condition is much improved, and that her recovery will be speedy and complete.

Brother B. H. Kennard, our Sunday school superintendent at the Red Oak (La.) Church, reports that the work is progressing favorably in his school. The Christmas tree given under its auspices on the afternoon of December 24 was largely attended and was most enjoyable. We think it is well for our Sunday schools now and then to show an interest in the pleasure of the young people by providing entertainments that will appeal to them.

Rev. R. A. Davis, an honored superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, whose address is 924 Lowerline Street, New Orleans, would be glad to preach for and help in their work any of the brethren who feel that they need his assistance. Of course, if they should call on Brother Davis to serve them, they should at least pay his expenses, and as he has no charge, give him such other remuneration as they can. He is in good health and we dare say still capable of doing great good.

The work at Macon, Miss., is reported to be "promising" by our faithful pastor at that place, Rev. R. O. Brown. Brother Brown is one of the efficient men of his Conference, and his present field is a delightful one.

Rev. L. E. Wicht, of Estabutchie, Miss., who at the late session of the Mississippi Conference took a local relation, says: "Please state that if any of the younger brethren desire me to come to their charges and preach and administer the sacrament, I shall be glad to serve them."

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church of this city, is laying plans to build a parsonage for that congregation in the near future. Brother Gearheard was instrumental in accomplishing a similar work for our McDonoghville congregation while serving it as pastor.

Rev. W. C. Galceran, of Caledonia, Miss., sends us two subscriptions and requests a list of our subscribers in his charge. We are glad to see Brother Galceran back in North Mississippi, after having itinerated for a time in the great West. There is always room at home for such workers as he.

Rev. S. E. Stepp, of Seminary, Miss., reports that he is having gratifying success in his work, especially along spiritual lines. On Sunday, January 17, he organized an Epworth League with 26 charter members. His Sunday school is a most flourishing condition, and the people generally are interested in the Master's work.

We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Rev. J. A. Goad our pastor on the New Albany (Miss.) circuit, for 10 subscriptions to the Advocate. We were not surprised to receive this club, however, as Brother Goad has done the like of this before. He states that his work, in spite of the bad weather and well-nigh impassable roads, is progressing favorably.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone sends us the following notice: "The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the North Mississippi Conference will meet in Winona, Miss., March 15 and 16, the first session being held at 11 a. m., on the 15th. Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Eupora, Miss., will furnish blanks to all who may desire them. Please see that your applications are in due form and in the hands of Brother McCafferty by March 10th."

Brother J. T. M. Hancock, of Ruston, La., in a business communication to our office, says: "With the exception of a few years, I have been reading the New Orleans Christian Advocate since 1870 and the Nashville Christian Advocate since 1880, and could not very well get along without them. I think that they get better all the time." Whether Brother Hancock is correct in his estimate or not, we appreciate his generous words of commendation, not only of our own paper, but also of our General Organ.

Writing from Sardis, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sunday School Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, refers to the work in his territory as follows: "The preachers are grasping the situation and they seem hungry for a genuine revival. I shall strike the evangelistic note on all occasions, exhibit a missionary spirit, and endeavor to do what I can to bring our people to a higher standard of efficiency." We like the ring of this utterance. Let all the brethren in North Mississippi give Brother Gladney their hearty co-operation.

We acknowledge the reception from Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Woodward of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Barbara Estelle to Mr. W. S. Peck, which will be solemnized in the Methodist Church at Sicily Island, La., on Monday evening, February 1, at 7:30 o'clock. Miss Woodward is a splendid young woman of many graces and accomplishments, and the prospective groom is one of the largest planters in Catahoula Parish and a member of the Levee Board of the Fifth District. He is of Methodist parentage and a man of sterling character. We extend in advance our congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. A. C. Searcy, who last year served a pastoral charge in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Oklahoma, has decided to devote all his time to evangelistic work. Besides preaching in revival services, he takes great pleasure in singing the songs of Zion, at which he is gifted. He was reared a Southern Methodist, and while willing to serve any brother who may call upon him, he prefers to labor with the pastors of his own Church. Brother Searcy's address is Bossier, La. Persons desiring to know of his work may address Rev. S. A. Henry, of Shreveport, La., or Rev. W. B. Vandenberg, Ringgold, La.

In a recent issue of the Advocate, taking the statement from the New Orleans dailies, we represented Congressman B. P. Harrison, of the Mississippi Gulfcoast District, as being absent when the vote was taken on the prohibition amendment to the National Constitution; but we note that in the official vote sent us from Washington, he is set down as having voted in favor of the measure. We make this statement because we would not do Mr. Harrison any injustice. The only Mississippi Representative who voted wrong was Mr. Witherspoon, of Meridian.

We erred last week in stating that the addition to the family of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Crichlow, of 924 Lowerline Street, New Orleans, was a "son." The name was given as Dalton Davis Crichlow and we so inferred, but names have ceased to be masculine and feminine in these upsetting days. We were hoping that in this grandchild Rev. R. A. Davis might have a brilliant successor in the Methodist itinerancy; and so he yet may; for by the time that this baby girl has grown to womanhood, we may have female Bishops even in the conservative Southern Methodist Church. Blessings on the little one and the happy parents and grandparents!

In writing to the Advocate office for a list of our subscribers at Gunnison, Miss., Rev. H. M. Young, our pastor at that place, says: "We are in the best parsonage in the Greenville District, and this kind people do not forget the pastor and his family or fail to supply them with good things. The outlook is splendid for a successful year." If Brother Young has all that his predecesors used to possess in the way of appurtenances, he also has a choice garden spot and access for his cow to one of the best pastures in the matchless Mississippi Delta. We are glad that he is being well treated; he deserves it.

A card from Rev. O. S. Lewis, written from Hattiesburg, Miss., on January 21, reads as follows: "Dr. I. H. C. Cook, my wife's father died last Friday morning at 4 o'clock, after a brief illness. He fell asleep in the full triumph of the Christian faith. Just a month ago we were so happy together enjoying the Christmas holidays. He loved the Church, his Bible, and his church paper, the Advocate. For years he had been an official member of the Court Street Church of this city. Rev. G. H. Thompson, assisted by Brothers Linfield and Crisler, conducted the funeral service on Saturday morning." We regret to learn of the death of this good man, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. J. L. Neill, of Laurel, Miss., writes: "We have spending the winter in Laurel Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Walker, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They labored in China for over 30 years, were in the Peking siege, and have passed through other thrilling experiences in battling for our Lord. Because of bad hearing, Dr. Walker was forced to give up active work after 41 years of service at home and abroad. This is indeed an interesting couple, who are a help to us in many ways. Dr. Walker has preached for me once, and he greatly delighted a large congregation. Our work continues to prosper, especially in the Sunday school. Last Sunday, January 17, was a record-breaker; more than 300 were in attendance, though they had to come through the rain!"

Rev. W. R. McPherson, pastor of the Orange Grove, (La.) circuit, which he says ought to be called the Lower Coast Mission, was in New Orleans last week and looked in on us in our sanctum. He has ten preaching places, as follows: Treadway, Daisy, Tropical Bend, Diamond, Pt. Pleasant, Buras, Fort St. Philip, Pilot Town, Burwood, and Port Eads. At Daisy there is a church building and an organization, and at Buras there is a church structure, but no organization. All the other places are schoolhouse appointments. Brother McPherson stated that his congregations average about 20 at the preaching services, and that but few men attend. He makes his home at Buras. Our young brother has an important, but very difficult field. Would it not be well to remember him and his work specially in your daily prayers?

Rev. B. P. Jaco, presiding elder of the Winona (Miss.) District, writes: "As some of Mrs. Jaco's friends will probably learn of her nearly fatal accident, in order to relieve their anxiety, you may say that she caught fire from a heater, and was severely burned from her ankles to her waist, and some other parts of her body were also burned. She is doing admirably and we contemplate a speedy recovery. A woolen sweater kept the flames from directly reaching her body, and so probably prevented the accident from being fatal. She is rejoicing in God's goodness in sending her daughter home in time to save her life." We are very sorry indeed to be apprised of this unfortunate occurrence, and we pray that the Heavenly Father may have sister Jaco in his gracious keeping, and that, under his providence, she may soon be entirely well again.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

The ladies of the First M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, will serve meals in the Social Hall of the church, 1108 St. Charles Street, corner Calliope Street, on Monday and Tuesday, February 15 and 16, 1915—"Mardi Gras days!" Home-cooked food and all kinds of delicacies will be served at reasonable prices. Prompt service will be given. All are invited to call, and especially strangers. Persons from outside of the city may learn where they can secure rooms at reasonable prices by applying to Mrs. W. J. Roach, 1401 St. Charles Avenue. 'Phone Jackson 1660-W.

On Dec. 28, 1914, Mrs. JANE ADKINSON was called home to heaven. Aunt Jane as she was commonly called was a devout Christian. She was a constant sufferer, being an invalid for 22 years and confined to her bed for 21 years. She united with the Protestant Methodist Church early in life, remaining in that Church until about thirty years ago, at which time she united with the M. E. Church, South, and was ever faithful and consistent. All through her suffering she was patient, and was heard to say during the last year of her life: "Lord, if it can be thy will, take me home and let this suffering cease, but not my will but thine be done." She leaves a goodly number of children, grandchildren and loved ones to mourn her death: but their loss is her eternal gain. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." May her going on before be a beckoning light to those left behind. Her remains were placed in the old cemetery at Rocky Point Church, the funeral service being conducted by the writer, and a host of friends and loved ones being present. May God bless the bereaved and give them grace and courage to fight a good fight of faith.

A. H. STEELE.

JOSEPH PRESLEY HEARST was born July 27, 1875, at Shrock, Miss., and died at his home in Newport, Ark., on July 21, 1914. The remains were brought to his old home, Hattiesburg, Miss., and interred in Green's Creek Cemetery beside his father who preceded him into the the eternal world just twenty months. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in early childhood and lived a consistent Christian life. He was married on Oct. 18, 1899, to Miss Ella King. To them was born one child. He is survived by his wife, little daughter, mother, two sisters and two brothers. When asked by his mother just before he passed away if he was ready to go, his face beamed with gladness as he replied that he was ready and willing to meet his Savior. Heaven is so much dearer than ever before for another tie is binding us there. Oh, how we miss him; but we would not call him back.

"How sweet it will be, in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and pain,
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again."

SISTER.

Mrs. SALLIE DELILAH NIXON McCLENDON was born in Utica, Miss., on May 8, 1856; died in peace at her home in West Monroe, La., on Dec. 14, 1914. Mrs. McClendon was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Nixon, of Utica, Miss. She was married to Lemuel Frances McClendon on July 7, 1876. There were born of this union six children, three of whom preceded their mother to the glory land. The three surviving children are Mrs. Bertha McClendon Harper, Robt. Wyatt McClendon and Mrs. Mattie Francis McClendon Hamilton. Two sisters also survive her—Mrs. Frank Golson and Mrs. Buck Duke. Mrs. McClendon joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young and remained a consistent member. Her health and home cares did not give her the opportunity for church service that she coveted. Her special labors were in the home. The children realize that their best friend has left them for awhile. Her example was worthy of emulation and her counsel was safe. She was laid to rest in the family cemetery at Forksville, La., to await the resurrection of the just. May her children obtain faith in Christ and meet her in the "house not made with hands eternal in the heavens."

H. W. LEDBETTER, Pastor.

Mrs. SARAH NORTON EVANS was born in Wayne County, Miss., on Dec. 15, 1856. She was blessed with the privilege of being reared in a Christian home. At fourteen years of age she was soundly converted under the ministry of Brother D. A. Little and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. On Jan. 10, 1882, she was happily married to W. W. Evans. For thirty-three years and one day their lives were spent together rearing the family God had given them. There were born to them 9 children, the 4 oldest preceding her to the beyond, the husband, 3 sons, 2 daughters, and a large family of brothers and sisters are left to mourn her departure. The five children who are living each gave his heart and life to the Lord in childhood and are members of our Church here. Her hopes and her aims for the children were that they might all be earnest and true Christians. Her life was truly one of service to her family. On Sunday was celebrated the 33rd anniversary of her wedded life. Early Monday morning she went about her work happy, and apparently well, and passed away about ten-thirty that evening surrounded by the children, her husband, one brother, Henry L. Norton, our pastor at Purvis, and a host of sorrowing friends. After the funeral service conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. D. Booth, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, of which Brother Evans is a member, and Brother J. T. Nicholson, she was laid to rest in the Laurel Cemetery. We sorrow over our loss, but rejoice to know that she was ready to go, and that her godly example continues to live here in our midst.

J. L. NEILL.

RESOLUTIONS.

Just as the second day of the new year was ushered in, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst to that haven above one of our beloved members, Mrs. J. A. Holmes, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we as, members of the West Methodist Church, Sunday school and Ladies' Aid Society, deeply deplore the death of Mrs. Holmes, who had been faithful, kind and true who was ever ready to do what she could for the Master's cause.

1. That we, as members of the His will, who doeth all things well, and while we grieve for her, there is a consolation in the thought that she is at home with her Father, and that our loss is her eternal gain.

3. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy.

Mrs. M. S. Rogers, Mrs. C. M. Purvis, Miss Carrie Green, Committee.

IN MEMORY OF OUR BELOVED NANNIE MAE RANDLE.

We have just received a message bearing the sad news of the death of Nannie Mae Randle on Sunday morning, Jan. 10, 1915, at Carrizo Springs, Texas. Nannie Mae was the eldest daughter of our former pastor and friend, Rev. T. S. Randle and wife. Words are inadequate to express our grief over this untimely death, but in the midst of our sorrow at the leaving of a dear friend and the deep sympathy we feel for the bereaved family, we can but feel comforted when we think of the earthly life of this dear woman; a beautiful Christian character from her childhood, ever wielding an influence for good and her bright spirit bringing sunshine wherever she went. While we weep, I think she would rather we would strive to live better and happier lives because she has lived.

"Say not her work is ended,
No deed of love or goodness ever dies,
but in the lives of others multiplies:
Say it is just begun."

We offer our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and pray our heavenly Father to comfort them as they press on the upward way. Let these words that she sang so beautifully help to console you:

"And God will finish what he has begun,
Faith cannot be unanswered;
Her feet were firmly planted on the rock,
Amid the wildest storms he stands undaunted;
Ne'er quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer;
It shall be done some time, somewhere."

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ."

"TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will cure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.

Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

From the Field.

Shaw, Miss.

I desire to tell you of our feast at the parsonage to-day, January 14. Brother Wasson invited his official board to dinner with him to-day, and they responded to a man. At one o'clock Sister Wasson, his faithful helpmeet, led us to a table loaded with all the good things the palate could desire. After dinner Brother Wasson talked to us a short time urging co-operation with and confidence in one another and pledging himself to the same for the year just begun. Every man present expressed himself as having been benefited by the meeting and promised to work harder for the Master and the Church than ever before.—J. L. McKeown.

Lauderdale, Miss.

Dear Doctor Meek: We have just made our round on this circuit, and find everything encouraging. It is worth while to note the extent to which my presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, expects me to spread myself. The plan of the work provides that I shall do the same work as my predecessor in just half the time given him. The good people of Lauderdale certainly know how to treat a Methodist preacher and his family. The ladies began the day we arrived bringing in good things to eat, and this is still being kept up. I am sure there is no preacher whose lot has been cast with a more loyal and generous-hearted people. We are looking to God for great things this year.—J. H. Moore.

Cochrane, Ala.

Dear Dr. Meek: Just a word from Cochrane. On Dec. 28 the news came to Mrs. Baker and me that we had been changed from Mooreville, Miss., to Cochrane, Ala. On Dec. 31 we reached Cochrane. We were met by some of our people and accompanied to the hotel where we spent the night. On the following day the good people of Cochrane showed their appreciation by looking after our needs. Since that time the people from the other three churches have "pounded" us very liberally. Our pantry is quite full and we are happy to know that our lot has been cast here. It is a great pleasure to labor in such a delightful field. We find a nice, good parsonage, four nice churches, and as kind-hearted a people as I have ever seen. By God's help we are going to give them the best service of which we are capable.—George A. Baker, P. C.

Leake Charge (Miss.) Conf.

Dear Brother Meek: I reached my new work on Dec. 22, 1914. There was no parsonage and no house to be had, so we were kindly cared for in the home of one of our members for a week and a day when there was a house vacated into which we moved. The good people had gathered together in less than a week the necessary things to furnish a parsonage with, amounting to a little more than $60, with the promise of more. We have a liberal people as far as they are able to give and we are not afraid that we shall lack any good thing. One brother has promised enough corn meal to last all the year and another syrup; and if bread, syrup, meat, milk and butter continue to come to us as they have been coming, we shall have plenty. We had a good audience yesterday, Sunday, notwithstanding the bad day and the whooping cough. Pray for us and ours, that the Lord may use us for his glory and men's good.—A. H. Steele, P. C.

DR. FEARN AT FLORA, MISS.

The Flora people enjoyed quite a treat on Sunday morning, January 17, when Dr. Burrus Fearn, one of our missionaries to China, occupied the Methodist pulpit. His charming manner at once attracted attention; while the discourse on the work in the Orient was interesting in the highest degree, holding his audience intently to the very last word. He presented the missionary work from an educational, medical, and a religious viewpoint, each in its turn, making his audience feel with acute realization the stupendous issues at stake. He contrasted the modern mission schools with the old mode of Chinese education, drawing a strong picture of the almost unbelievable state of ignorance and superstition that the mission schools are slowly but surely overcoming. He sketched in a convincing manner the almost unthinkable conditions of living that Christian sanitation is improving. He told of the countless patients relieved by modern drugs, modern treatment, and modern instruments. These same drugs and instruments in Christian hands were, he said, becoming the opening wedge to heathen hearts.

Then in words that glowed with a godly purpose, he said that whether teacher or doctor, they all were preachers, presenting the gospel of Jesus Christ at all times, in all places, in all ways, thus giving to a benighted land the greatest blessing of all. He shamed us who are so gloriously blessed in our happy enlightened country when he told of the oft-repeated sacrifices of Chinese converts that others may hear the glorious tidings. He made us feel keenly that we were but indifferent workers in the great vineyard when he spoke of the great good being done to otherwise lost souls, but left us resolving that we would break through the crust of indifference that deafened our ears, and most earnestly respond to the great cry of need from that far-away heathen land.

In the afternoon the church was again well filled at the League hour with young people who as eagerly listened to his message as had the older ones in the morning. His appeal for not only their interest, but their individual service, even to their joining him in the foreign land, fell on hearts fully awake to the great call. And we do indeed pray that it will be fully answered in the person of some boy or girl from our midst, for Flora abounds in many whose personality would mean much in the service of their Master. A HEARER.

Flora, Jan. 18, 1915.

ERRATA.

Dear Dr. Meek: Brother J. A. Goad, of the New Albany Circuit, and I wish to call attention to two errors appearing in the Minutes of our recent Conference—one from his charge and one from the New Albany Station.

From New Albany Station no credit is given for $5 paid on Minutes. I have a cancelled check showing all claims paid. From the New Albany Circuit, no credit is given for $6 paid on the Sunday School Field Secretary Fund. Brother Goad also holds a cancelled check. Yours fraternally,

S. L. POPE.

The Sunday School.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL

Advantages.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The advantages of a Graded Sunday School are many. Only three can be given in this paper. Others will readily suggest themselves to all thoughtful Sunday school workers, some of which may seem of more moment than these given.

I. The first advantage to be mentioned is, in a Graded Sunday School the work is systematized. Order, the first law of nature, maintains here. This is not true, at least to the same extent, in an ungraded school. Ordinarily, Sunday school scholars are classified according to size, rather than mental or spiritual attainments. Once having been classified, and this takes place usually in the lower classes, the students remain in the same class, under the same teacher, and are taught by the same methods year after year, until they either drop out of Sunday school altogether, or promote themselves. It is not unusual to find in the primary classes pupils four and five years of age with pupils six, seven and even eight years of age. Is this right? Is it natural? Is it possible for a teacher to teach a five year old pupil the same lesson in the same way she would teach a seven or eight year old pupil? Yet this is being tried in thousands of Sunday schools to-day, and this numeral is used advisedly. Again, it is not unusual for a teacher to feel that her teaching capacity and hold upon the affections of her pupils has been impeached if an attempt is made to adjust this anomalous condition. The graded system corrects both these evils by a natural process.

II. A second advantage—The Graded School is Inspirational. It is inspirational.

1. To the pupil, for in the same class are to be found children of the same size, of the same age and mental capacity. They are playmates and companions. There is the adapted lesson, or the lesson adapted, brought by the teacher in one mental effort within the intellectual grasp of each child in the class. Promotion Day, with promotion with honor to all who attain unto the standard of efficiency, is never lost sight of. This creates a laudable competition and ambition.

2. It is inspirational to the teacher. The brightening countenance, the flashing eye, the eager desire to answer questions, the knowledge that those under her tutorage are growing in mental and spiritual vigor, can but be helpful to any teacher.

3. It is inspirational to the parents. As they see the deepening interest of the child, it can but quicken their interest in matters spiritual. A parent remarked only a few days ago, "I believe my little boy would go to Sunday school now, if he had to walk through mud up to his shoe tops." Another said some time ago, "My little girl cried one Sunday because I did not want her to go to Sunday school in a hard rain. Now, what do you think of that?" Well, what would you think of "that," anyway? Is it not well worth thinking about? Would it not be well worth while trying "that" which has produced these results?

III. The third advantage of a Graded Sunday School is, it brings results.

1. It holds the pupils. An examination of the rolls of any graded school will reveal two facts; a gradually increasing membership, and a gradually increasing percentage of the enrolled pupils in average attendance. I do not recall a single school where this has not been the case, nor do I recall ever having heard of one.

2. A larger number of pupils are being converted and joining the Church from the graded schools than from those not graded. And after all this is the great objective. The exact figures are not just now at hand, but if memory prove not treacherous, since the introduction of the graded system and the adapted lesson, the number of pupils who have been converted and joined the Church from the schools which have been graded, has increased four hundred per cent. Waving all other advantages which might be urged in favor of the graded Sunday school, this one alone is sufficient to call for a most careful and prayerful consideration of the graded system, and to suggest the advisability of giving it a fair trial.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Here is the standard of efficiency for our Sunday schools, based on the action of the Sunday School Council of evangelical denominations:

1. Cradle Roll.
2. Home Department.
3. Wesley Bible Classes.
4. Teacher-training Class or Students.
5. Our Church Helps, Graded or Uniform, with Graded Organization.
6. Missionary Instruction, with Offering.
7. Temperance Instruction.
8. Definite Decision for Christ Urged.
9. Annual Observance of Children's Day, with Offering as Required by our Discipline.
10. Workers' Council Regularly Held and session of School every Sunday.

Each point counts for ten per cent. How many of us would like to be paid fifty cents on the dollar, or even ninety cents on the dollar? We neither want to be paid that way nor do we desire to pay others that way. We have a standard dollar, standard gauge railroads; we have standard and graded schools and standard colleges. We do not want any of these to fall below the recognized standard. Better than a standard dollar is a standard Sunday school.

Brother superintendent, write these ten points on your blackboard next Sunday morning, check off each point you have already attained, and call upon the Sunday school to take the things you are not doing, and see how readily your helpers will work with you to make your school one of the best.

Here is another simple plan that some have tried and found effective: Write a list of all the church members as recorded in the church register, put it on the wall, where it can be seen, check off all you have in your school and then have the membership committee of your Wesley Bible Class and superintendent of the Home Department go after those you have not in your school. Each Sunday announce the results of their efforts and check off names until the entire list is worked up. You will see names on your church list that are unknown. Never stop until you locate them and you will help stop a big leak in our Church. One more thing—get a list of all who are not church members and divide them up among your teachers and have these brought in. You say that is a lot of work. Yes, but it is worth while. How much interest does a man have in his lost horse, or his stray cow, or his stolen dog? How long will a man look for either of these? Yes, a lost boy is worth infinitely more than all of them.

Give your Wesley Adult Bible Classes something hard to do. Let them have charge of the Home Department and work at it until they experience the glory of service for our Master. The Home Department takes a lot of hard work and more religion than can be found in some churches. Then brother superintendent, what if you can not get that class or some other workers to take hold of this task? If I could whisper a word into your ear, it would be, pray, pray, and pray on until God gives you the laborers for the field that is white unto the harvest.

The Church at Hernando has said through her preacher and superintendent, "Count on us to make our school come up to the standard of efficiency."

Coldwater does not mean to run on a narrow gauge road any longer than it will take to change their track to a standard gauge. Roberts has captured the people of this splendid church. Brother Callicott knows all the grades and curves, and he can be counted on to make his school conform to the highest standard.

You would have to travel all day to find a more inspiring congregation than the one at Senatobia. Myers, the splendid pastor, and Herbert Holmes, the brilliant young lawyer in charge of the Sunday school, mean to put their school at the top of the list in every respect.

You say, what about Como? Wendel can answer that; he and his superintendent say emphatically, that there is nothing too good for Como. If the graded literature is better adapted to children of different ages they mean to have it, even if it does cost a little more money than the uniform lessons. Como leads in so many good things, she is determined to keep ahead of Sardis in this good work.

But hear from Sardis, Dr. Henderson with the aid of his workers has doubled the attendance in the school already. Not only that, they are at work with the idea of making the Sardis school a model in every respect.

The last item is the best. One school in the Holly Springs district is pushing forward to the one thousand mark. Hear it, all you big churches, you will have to wake up or take second place in the great work of winning men to the study of God's Word.

Brother pastor, brother superintendent, sister teacher, tell me your troubles if you have any.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS.

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with urie acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

END STOMACH TROUBLE, GASES OR DYSPEPSIA

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes Sick, Sour, Gassy Stomachs surely feel fine in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn; fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach-headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest stomach doctor in the world. It's wonderful.

"In his little book on the poetry of Coleridge, Stopford A. Brooke, speaking of the motive of the 'Ancient Mariner,' says, with fine insight, 'Compassion and love for animals secures in the heart compassion and love for men and God.'".

Help Your Stomach

Instant Relief from Gas, Indigestion and Pains Quickly Comes from the Use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Free Sample Package to All.

Feeling in the stomach is not natural. When you know you have a stomach it is time to help it. Gas, fermentation, foul breath, etc., indicate this. Accept the warning and act at once.

There is no occasion to suffer from indigestion or any similar stomach trouble when you can so easily get Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

There is scarcely a well stocked drug or general store in the United States but what considers these tablets part of their staple stock.

Do not suffer in silence. Try Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and do so quickly so that you may become your old self as soon as possible.

The reasons why Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are such a widely used remedy are very easy to understand These tablets contain almost the same elements as the gastric juices of the stomach. And when your stomach is sick and not working just right, it does not give out enough of the natural digestive juices to properly take care of the food you eat. So if you will only give the stomach a little help by taking a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after meals you will relieve the stomach of its chief duty and allow it the rest it needs to recuperate. One grain of the active principle in a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet digests 3,000 grains of food, whether you place it in a glass jar with cooked food or in your stomach after you have eaten the food.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and once you try them you will never again wonder what to do for a disordered, weak, sour and gassy stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale at all druggists at 50c a box.

THE BIBLE.

There is no problem or condition of life the solution of which will not be found in the principles laid down in this Book—questions of money, questions of work and wages, questions of manual labor, questions of political economy, all questions that have to do with godliness in relation of man to man, and man to God. Not the precepts, but the principles are laid down in this Book, and there is no problem of human life that will not find its solution in Christ as interpreted in the Scriptures.—Samuel Chadwick.

Look out for choices, they run into habits, character, destiny.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

We have much to do with the ripening of our own character. It is only when we abide in Christ that our lives grow in Christliness. Sorrow and pain blight the life that is not hid with Christ in God, and make more beautiful and more fruitful the life that is truly in Christ. If we live thus continually under the influence of the Divine grace, our characters shall grow, with the years, into mellow ripeness. —Dr. J. R. Miller.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray, or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur receipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE
BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

Few colleges have made greater progress than Whitworth College in recent years. Second term begins January 27, 1915. Special rates to as many as ten students.

After the many excellent talents which have come to us from Whitworth College during the past ten years, I feel impelled to write you of their superior studentship and splendid preparation, not only technically but musically, which has been on a par with the best schools of this country. I congratulate you upon your splendid music department, and its high standard. In each case students from Whitworth College have been able to take their places in the front rank. It is always my pleasure to indorse Whitworth College.

Faithfully yours,
BERTHA BAUR,
Directress Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

I am very much pleased to say that the work in examination for Professional License by students of Whitworth shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your girls have submitted excellent papers—and several very excellent. I am gratified, really proud, that our church schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

Sincerely and truly your friend,
G. W. HUDDLESTON,
Pres. State Board of Examiners.

FIFTH SESSION OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council will be held April 14-22 at First Church, Little Rock, Ark. The change of place for holding the meeting is due to the financial stringency of the times. The Pacific Conference Society generously concurs in the selection of a more central location for this reason.

NOTES FROM DR. LOVE, SOOCHOW.

"Soochow itself has more canal streets than Venice, and we can go anywhere in or outside the city in most attractive and comfortable and slow Chinese house boats. If we choose to get to the railway station in less than one and a half to two hours, we can take a sedan chair carried on the shoulders of our fellow human beings, or we can ride a donkey. The streets are very narrow, so we cannot use jinrikishas, as is done in some other cities. Besides being most picturesque and unique because of the canals and the old wall, some thirteen or fourteen miles long, encircling the city with its six gates, the city is noted for its wealth, pagodas, and temples. One of China's largest pagodas, eight stories high, is here and in a fine state of preservation. Then there are also the famous ink-and-pen pagodas.

"In the temples I have seen ignorant, groping heathenism burning incense and kneeling in worship before hideous wooden idols. Actually to see such things makes a different impression upon one than just reading it in books or missionaries' letters. Through pity and love one wants to tell them of the Truth, the Life, and the Way. In one temple we saw five hundred idols of every conceivable fancy, all made of crumbling clay, and in an adjoining room some fifty priests chanted and worshiped before gigantic Buddhas. Can you think it is possible that these people believe in and sincerely worship these mud and wooden images? Yes, I can, because I have seen educated and intelligent Americans believe in and worship idols, though of different make. Theirs are made of money, power, ambition, reputation, selfish desires, social, political and professional success, and other metals—all base unless they have passed through the refining fire of His pardoning grace and love."

SOME THINGS BEING DONE AT BILOXI, MISS.

A day nursery has been made possible by the Hattiesburg District giving the necessary amount to furnish the beds and other equipment for caring for the babies. This is known as the Mary Ellis Nursery. Seventeen children are cared for; three of the nursery babies were baptized in November. Thirty-eight children are enrolled in the kindergarten, and the attendance ranges from sixteen to twenty-nine. Thirty are enrolled in the Tuesday sewing class. The Sunday evening services are well attended, from one hundred to one hundred and forty being present. The missionary society observed the Week of Prayer in November, and there was an offering of $2.06. This is the first time the women have taken a part in giving to missions.

FROM THE OPELOUSAS AUXILIARY.

Our society is very small and it seems so little that we do, but I am sure no hearts could be truer and none love more than this faithful little band, that meet regularly and carry on the work as best they can in the midst of such unmissionary influences.

Most of our members are tithers, and we contribute in answer to all the appeals that are made to us. We support one scholarship in Brazil, and it was from our society in Opelousas that Miss Helen Johnston went out to Brazil, though for a long time her name was credited to Minden in the list of missionaries. That was just a mistake and the honor is rightfully ours. We expect our missionary home soon on her second furlough.

We are not satisfied with our society. We want more members, we want to touch more hearts and get them to feel the needs of those "other sheep" who have never yet heard of the tender Shepherd. We have prayed for them, have pleaded face to face, invited them over the telephone, and through the mail and still so many are indifferent, and will take no part in this great work. But we have enlisted for life in this service that is so dear to our hearts, and by the grace of God we expect to press on, till at last we stand before our king and hear him say "She hath done what she could."

MRS. PAUL FOSTER.

FROM THIRD VICE-PRESIDENT OF MINDEN AUXILIARY.

"Minden Auxiliary was one of the first to unite, nominally. We are glad that next January (1915) we can complete the union in reality. About sixty women are enrolled. The proportion of attendance is possibly about like yours. Yes, of course, the greatest need is missionary information. A few of our members have found profit and pleasure in the past studying, rather reading, some of our study course books. With more general STUDY, a broader information will come, the more needed inspiration and a vital enthusiasm that may bring us in hearing of the hand wagon, and of those marching so loyally in the front ranks.

ATTENTION, PLEASE!

The Mississippi Conference annual meeting will be held in Columbia, Miss., Feb. 5-9. Auxilaries are asked to send the names of their delegates AT ONCE to Mrs. Tom Ford, Columbia, Miss.

District Secretaries are urged to be present on the opening day, when Mrs. Hume Steele, our Council guest, will conduct the Workers' Conference. Let us pray earnestly for God's blessing on the meeting.

MRS. H. L. McCLESKEY,
Conf. Recording Secretary.

SAN LUIS POTOSI.

The following note from Miss Pierson, now at El Paso, shows some results of our work:

"Three weeks ago the pastor of the Mexican Church brought to my class a girl of about twelve years. She had her Bible and a well prepared lesson. I learned later that she was a member of a family who had until recently lived in San Luis Potosi, Mexico. One of the missionaries there had given some Bible pictures to the mother, and she and the children became so interested that she went to the mission school and asked for some reading matter about them, so she was given a Bible. Then the three missionaries covenanted together to pray for that family daily, and praise be to God, every one of them has given his heart and life to the Master."

YOU WOULDN'T BE SUFFERING

CALOMEL IS MERCURY! IT SICKENS! ACTS ON LIVER LIKE DYNAMITE

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and Doesn't Salivate or Make You Sick.

Listen to me! Take no more sickening, salivating calomel when bilious or constipated. Don't lose a day's work! Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful tonight and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

THE WET AND DRY SITUATION.

Minnesota.

Two hundred and sixty-two dry towns out of about 1200. Fifty-four have voted dry during the past year, and only eight dry towns voted wet. The enforcement by the United States Indian Service, Mr. H. A. Larson, special officer, of the Indian treaty made with the Chippewa nation in 1855, closed more than 200 saloons. Six counties are entirely dry. A county option law is being contended for.

Mississippi.

Under State prohibition. Legislature and courts have materially strengthened the dry policy during the year. One bill allows one-third of fines to be devoted to the expense of securing convictions. Another prohibits the transportation of liquors into Mississippi for illegal purposes, and provides that not more than one gallon of liquor shipped in either interstate or intrastate commerce can be delivered to any person, firm or corporation at a time. Delivery was also made conditional upon the signing of a special certificate defining the nature of the contents, from whence shipped, to whom delivered, and for what purpose. This certificate is required to be filed in the Circuit Clerk's office at once. Another bill prohibits the carrying, sending or delivering of liquors to any social club or lodge under any circumstances. All these measures stood the test of the Supreme Court.

Missouri.

Seventy-three dry counties, eighteen partly dry, nineteen wet. Sixteen elections were won in 1914, five lost. A county unit bill passed by the Legislature was so loaded with other obnoxious propositions that all were beaten in a referendum election. The incoming Legislature is very much drier than the one of two years ago. The Supreme Court ruled that all clubs dispensing liquors are saloons and must hold dram-shop licenses. This ruling resulted in closing about 2000 clubs.

Montana.

The Indian territory, including the important towns of Polson, Renan and Dayton, is dry. Corvallis is also dry by action of the people. Montana will vote on prohibition in 1916.

Nebraska.

Thirty dry counties, sixty-three wet. Twenty-six elections were won in 1914, and thirteen lost. The courts ruled during the year that a widow could collect damages from a saloonkeeper and his bondsman for the death of her husband due to drink. It was also ruled that breweries are liable for fines against saloons owned by them. Nebraska will vote on prohibition in 1916, and it is expected will go dry.

Nevada.

Indian reservation only dry territory.

New Hampshire.

Three dry counties, seven wet. Five towns were won and five lost. A Statewide prohibition bill will be presented to the Legislature meeting January, 1915.

New Jersey.

No dry counties. One election carried by drys. Reconstruction of the Legislature by increase of membership is considered to favor the dry cause.

New Mexico.

One dry county, twenty-five wet, but most of the territory of the State is dry by precincts and districts. Twenty-two elections have been won during 1914, by the drys, and nine lost. A State prohibition bill will be presented to the Legislature meeting January, 1915. This bill will provide for an election in 1916.

New York.

Two dry counties, 450 dry townships, 200 partly dry townships.

North Carolina.

Under State prohibition. Has strong search and seizure law. A bill will be offered to the incoming Legislature prohibiting the possession and delivery of intoxicating liquors excepting under certain circumstances. The law is well enforced.

North Dakota.

Under State prohibition. Enforcement is good and steadily becoming better. Number of federal liquor tax receipts in the State has greatly decreased in each year. Resubmission candidate in Republican primaries got only about twenty per cent of the vote.

Ohio.

Prohibition was defeated at the election of November 3, 1914 and a wet measure enacted. The whole thing will probably be fought over in 1915.

Oklahoma.

Under State prohibition. Well enforced except in a few localities. An amendment to the constitution making drunkenness or the excessive use of intoxicating liquor while in office sufficient cause for impeachment carried in each of the seventy-seven counties.

Oregon.

Went for Statewide prohibition on November 3, 1914, by about 35,000 majority. Law will go into effect January 1, 1916. At present Oregon has five dry counties and twenty-nine wet. Drastic enforcement laws are being drawn up for legislative enactment.

Pennsylvania.

Seven counties are dry by court order. The Legislature this winter will be the scene of a fight for a county option law.

Rhode Island.

Seven dry and thirty-one wet towns. During the past year one dry town has been added, and one lost. Only the incoming foreign element keeps Rhode Island wet, as a majority of the newcomers become dry almost as fast as they are Americanized.

South Carolina.

Thirty dry counties, fourteen wet. Only one election held, and that won by the drys. The Legislature meeting in January, 1915, will consider two bills: one prohibiting the importation of liquors for illegal purposes, the other a Statewide prohibition bill providing for a general election next summer.

South Dakota.

Twenty counties dry, nine have only one saloon town, and thirty-seven have more than one saloon town. Of the 2235 incorporated towns where the sale of liquor might be legalized, only 127 places do legalize it. In the no-license elections last spring thirty-eight wet towns voted dry, and six dry towns voted wet. An initiative petition will be circulated asking the Legislature which meets in January, 1915, to submit Statewide prohibition to a vote in 1916.

Tennessee.

Under Statewide prohibition. The enforcement of the law is improving and sentiment in favor of the policy is overwhelming.

Texas.

One hundred and seventy-nine entirely dry counties, fifty-one partially dry, twenty-two entirely wet. Seven-eighths of the territory and four-fifths of the population are under prohibition. Three wet counties voted dry in 1914, and three dry counties voted wet. Sixteen dry counties voted to remain dry. A court decision weakened the Allison law, which was the best liquor law short of State prohibition in the United States. Developments showing the alliance between the liquor and other unpopular interests, the enormous sums of money being expended by outsiders to prevent Texas from adopting constitutional prohibition, and the gross frauds which prevented the State from going dry in 1911, make it likely that Texas will vote dry the next time the measure is submitted to the people.

Utah.

Largely dry. Will probably vote on State prohibition in 1916, with chances good for victory.

Vermont.

Seventeen wet towns, 229 dry. There are no saloons in six out of fourteen counties. All towns vote each year on the question. The Legislature will be asked to enact a State prohibitory law.

Virginia.

Voted for prohibition in fall of 1914. Law will go into effect in 1916. Eighty-four counties out of 100 are already dry.

Washington.

State voted dry November 3, 1914. Law will take effect January 1, 1916.

West Virginia.

Under Statewide prohibition. Additional legislation regarding the shipment of liquor into the State, the keeping of liquor in any public place, and the giving away of liquor for any purpose is in prospect.

Wisconsin.

One county entirely dry. Other dry territory covers twenty-five per cent of the population. Thirty-three incorporated cities and villages and seven townships changed from wet to dry last spring. Only one incorporated village that was dry went wet.

Wyoming.

Indian reservation entirely dry, and thirty-five per cent of the population lives in saloonless territory.—Richmond Virginian.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To the pastors and presiding elders, of the Mississippi Conference:

At a meeting of the Sunday School Board of the Mississippi Conference held on Dec. 29, 1914, the following order was passed by the Board relative to the work of the Sunday School Field Secretary for the year 1915:

"On motion, it was ordered that an institute be held in each pastoral charge, that a district institute be held in each district, and that the Field Secretary be instructed to spend at least six weeks of the year in each district, and to observe the following order: Sea Shore District, February 1 to March 15; Hattiesburg District, March 15 to May 1; Meridian District, May 1 to June 15; Newton District, June 15 to August 1; Brookhaven District, August 1 to September 15; Port Gibson District, September 15 to November 1; Jackson District, November 1 to Conference. Provided that the two members of the Board in any district in co-operation with the presiding elder, may make any necessary changes or exchanges of dates, with the presiding elder and members of the Board in another district."

In explanation of this action, I will say that by this order, if it is carried out, we will be able to reach every Sunday school in the Conference during the year.

I will also state that the address of the Field Secretary is Jackson, Miss., Route 2. Any time that I can help you or give any information relative to Sunday school work, I shall be glad to do so. R. A. MADDOX,
Sunday School Field Secretary, Mississippi Conference.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

No man is lowered in his powers unless he is first lowered in his tastes. —Dr. Johnson.

HOULKA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been over the field in the Houlka charge. The time was when I was no stranger in these parts. Here I spent some of the sunny days of my young life. Here, too, at Wesley chapel I was recommended to the quarterly conference for license to preach. I find a few with whom I went to school. It looks a little odd to me that they are growing old. But it is largely another generation who knew not Joseph. I have met with a cordial reception at every point. The good ladies took advantage of my absence at the first quarterly conference and filled our pantry with good things to eat, and many other articles essential to housekeeping, too numerous to mention. Though each is already a credit to the community, our women are planning to much improve the church and parsonage. The stewards have assessed a liberal salary for the pastor, which will be paid in full. We hope to have Dr. Meek at the Aberdeen District Conference, which will be held in this good town of Houlka. Brother and Sister Dodds have left many warm friends here.—A. W. Langley.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas it has pleased our heavenly Father in his providence and wisdom to take from our midst a member and very much loved sister, Mrs. Geo. K. Brock; and whereas our hearts go out in warmest sympathy to the bereaved husband and children, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the missionary society of the Methodist Church of West Point, Miss., bow in humble submission to the will of Him who reigneth and ruleth over all and governs his loved ones with a hand of love, righteousness, and mercy.

2. That the grief-stricken ones have our deepest love and sympathy in this sore hour and we trust that they look to him for guidance.

3. That in the passing of our beloved friend and sister, the church and community have lost a devoted member. We shall always cherish the memory of her consecrated Christian example, and while we miss her presence and mourn our loss, the influence of her life with its grace, strength and sweetness still lingers with us as an inspiration to follow her example.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be published in each of our town papers, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. B. M. Howorth, Mrs. R. A. Pulley, Mrs. Stuart Caruthers, Committee.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

I am a student, at present, in the new School of Theology, at Atlanta, Ga., and I would like to make several engagements for meetings during the summer vacation. I have engagements for July, and would be glad to make arrangements with some one for June, August and the early part of September. I have no fixed price to ask, but will accept engagements on the merits of the work.

Information in regard to my preaching can be obtained by writing my presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Coleman, Shreveport, La., or any one of the following brethren, with whom I have worked: Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., Noble, La.; Rev. N. J. Slaton, Pleasant Hill, La.; Rev. A. D. Ashby, Pleasant Hill, La.; Rev. Willie Baker, Shelbyville, Texas, and Rev. S. S. Holladay, South Mansfield, La.

VAIN REGRETS.

Sins of omission are commonly regarded as less serious and weighty than overt acts of wrongdoing, but it is doubtful if there are any sins that are capable of bringing to us greater pain and regret than the sense of neglected duty. When we look back at the people whom we have met who have gone astray, or died without hope, and we realize that we did not do what we might to turn them from their sinful course, that perhaps we never spoke to them about Christ, never tried to win them from their evil way, possibly never even prayed for them by name, and, meeting them day by day, we showed no sign of interest in their religious welfare, and now it is too late, the last opportunity is gone, and the next time we shall meet them will be at the bar of God, we wonder how it is possible that such sin shall ever be forgiven. How can we be happy with the memory of our lost friend in our mind whom we never invited to Christ, perhaps never prayed for? Is there any power that will ever take that ache out of our heart? Opportunity disregarded, duty neglected, and men and women lost forever because of it! God help us!—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 62—No. 5. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3076

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1915. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"Let us learn from Christ's Apostles,
And play as they played the game:
'Twas not being nice, but sacrifice,
That won them deathless fame."

What men may think of us matters but little. The important question is, What does God think of us?

Billy Sunday is conducting the greatest meeting of the decade in the Northern city of Philadelphia; yet there are some preachers in sunshiny Dixie who think that a revival cannot be held in the winter time. It isn't the season that is in your way, brother.

* * *

A "chauvinist" is the name given to the man who rants on the subject of patriotism, shutting out of consideration the welfare and rights of all countries but his own—displaying a sort of national hoggishness. He is a kinsman of the "jingo," who is given to ranting in favor of war.

Asked a few days since, when the war will end, Lord Kitchener said, "That I cannot tell; but it will begin about May 1." This probably means that the fighting which has taken place up to the present is mere skirmishing compared to the terrific struggle which will soon follow. May God pity and help the bleeding nations of Europe!

If ability to talk long contributes to the making of an effective United States Senator, as it would now seem that it does, are there not some preachers who ought to go into politics and run for that office? To be sure, it might considerably lessen the quantity of preaching in the land, but in the interest of patriotism, the Church might make the sacrifice of doing on a little less. And we dare say that there are some congregations that would not put on mourning.

* * *

We frequently hear it said that there is too much politics in the Church. This is perhaps true in a sense; but we sometimes have thought that there ought to be more politics of the right sort in the Church. As it is now, the more worldly and ambitious men scheme and too often have their way, because those who are spiritually minded and free from self-seeking do not confer sufficiently to safeguard the true interests of Zion. Especially where vast issues are at stake we ought to be certain that the men into whose hands we commit them may be depended upon. Nothing should be taken for granted in such cases. Well may we beware of brethren who do not speak out on the great vital questions before us, thus discreetly trying to take care of their popularity. Surely the welfare of the Church has been sacrificed enough by putting forward such persons. No man ought to want to represent his Conference or his Church in any capacity whose views are not known and endorsed by a majority of those for whom he is expected to act.

GOD'S MYSTERIOUS WAYS.

"For my thoughts are not as your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." So spake the Lord through the Prophet Isaiah in the far-away centuries of the past. And this declaration is as true in this age as it was when it was first made. One of the main troubles that people have in living the Christian life is that they insist upon trying to measure the great revealed truths of God by merely human standards and that they cling to the notion that the operations of his providence should be such as would justify themselves to finite wisdom. Thus men perplex themselves and bring doubt and unhappiness into their lives, when the spirit of trustfulness would fill their hearts with peace and flood their paths with sunshine.

The administration of God's moral government has never been such as to command the approval of the savants of earth. The incarnation, especially the method by which it was effected, has long been an object of attack by persons laying claim to much learning, and scarcely less so has been the sacrificial atonement made by the eternal Son. Paul said in his day: "We preach Christ crucified—unto the Jews a stumbling block and unto the Greeks foolishness—but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, the power of God and the wisdom of God; because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men." The human intelligence, even when at its best, is too feeble and limited in its reach to comprehend and pass upon the mighty plans and purposes of Deity. Now, the best that we can do is to "see through a glass darkly."

Nor is it only the larger schemes of the Infinite One that baffle and perplex us. His dealings with the individual Christian are often scarcely less mystifying. Take the case of Stephen, the first martyr, for instance. "He was a man full of faith and power and did great wonders among the people:" so much so that those who were opposed to him "were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake." Determined to make an end of him, they bribed witnesses to swear that they had "heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and against God" and arraigned him before the Council. After his memorable address to that body, which greatly infuriated his persecutors, they set upon him and stoned him to death.

From a human standpoint doubtless it looked surpassingly strange that the omnipotent God, with all the armies of the skies at his command, should have abandoned his faithful servant to such a fate. Why did he not dispatch from on high some swift-winged messenger with flaming sword to strike his assailants dead and save the life of so useful a disciple? That perhaps would have been man's way, but it was not the Heavenly Father's way. He saw that by laying down his life Stephen could accomplish vastly more for the salvation of men than he could by continuing to live and work. He knew that "the blood of the martyr would be the seed of the Church." We cannot tell how much the triumphant death of Stephen, with his face aglow, his Christlike prayer, and his heavenly vision, had to do with the conversion of Paul and his marvelous ministry that followed, since the great Apostle to the Gentiles was there "consenting" to his murder. And Stephen himself was doubtless a gainer, and not a loser, by his martyrdom. It ushered him more quickly into the glorious presence of the Master, and probably gave him a larger influence in executing the scheme of redemption and a richer reward in eternity than he otherwise would have had.

Should we not learn from God's dealings with Stephen to trust him more implicitly in his providential dealings with us? If afflictions come and we cry to him for deliverance and they continue; if we desire to have our way and pray earnestly for it, and he will not grant it—let us remember that he has his way of doing things and that that way is far wiser than ours. He may be achieving ends that could not otherwise be achieved and working out for us a nobler destiny than could be attained by any other process. His will is all wise, all good, and all loving and when it is fulfilled in any life it is blessed and enriched in the fullest measure possible. We, with our dim and short vision, can see little beyond the immediate present; he sees what is to be—the final outcome.

"Leave to His sovereign sway
To choose and to command;
So shalt thou, wondering, own his way,
How wise, how strong his hand!
Far, far above thy thought,
His counsel shall appear,
When fully he the work hath wrought
That caused thy needless fear."

FOUND HIS PROPER PLACE.

The Christian Guardian (Toronto) says: "Occasionally one finds a preacher who opposes prohibition, but he usually has rather a warm time. The Rev. Jacob Meeker, when pastor of the Congregational Church in Eldon, Mo., got in company with a millionaire brewer and political boss, and suddenly discovered that prohibition was a failure, and began to publish his discovery far and wide. Then the Congregational pastors promptly dropped Mr. Meeker from their roll of preachers. Then Mr. Meeker became a politician, and last election he ran for Congress on the 'wet' ticket and won. But he is no longer a 'reverend;' he has found his proper place."

How any man who claims to be a Christian, whether he is a minister or not, can oppose prohibition we are utterly unable to see. There surely must be something wrong either with the head or heart of such a person. The evils of the saloon are so manifold and outstanding that it would seem that every clear-headed good man is bound to see them.

MY BIBLE AND I.

"We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather with smile or with sigh
In sorrow or sunshine, in tempest or calm,
Thy friendship unchanging, my lamp and my psalm.

"We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life had grown weary and death e'en was nigh,
But all through the darkness of mist or of wrong
I found thee a solace, a prayer or a song.

"So now who shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall isms or schisms, or new lights who try;
Shall shadows for substance or stone for good bread,
Supplant thy sound wisdom, give folly instead?

"Ah, no, my dear Bible, exponent of light,
Thou sword of the Spirit, put error to flight
And still through life's journey, until my last sigh,
We'll travel together, my Bible and I."

MATHESON'S GREAT HYMN.

It is said that Matheson was engaged to be married, but that when it was learned that he would become blind the young lady broke the engagement. Her love was not strong enough for her to marry a blind man. But the blind Matheson found a love that would not let him go. In 1885 he wrote the great hymn which we now study:

"O Love that wilt not let me go," which is one of the most beautiful hymns in the English language. Concerning this hymn Matheson himself has said: "I was sitting alone in my study in a state of great mental depression caused by a real calamity. My hymn was the voice of my depression. It was not made for utilitarian purposes; it was wrung out from my heart. All the other verses I have written are manufactured articles. This came like a dayspring from on high."

Pray that yet uncounted multitudes may find by means of this inspired hymn the way of deliverance from depression and discouragement.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A PRAYER THAT SAVED A YOUNG MAN.

By Dr. J. R. Miller.

One night many years ago two young men were put into the same room in an English country inn. One of them was a heedless, thoughtless youth. The other, when the time for retiring came, quietly knelt down beside the bed and prayed in silence. His companion was strangely impressed. Fifty years afterward he wrote: "That scene, so unostentatious and so unconcealed, aroused my slumbering conscience and sent an arrow into my heart. The result was the young man's conversion to God, followed by long years of service as a Christian minister and as a writer of books which have greatly blessed the world. "Nearly half a century has rolled away," he wrote again, "with its multitudinous events, but that old chamber, that humble couch, that silently praying youth, are still present in my imagination and will never be forgotten."

KIND WORDS.

Kind words do not cost much. They are quickly spoken. They do not blister the tongue that utters them. They never have to be repented of. They do not keep us awake till midnight. It is easy to scatter them. And oh, how much good they may do! They do good to the person from whose lips they fall. Soft words will soften the soul. They will smoothe down the rough places in our natures. Care to say kindly things will drill our natures in kindness. It will help pull up all the roots of passion. It will give us a spirit of self-control. It will make the conscience delicate and the disposition gentle. A woman cannot make a habit of speaking kind words without augmenting her own gracious temper. But better will be their influence upon others. If cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words madden them, so will kind words reproduce themselves and soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They make all the better elements of one's nature come trooping to the surface. They melt our stubbornness. They arouse an appreciation of better things. Let us say the kindly word. No one can tell how many burdened hearts may be relieved, how many discouraged souls may be inspired. Say it every day: to the one who disturbs you while you are busy, asking for work; to the one who has almost lost hope, to all. Remember, kind words can never die.—Sacred Heart Review.

STATES' RIGHTS NOT MENACED.

By Hon. W. J. Bryan.

The discussion of the proposed national prohibition amendments has brought out a new lot of mock heroics on the subject of local self-government. Some of the "wets," in attempt to justify their opposition to national prohibition, express great fear lest the national authority shall trample upon the "imperishable rights of local self-government." What perishable tommy-rot!

The insincerity of these protestations is manifest when it is remembered that the liquor interests are just as jealous of "the imperishable rights of interstate commerce" as they are of "the imperishable local self-government." It depends entirely upon the case which is being presented.

If a STATE attempts to deal with the liquor question a hoard of saloon sympathizers raise a chorus against the "invasion of the rights of the National Government:" They insist that "commerce between the States must be protected;" the arm of the National Government must not be paralyzed;" "fanaticism must not be permitted to suspend the traffic between the various commonwealths of the nation," etc., etc.

Whenever, however, the authority of the National Government is invoked, we find this same crowd worshiping at the shrine of "States' Rights" and beating their breasts in frantic fear lest the people may be robbed of the sacred right to control their own affairs.

Those who regard the saloon as an unalloyed evil and seek to abate the nuisance need not worry themselves about the hypocritical arguments presented by those who prey upon the welfare of society and make a merchandise of morals. The right to class alcohol as a poison; the right to protect society against those who would make money by administering this poison to their fellowmen—this right can be exercised without any danger either to the authority of the National Government or to the rights of local communities. It will be a sad day for this country when the brewers, the distillers, and the saloon-keepers are made custodians of either national or local authority.

The rights of the city are not trampled upon when township option is adopted, as it has been in some States; such legislation simply enlarges the unit and places the control of the liquor traffic in the hands of a greater number of people. The rights of local self-government are not imperiled by legislation which makes the county, instead of the township, the unit—which has been done in a number of States. No more is local self-government menaced when the State is made the unit, as it has been in some fourteen States. The same reasoning holds true when the legislative unit is the Nation, instead of the State.

If the readers of The Commoner will take notice they will find that whenever a choice is to be made between two units, the liquor interests always choose the smaller unit—no matter which two are under consideration. If the question is between national prohibition and State prohibition, the liquor interests are the vociferous champions of the State's right to act. When, however, the choice is between State prohibition and county option the liquor interests are just as vehemently in favor of county option. If it is a choice between county option and township option, the liquor interests are out beating their tom-toms and shouting for precinct option; if the choice is between township option and city, town or village option, the liquor interests bring out their cohorts and make their fight for the least unit, and there is just as much sincerity in their arguments in one case as in any other; but there is no sincerity in their arguments in any case—it is all a matter of pecuniary interest.

To carry the illustration further, they would favor ward option as against city option, and they would favor giving option to the block instead of to the ward. Finally, they would demand that the option be exercised by the individual rather than by any government unit, and they would do this in the name of "personal liberty," although if the manufacturers of intoxicants were in a position to enforce their decrees, they would make drinking compulsory, even if they had to tie their victim and force alcohol down him at stated intervals—they would do it, of course, for the benefit of the victim's health.

When it is understood that the arguments made in favor of the liquor traffic are not the real ones that actuate those who make them, why should the opponents of the saloon pay any attention to them?

Experience has taught that the unit is enlarged in proportion as public sentiment against the saloon increases, and a national prohibition amendment will be submitted as soon as enough States adopt prohibition to make the ratification of the amendment probable. When that time comes, the reserved rights of the States will be just as sacredly guarded as they are now, or ever have been—they will be guarded by intelligent and sober freemen who believe in the theory upon which our Government is founded. It only brings "State's rights" into ridicule to have the phrase made a mask for a disreputable business which is fighting to perpetuate the privileges of debauching a nation.—The Commoner.

"SUNDRY THINGS"—WEIGHED.

By T. H. Lipscomb.

I.

Brother Felts is a very interesting writer. He expresses himself in that informal conversational way that causes you to feel that he is talking to you personally, and so you listen. So happy is he in his contribution in the Advocate of January 21 that he concludes with the suggestion that his name might be signed in the singular, as Brother Felt, instead of the plural, Felts, if so desired. Certainly he is felt-like and "harmless as a dove" in the presentation of his sundry suggestions to the brethren; but the very practical questions remain: Are the suggestions wise? Are the suggestions fair? Not everything felt-like contains only felt. Error is often concealed beneath the most plausible exterior, and beneath the fairest flower there sometimes lies a thorn.

So it has occurred to me that it may be well to weigh, in all good will toward him, the suggestions offered by Brother Felts, in the time honored scales—never to be discarded—of Wise and Fair. If weighed, the suggestions are found wanting in wisdom or fairness, then surely they can only be passed by as pleasant and entertaining, but no more; as containing "sweetness" but not "light."

The first suggestion, which we would weigh in the scale of wisdom, is that of the brethren on the examining committees giving the undergraduates "written examinations this winter by correspondence." It is not the first time we had heard of this plan of his. Before I had hardly gotten out of bed after Conference one of our first-year men wrote me: "Brother Felts said he would give us lessons through the mail; so if you will please send your questions on the books you have, I will send in my lessons for your examination."

Has Brother Felts forgotten that there is a Correspondence School at Atlanta, established by the Church for the express purpose of rendering just this assistance to our undergraduates? And in loyalty to our established institutions and in recognition of their greater efficiency, is it not our duty to point our young men who desire to pursue their studies thus to the Correspondence School and urge their taking courses therein? Shall we, ignoring its existence, establish hundreds of little correspondence schools throughout Southern Methodism, needlessly duplicating, if such we could, the Correspondence School work, and undermining its very existence, as the young men are thereby encouraged to turn from it to us? The current issue of "The Ministry" announces that the professors in our new School of Theology at Atlanta will now examine all papers and personally supervise the work of all students. The First Year Examining Committee is making this the basis of an appeal to our young men to take advantage of this remarkable opportunity offered by the Church to secure the best substitute possible for collegiate training, under the choicest leadership that our Church can offer.

In reply, it might be stated (we would not put this argument in the mouth of Brother Felts), "Yes, but it costs $10 to take the work in the Correspondence School?" Yes, and it costs hundreds and even thousands of dollars to prepare to be a doctor or lawyer, or for other special work! Shall we shield our young men preparing for the ministry from a $40 expense account in four years, in recompense for a thorough course of study, systematically pursued, through a school provided by the Church; to maintain which, beyond the fees received, the Annual Conferences contributed last year over $7000, through their educational assessments? I am sure Brother Felts would repudiate such a selfish and ungrateful reason for taking an irregular rather than the regular Correspondence Course. If there are any who cannot secure the funds needed, our Committees might more wisely express their sympathy through securing for them the amount needed. However, the Correspondence School accepts notes, and makes the matter of payment as convenient as possible.

A second reply might be, "Well, they can get through more easily by improvised correspondence work through the Committees—the lessons will not be so numerous, nor the examinations so hard."

Again, I am sure Brother Felts would agree with me that no such motive or reason is a worthy one; nor should the hope of an easier way through the course be encouraged by our Committees. The more thoroughly a man studies and masters the course the better for the man and for the Church. No man is a real friend who would let down the bars, that in needless ignorance and unpreparedness a man may go forth to his life work. (Again I hear Brother Felts say, Amen.)

A final possible reason for the establishment of these duplicating Correspondence Schools, is that thereby the men will not have to stand a second examination at Conference, as seems to be required under the new law. In reply the analogy of such second examination might be shown as everywhere demanded. The lawyer, the doctor, the teacher, with diplomas in hands, have their knowledge further tested by examining committees in almost every State, before they are allowed to enter upon the practice of their profession. The examination need not be a terror to those who have faithfully prepared through the Correspondence School or in private study to meet it. The law is only a terror to evildoers—to those who have neglected, or done shoddy work—not to those that do well. However, the law would apply as certainly to Brother Felts' new correspondence school and examinations by correspondence as to that offered from Atlanta; so he would have to make a second test at Conference of his men, face to face, as surely as must we of our men.

Some one may say, "Not so, for the object of the new legislation is to assure the committeemen that the men know the subjects." We reply Yes, and all the Committeemen have in hand at Conference from the Correspondence School just such papers as Brother Felts would receive, and if such assurance were all that is demanded, the other Committees need only to read the papers sent in from headquarters, and the requirement of the law is fulfilled. But the law reads, "The Examining Committee shall test the applicant's knowledge of the course of study," which evidently means more than the consideration of correspondence reports.

The Correspondence School as a "directing and teaching agency", is great, as are also our schools and colleges as directing and teaching agencies, but it is evidently the conviction of the Church that the Conference Examining Committees, directly representing the Annual Conferences, ought to personally test every man that knocks at the door of the Christian ministry. In my own experience, after graduating from college, on beginning to teach, I had to stand examinations on grammar, geography, United States history, arithmetic, etc.; and it was well that such was required, for I was rusty on those branches. On graduating from a theological school, I had to take the four years Conference course, and it was well; for it kept me studying, and insured my being sound in the Methodist faith. So the examination at Conference cannot be escaped, and no man who prepares faithfully need desire to escape this test given him kindly and in love by his brethren.

That the General Conference recognized the Correspondence School as an invaluable agency in making this preparation, directing the work of the young men and teaching them how to study, is apparent from the discussions as reported in the Daily Advocate. An effort was made, indeed, to require every young man to take advantage either of the Correspondence School courses or those offered at Preachers' Institutes and Divinity Schools. Concerning this such a man as Dr. W. D. Bradfield spoke as follows: "I rise to speak for generations of the oncoming preachers. My plea is that they shall have the benefit of this Correspondence School, and that this Conference should be wise enough and broad enough to see the necessity of their taking such a course. The young men need to be taught how to study. Some of us never learned, there is only one time to learn," etc. Yet it seems that because of the examinations required now at Conference many of the young men are inclined to fall away from the Correspondence School, to their own hurt and to the injury of this agency especially devoted to their advancement. It behooves us all, therefore, to uphold that institution in the carrying forward of the great work which it is admirably adapted to do, and never before so effectively as now. If at the General Conference, the Committee on Education recommended, and some of our ablest men like Dr. Bradfield and Dr. James Cannon argued powerfully that the young men should be required to take these systematic courses of study; and if we respect and recognize the need of our Department of Ministerial Supply and Training, surely it is for us to point our young men to this Department and the opportunities it affords, as beyond any that we can offer, and to accept other methods of preparation only when young men refuse to take the work through these regularly appointed channels. Then, it seems to me neither loyal nor wise to attempt to duplicate the work of the Correspondence School in a small way, but rather, with kindly suggestion and advice throughout the year as needed, to examine the candidates at Conference as has heretofore been universally the custom.

So much for the vital question of Examining Committees and their duties, in view of the educational situation in Southern Methodism. We have simply questioned the wisdom of Brother Felts' suggestion. That he means well by the young men is evident. That I do, too, is, I trust, evident also.

In another issue we shall question the justness of another of Brother Felts' suggestions. It is for the judgment of the Church to decide what course is best in each matter.

THE MID-YEAR MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The mid-year meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, which was held in the Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, Jan. 20-21st, was one of the most satisfactory in point of interest and attendance in the history of our Board. All the clerical members, save one, were present, and also every one of our seven presiding elders, whose readiness to co-operate in an aggressive missionary campaign is an unmistakable omen of a forward movement this year. Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Secretary of the Educational Department of our General Board, was in attendance and delivered an eloquent and stimulating address on Wednesday evening. He is one of the most forceful speakers in Southern Methodism, and it was regrettable that he and Dr. J. B. Fearn were greeted by such small audiences. The presence of Dr. Fearn, missionary to China, who is at home on a furlough, added greatly to the interest and profit of the occasion. His address on Thursday night was full of thrilling facts and incidents and left no room for doubt as to the loyalty of the native converts or as to the success of our work in the Chinese Republic. The glimpse he gave us of the overwhelming needs of China, and of the comparatively feeble response of the Church to those needs could not but make us sad.

Prof. G. L. Harrell, our efficient and zealous Conference Lay-Leader, was on hand, and pledged the hearty co-operation of our laymen in reaching the goal of full collections and of intelligent and abiding interest in the supreme business of the Church. Though new to the chair, our worthy president, Dr. W. H. La Prade, gave proof of wise and skilled leadership and of deep devotion to the mission cause.

Almost the entire day, Thursday, was devoted to a "round table" discussion of missionary problems, and of the different features of the splendid missionary policy inaugurated by our General Board, and heartily endorsed by our Conference Board of Missions. Several items of this policy were included in the report of our Board to our last Annual Conference, and will appear in the Minutes. The items stressed by Dr. E. H. Rawlings are as follows:

1. Full collections on the missionary assessments. This is our weak point. The assessment constitutes the base line, so to speak, in the support of missions, and to fall short at this point means the serious crippling of our work at home and abroad. It is a startling fact that in spite of a large increase in membership and of vastly increased wealth, in spite of great need and the supposed growth of missionary interest, our great Church with over two million members is paying little, if any more per capita for missions than it paid twenty-four years ago. At that time we were paying twenty-four cents per capita on assessment. The present assessment on the whole Church for foreign missions is $500,000, which makes an average of only twenty-five cents per member per annum. The assessment for connectional home missions is $160,000, or an average of eight cents per member per annum. The assessment on the Mississippi Conference this year for foreign missions is $14,050; and for home and Conference missions, $13,870, which makes a total of $27,720. As we have in round numbers 55,000 members, this is an average of only fifty cents per member for the world's evangelization, or less than a penny a week per member. The Southern Presbyterians last year raised $1.80 per member for foreign missions alone.

2. An effort to get "specials." Our General Secretaries state that if no church or district or individual paid more than the assessment, not less than one-fourth of the missionaries now in the field would have to be recalled. The advance that has been made during the past few years in sending out new missionaries and in the better equipment of our schools and hospitals and churches has been due almost entirely to "specials," which are now included in the regular budget. During the first six months of 1914, 158 of these specials were assigned, and it is hoped that during 1915 a number of churches and Sunday schools in Mississippi will help to relieve the pressing needs of the hour by assuming one or more "specials."

3. Early collections and prompt remittances. Because of delayed collections, our General Board is forced to borrow a considerable sum every year to keep the missionaries in the field, and we thus pay interest enough on this borrowed money to support ten new missionaries. It is much to be regretted that a number of our stronger churches pay little or nothing on their missionary assessment till late in the year. This ought not so to be.

4. An every-member canvass in every charge as early as practicable and the introduction of the weekly or monthly duplex envelope system. In nearly every instance where this canvass has been made after due preparation, it has been attended with the most gratifying results. The presiding elders and members of the Board were unanimous in concluding that greater stress needs to be put upon the "every-member canvass," in order that every member may be made to realize his or her sacred obligation to aid in the world's evangelization. Under the old system, the bulk of the contributions to missions and the other benevolences come from about one-fourth of the membership, while the other three-fourths give little or nothing.

5. A definite and comprehensive missionary policy in the Sunday school, as provided for in Paragraph 264 of our new Discipline. The watchword of this new combination is "A Million for Missions in the Sunday school of Southern Methodism." In order to make more effective this new missionary policy of the Church, Drs. E. H. Rawlings and E. B. Chappell have united in preparing 'The Missionary Messenger,' a two-page leaflet to be issued monthly, which contains a program for each Missionary Day in the Sunday school, with suggestions for putting it into effect. Every Missionary Committee should provide itself with one or more copies of "The Messenger."

6. A definite and aggressive policy of Evangelism. Many signs indicate that our Church at home is on the eve of a Pentecost such as visited several of our mission fields a few years ago, and the fact was emphasized that if the Church is to make signal progress, the rank and file of our laymen must be made to hear the call to full consecration, to personal effort, and to fervent intercession. The spirit of intercession characterized the meeting of the Board from first to last.

Though fully aware of the stringent financial conditions prevailing, an optimistic spirit, born of faith, also pervaded the assemblage, and all present felt firmly convinced that with the hearty and prayerful co-operation of the pastors and lay leaders, the year 1915 would be signalized by a decided advance in missionary offerings and interest. To this end let us unite our prayers and efforts. It is worthy of note that those Conferences of Southern Methodism which are doing most for missions have advanced along every other line.

Church News

Bishop and Mrs. W. P. Thirkield, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have gone on a visit to Porto Rico, the former having been called there by his official duties.

There are said to be in the United States 46,167 more Protestant churches than there are Protestant ministers, but of course none of these are Methodist churches. Methodism does not have vacant pulpits.

* * *

A Pittsburgh (Pa.) dispatch states that the late Fanny Dickinson Nelson of that city provided in her will $20,000 to be used in giving Bibles to persons who are too poor to purchase them. This fund will be administered by Miss Flora C. Sweet, of the Bethany Institution.

* * *

Dr. S. A. Steel, of Columbia, S. C., contributed to the St. Louis Christian Advocate last week an article in opposition to union with the Northern Methodist Church. Dr. Steel believes that the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South should continue to keep house for themselves.

* * *

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will come East again in March. He has an engagement to meet the presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference at West Point during that month, and we learn from the Raleigh Christian Advocate that he is expected to be in North Carolina in April.

The Texas Christian Advocate, having taken over the Oklahoma Conferences, now probably has a circulation close around 25,000, the largest of any church organ in Southern Methodism. Dr. G. C. Rankin, who has been on the tripod of that journal for sixteen years, certainly has a great editorial opportunity.

* * *

Bishop W. A. Candler, who recently held the Cuban Conference, reports that our work there has prospered during the past year. The work on the Isle of Pines is also doing well. We hope to print next week an article which Bishop Candler has contributed to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate showing the situation in that great and inviting field.

* * *

Mrs. J. P. Dolliver has presented to the new Methodist Episcopal Church at Fort Dodge, Ia., a set of memorial chimes in memory of her husband, the late United States Senator Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver. The Methodists of the South will remember Senator Dolliver as the brilliant fraternal messenger to their General Conference some years ago.

* * *

Rev. T. A. Groce, a North Carolina minister, reports a revival at Mt. Morenzi with the following results: 16 professions of faith, 11 additions to the Church, $400 raised for missions, 7 new family altars erected, and a $30 'pounding' for the pastor. This is a striking illustration of the fact that when a people are alive spiritually they will show it in various ways.

* * *

It is announced that the official residence of Bishop John E. Gunn (Roman Catholic) will not be moved from Natchez to Pass Christian, Miss., as had been reported. This rumor arose from the fact that Bishop Gunn has been performing the duties of a parish priest at the latter place, in the absence of the resident priest, who is away seeking to recover his health.

It is claimed that investigation has shown that in one Western State there are 133 towns of from 150 to 1000 inhabitants without any Protestant work in them, and that in one hundred of these towns the Roman Catholics do not operate. Evidently our religious denominations are still challenged by great opportunities in that fast-developing section of the American Union.

The Congregational Church of Great Britain reports an increase during the past year of 1635 church members, and a decrease in its Sunday school enrollment of 12,877. The total number of church members is 492,898, and the total Sunday school enrollment is 71,935 teachers and 664,432 scholars. This Church has in England 12 colleges, with 51 professors and lecturers and 347 students. Very small colleges!

In the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of January 14, Bishop Hoss paid a beautiful tribute to the late Bishop Charles W. Smith, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Among other things, he said: "There was nothing loose nor slack-twisted in his opinions and convictions. His death would have been a great loss to the Church at any time; but in these times especially, when every man with a new notion in his head seems to imagine himself a commissioned reformer, it is almost a calamity. Still, the Lord lives and reigns, and out of his resources of wisdom and power he will raise up other guides and leaders for his widespread flock."

Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, Editor of the Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City), is very much opposed to the unification of American Methodism according to the plan submitted by the joint Commission of the Churches, North and South, and approved by the Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church, and has lately been giving his readers a series of lengthy editorials on the subject. The outlook for the union of the several Methodist denominations in the United States is far from bright.

It is stated that the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church (North) is facing a deficit of $292,000, and a strenuous effort is being made to meet this shortage. The Northern Baptist Mission Board is also hard pressed financially and has announced that, without a considerable increase in its funds it will not be able to send out a single additional missionary and that even those who are at home on furloughs cannot be allowed to return. The European war is held largely responsible for this condition of things.

REV. HOWARD M. HAMILL, D.D.

By W. Fred Long.

When Dr. H. M. Hamill fell asleep, near Nashville, Tenn., on January 22, the world lost one of its greatest Sunday school leaders, as well as the Nation and the Church. He was President of the International Sunday School Association, a member of the Lesson Committee, and the superintendent of the Teacher-training work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

He began his Sunday school work in 1887 by attending the Illinois Sunday School Convention, at Decatur, as a delegate, and his gifts were recognized by electing him a member of the State Executive Committee. Secretary W. B. Jacobs put him in the field to work along normal lines. He was the pioneer in teacher-training, having written the Legion of Honor Course long before our denominations caught the vision. After about ten years he came to the Southland to be the superintendent of Teacher-training for the M. E. Church, South, which was the first denomination to recognize this need, thus leading the way in this forward movement. He was a hard and conscientious worker, and a platform teacher without a peer.

He came into my life in 1898. He was the international representative to the Kentucky Sunday School Convention, and so dignified the work and showed the bigness of the task that the fire was kindled in me and grew, till five years later I entered the Master's work without salary in Arkansas. Then it was that a letter from Dr. Hamill came like a light from the sky to strengthen my faith. When the Seventh District Training School was organized at Searcy (being the first west of the Mississippi), Dr. Hamill accepted the deanship, which assured its success, as he said, "to encourage and help Fred." When I accepted Mississippi's call, he wrote me a letter such as a father would write a son. He attended two of our Conventions in this State, in which he contributed largely to the good of the work.

We have differed—yes, several times; but we have always loved, too. In 1912 during a great conference at the Grunewald Hotel, in New Orleans, he carried me to his room, closed the door, and pulled down the window blinds, saying, "Brother Long my wife is sick and my mother is not expected to live, and I am weary and tired; I think you have the same kind of religion my father had; pray for God to lift the burden." Clasping hands, we went to our knees in humility, but not alone—Jesus was there, and spared his precious wife (whom all the Sunday school world knows and loves and sympathizes with) to take care of him in his last days.

I thank God for putting it into my head and heart to write him a long love letter on January 9 and acknowledge anew my indebtedness to him. I am sure that he is with Him whom he loved and served—that he has become and done, in a measure, what in a letter bringing Christmas greetings to a little child on December 25, 1914, he said he would like to become and do:

"If I were Santa Claus himself,
I know what I would do:
I'd take my pack from off the shelf
And give first choice to you;
I'd put it in a Christmas sock
In grateful memory,
And say, "I am only giving back
The love you've given me."

ATTACKS GAMBLING IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Rev. Dr. Haisey Werlein preached at the First Methodist Church of New Orleans on Sunday evening, Jan. 30, a sermon on gambling, with particular reference to race track gambling. In the opening prayer of the service, he returned thanks to God for the presence in this city of the visitors who had come to advance the cause of prohibition, and prayed that a constitutional amendment might be adopted that would put an end to the traffic in liquor.

In beginning his sermon he said he was going to discuss an unpleasant topic, but one that should be brought to the attention of the city. There should be enough decent white men in the city to suppress the gambling which he said is going on in New Orleans. While it is known that gambling is very common here, there seems to be no voice raised against it; and no effort made to stop it. Protest against movements which involved no moral principle were not lacking. In support of this he cited recent protests which had been made against contemplated changes in the routing of street cars. Then Dr. Wericin said:

No Protest Heard.

"Years ago when Geo. W. Cable wrote his characteristic stories of New Orleans, some of his critics clamored against him, declaring that he was a Northern sympathizer, and that it would be quite the thing for him to take his abode up in the Eastern States, where he could find admirers of his genius. In the sugar growing districts of Louisiana a mighty cry has been raised against the aggressions of the sugar Trust, and we sympathize with it. When certain philanthropic people suggested that owing to the great European war it would be proper for New Orleans to forego the Mardi Gras pageants, quite a number of people fulminated against any discontinuance of our winter gaities.

"But against gambling in New Orleans we hear no protest. One of the grand jurymen took a look from a distance at the Palm Garden gambling now allowed on the race course, and concluded that as the Locke law was not being technically violated the grand jury had nothing to do in the premises. The newspapers of the city which some months ago were pronounced against race gambling, now, are absolutely silent, because their representatives, who give daily reports of what is going on, have been unable to detect any violation of the law. Some of the preachers of this city who have expressed the desire that the baseball Evangelist, Billy Sunday, might begin a campaign here seem to feel themselves powerless to arouse the conscience of the people against popular evils.

"And so the devil is allowed to have full sway. No voice like that of John the Baptist is heard crying: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

"Some of the new arrivals in the city, who propose to make their homes here, tell us that they see great possibilties of making this city the mecca of pleasure mongers. They declare there is nothing in the way. The laws of Louisiana allow the largest license. Every form of worldliness can flourish here.

"Puritans Notably Absent."

"Puritanism is notably absent from this favored city—no inhibition of theater on Sunday night; professional pugilistic fights allowed; the red light district in full blaze, and race track gambling allowed. All that purveyors of amusement in this city need to do is to take possession. Municipal authority and popular favor guarantee immunity to all who are willing to invest their dollars to make this city attractive to money-spending tourists. By the way, these are the only kind of visitors that are greatly wanted, it might appear.

"And so we have a city of nearly 400,000 people of which more than 150,000 are claimed to be Roman Catholics and perhaps 20,000 Protestants, given over to all manner of license. And not only is the press silent, but thousands of so-called disciples of Jesus Christ apparently are muzzled and without convictions. Civic responsibility does not seem to exist in New Orleans. Men who claim to be in the lead as financiers, and who certainly have exceptional advantages for self-exploitation, when they do not connive at the carnival of license which here obtains, are so self-absorbed as to walk the beaten path of quiescence.

"And so the city of New Orleans is largely under the control of the red light owners, of brewers, of dance hall and cabaret proprietors, of race horse manipulators and of a municipal administration that has declared to the world that race gambling is an attraction which New Orleans should present to all people. That there are people in this city who grieve over its moral degradation there can be no doubt, but while sighing and weeping may do for women, the thing you Christian men ought to do is to speak and act.

"The papers inform us that before this awful European war the people of Europe had to a large extent abandoned church attendance and given themselves to all manner of worldliness. Now churches in these warring countries are crowded with sorrowing and bereaved wives, mothers, fathers and orphaned children. Their worldliness has been rebuked, their hearts are broken.

"What kind of a spectacle must this city present to the righteous God? How long will he bear with us? How soon may his displeasure be visited upon us in a way that shall startle us from our spiritual blindness? How verilably will we begin to reap what we have sown? Indeed is there not now a blight on us that is operating against our material prosperity as well as our moral development?

As to Locke Law.

"Gambling in any guise is degrading. It ought to be discouraged and the most stringent laws should be enacted against it.

"The promoters of New Orleans racing declare that the Locke Law should be carefully complied with. This law makes it unlawful in race betting to use any device. Private betting is supposed to be within the law. No one will say that devices are not in use now in the Palm Garden. Envelopes are used as a substitute for former devices. They are betting at liberty. Those who bet must put up the money so that the Association will not, as heretofore, stand behind any one. The same moral principle is involved. The same results are obtained. It is perfectly obvious that horse racing cannot be conducted without gambling. There is no such thing as clean racing, if money changes hands. All racing that is accompanied by betting should be prohibited.

"The telegraphic dispatches that are wired to different parts of the country giving reports on horses and winnings induce thousands of people far away from New Orleans to bet. In this way race betting in this city is promoting gambling all over the country. If gambling is a vice then the races are vicious. Gambling is vicious because it leads to dishonesty. The gambler hesitates at nothing to win. He will resort to chicanery, duplicity, bribery. Have you never heard how often horses have been drugged just in time to cause them to lose the race? Gamblers know each other so well that they do not trust each other.

"A country greenhorn was taken in by a person who pretended to be in a position to assure him of winning three days ago on the race courses. The countryman placed $100 in the hand of the thief. Strangers are often roped in and fleeced by the gamesters. What is so degrading as to attempt to corrupt innocent and inexperienced youth? Can you place confidence in the word or promise of a gambler?

The Gambler is a Criminal.

"Gambling is vicious because it leads to the violation of law. The gambler is a law breaker. The gambler knows he is a criminal before God and man. In defiance of the law he can be seen on the streets trying to inveigle senseless young men into the den where his crimes are prosecuted. Gambling appeals to the most infernal passions of the soul."

Dr. Werlein called attention to the case of a cotton speculator who, he said, had become a millionaire in cotton gambling, at the expense of the conversion of his moral sense and his soul into a mass of stone. He had sold out his moral nature, and had made himself a money-making machine. To interest him one must show him some chance of making money out of one. And yet the city and the congregation before the speaker had nothing to say. They let the devil have their young men, without any protest. If any city ever needed real men, New Orleans was that city, Dr. Werlein said.

"Gambling is utterly vicious because it absolutely perverts the true object of life. Human beings are placed in this world to serve God and bless their fellows. They are to be animated by the unselfish purpose to contribute to the betterment of the world. This puts sublimity into the soul. The vice of gambling exterpates this high and unselfish purpose. It makes a man avaricious, selfish, grasping. It so prostitutes all the powers of being that the thought of God and eternity is utterly obliterated.

"Gambling discourages honest labor. God has ordained that by the sweat of his brow man must earn his bread. The fate of the unfruitful fig tree shows God's thought of the unproductive and unserviceable human being. Gambling introduces the desire to 'get rich quick.' It unfits the merchant, the clerk, the lawyer, the physician to meet the responsibilities which confront them. It is the patron of the house of prostitution. It is the friend of the saloon. It destroys the home. It disqualifies the purest as an example and teacher of the child. It results in utter ruin. The gambler has staked his soul and lost it. Few gamblers have been brought to Christ. So reckless and abandoned is the average gambler that eternity has no dread for him, and he will take the chances of escaping the damnation of the wicked."

After the singing of the final hymn, while receiving a young man and a young woman into the Church, Dr. Wericin said to his congregation that he had put the matter squarely up to their consciences and to their manhood. He asked what did they propose to do? That was the important question, he said.

HELP NEEDED FOR STUDENTS.

A most worthy student who came to Centenary College with the expectation of working to pay part of his expenses has been physically disabled by a rheumatic affection and is not in a condition to do this. The Head Master says: "He is a model student. I have no better one in the school." He can not continue the remainder of the session without assistance.

Another ambitious country boy, who has paid what he could on his expenses with potatoes and has done what little work the College could give him, has been burning midnight oil to get an education and is making splendid progress, but he feels that he will have to leave for financial reasons. I have told him to stay. Are there not some Methodists in Louisiana who will give financial assistance to these needy and deserving students? Contributions of any amount would be appreciated. R. H. The Louisiana Educational Campaign

A GOLDEN RULE CONFERENCE.

This is the season of the year when official boards are consulting with pastors and making estimates. The preacher's salary must be estimated, and how much it may be is a question that vitally interests every man who has a family to care for. When the stewards have voted in favor of paying a minister $1000 for his year's services, he begins to make calculations as to what comforts he may provide for his family in addition to the bare necessities. As the year draws to a close he begins to foot up his accounts. He finds that he has bills due on necessities to certain amounts and the Church is far behind on his salary. He goes up to Conference like a man and reports a shortage. He may keep still—that is a good policy—but he has a certain opinion to himself and that is that the promise of the official board should have been considered a moral obligation on the part of the Church and that he ought to have had his money. Many a pastor has felt that his board did not feel its own responsibilty in regard to fulfilling its estimate. I have heard preachers tell their stewards when I was a steward: "You men made this promise for the Church and you have not done your duty until you have put it up to every member of this congregation to do his part."

What has all this to do with the cause of education? The answer is forthcoming: Centenary College is a connectional institution resting with equal weight upon every congregation in Louisiana. Its existence is due to the fact that Louisiana Methodists desired it. The authority of the whole Conference was behind the appointment of every man connected with it. Last December at Shreveport a session of the Conference was held one night, and if there was a preacher absent from that session it was because he chose to consider some other engagement or duty of more importance than attendance upon the session of his Conference, and by his absence gave consent to what it sanctioned. At that night's session the Conference was informed that the necessary expenses of Centenary College for the year ending in June were greater than the possible natural income by several thousand dollars, and that unless the Conference came to its aid, these accounts could not be paid. The matter was thoroughly discussed and a resolution was introduced placing a special assessment upon the Conference of $6000 for Centenary College, the same to be taken before March 31, 1915. The pastor of every congregation was either present and gave consent to this assessment or by his absence concurred in it. The lay delegates of the seven districts of this Conference also voted in favor of the resolution. That assessment stands as a moral obligation upon every preacher in Louisiana. The preachers of this Conference are now prepared to do for Dr. Wynn and his assistants what they would have their own stewards do for them. Here is a first-class opportunity for the Louisiana Annual Conference to enter the field as the GOLDEN RULE CONFERENCE—the preachers standing by their connectional interests as they would have their official boards stand by them.

It is barely possible that some one overlooked the positive nature of this assessment and is now disposed to neglect caring for this interest. That none may forget, I submit that resolution that you may read it again:

"We have carefully considered the condition at Centenary College and, realizing the urgent need, we recommend:

"First—A Special Assessment of $6,000 be made for Centenary College, and the preachers are instructed to make the collection in February and March. The Presiding Elders are urged to take active charge.

"Second—That a campaign for $200,000 be launched. $40,000 of which is for buildings and $160,000 for endowment.

"Each preacher is requested to pledge himself to see each adult member of his church and request a five-year credit subscription, the first payment to be due Nov. 1, 1915, and the other payments will be payable on Nov. 1 of each succeeding year; said notes to bear 5 per cent interest from date. This canvass is to be completed and returns made to the President of Centenary College by June 1.

"The preachers are further requested to send in a list of all adult members to the President of Centenary College by March 1, so that he may send out literature explaining the situation and needs. Five per cent of the amount subscribed shall be allowed for expenses. The President of Centenary College shall be in charge of the campaign."

THE BATON ROUGE WAY.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, the presiding elder, is planning to co-operate with Rev. C. A. Battle, the Baton Rouge District Commissioner, in raising the assessment for Centenary College in full from that District. We are informed that a number of special educational rallies will be held, and officials of the various congregations lying adjacent to the places of meeting will be urged to come and bring others with them. At these rallies, Brother Battle will present the detailed needs of Centenary, its possibilities, and such other matters as may be pertinent to the subject under consideration. In this way, every pastor in the Baton Rouge District will not only have the aid of Brother Battle, but the active assistance of Presiding Elder Bowman. With such plans and such leadership, can any one doubt that the Baton Rouge District will meet this assessment in full?

THE VALUE OF PUBLICITY.

One of the progressive sciences of the day is the psychology of advertising. The advertising manager in a modern business is an important and highly appreciated factor in its success. Under present-day conditions, no article is successfully placed upon the market without an intelligent and persistent campaign of publicity. The publisher of a book or the inventor of a patent medicine or household necessity must attract the attention of the public to his product by a constant display of its merits. Magazines, newspapers, bill boards, as well as armies of salemen, are employed to such effect that the public has become familiar with the merits of all sorts of soaps, breakfast foods, and automobiles.

The conditions that have developed this science of publicity can not be ignored in the promotion of the enterprises of the Church. If for instance the Louisiana Conference is to place its institutions of learning on a stable basis of enduring prosperity and usefulness, its whole machinery must be enlisted in keeping its whole constituency informed as to the purpose, condition, and needs of these institutions. We have in our itinerancy an instrument of unsurpassed efficiency for bringing before every Methodist in the State any plan or movement of vital interest to the Church. It is the purpose of the Board of Education to use this living machinery, as well as every legitimate method of publicity, to hold the attention of every member of our Church in Louisiana to the vital importance of our educational interests and needs. If every pastor and presiding elder will co-operate with this purpose, we can bring about such a situation that our people will seriously consider these interests in dispensing the wealth that God has entrusted to them, and in planning the education of their children.

The Board has thoroughly organized its own machinery with the fixed purpose of using every agency available—the United States mail, the Christian Advocate, the secular papers, and every form of printed matter—to bring our cause to the attention of those who ought to be interested in it. We desire to enlist likewise the personal force of our entire ministry in the State in making it impossible for any Louisiana Methodist to be indifferent to our educational work. Nothing is more certain than when this body of consecrated men enthusiastleally determine that our colleges shall be firmly established, and carry this enthusiastic purpose to their people, our problem will be solved.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION.

At the last session of the North Mississippi Conference, at my own request because of my physical condition, I was granted a superannuate relation. Though reluctant to give up the active work, it is with meek submission to the will of Him whose I am and whom I serve that I do so. For fifty-four years as an itinerant preacher—twenty-four in the pastorate and thirty in the colportage work—I have endeavored to do the work assigned me by the Church in whatever field or sphere. While there is much regret for inefficiency because of weakness and shortcomings, there is abundant cause for rejoicing in the blessed assurance that God, who called me to this ministry, has from time to time owned and blessed the labors of his unworthy servant for good, in the promotion of his kingdom on earth and the salvation of souls for whom Christ died. To Him be all the praise and glory now and evermore!

Though retired from the responsibilities of the active work I desire to be of some service in the vineyard of the Lord, as opportunity may permit. I do not surrender my intense feeling of interest for the welfare and prosperity of the Church, and in order to maintain intelligent and prayerful sympathy with her affairs and work, I read our church papers and magaziues, the Advocates, Missionary Voice, Quarterly Review, Sunday School Magazine, etc. This is the only way to keep in sympathetic touch with our Lord's work and workers. Pity upon the church member that does not read his or her church paper! There are some preachers, sad to say, who do not do so as carefully as they should.

This leads me to say a few things in reference to our church papers, especially our own Conference organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which is now passing through a severe financial crisis. The frank statements recently made by the publisher as to the serious conditions confronting the finances of our paper ought to be a sound of alarm arousing to immediate action every friend of the Advocate, preacher or layman, in Mississippi and Louisiana. The Publisher says: "Names are being constantly dropped from our mailing files. Will you not make an effort to get the subscribers in your charge to renew, brother pastor? This is a matter of the most urgent importance. Unless our friends lend us a helping hand at once we may soon have to begin to print the Advocate on cheaper paper and put in less matter." Take heed, brethren, and beware that there be no falling short in any charge on the subscription list, but rather an increase. If the 22 presiding elders and 460 pastors of the three patronizing Conferences will publicly and privately, promptly and perseveringly work among the 150,000 members in their charges, by April 1 our most excellent Christian Advocate will be placed on a firm footing to pursue its useful course with rejoicing. The joy will be mutual between those who make the paper and those who read it.

But while giving careful attention to the Conference organ, the claims of the General organ of the Church, the Nashville Christian Advocate, should not be neglected. It is presumed that every preacher takes it—no one can afford to be without it. Many of the laity also read it, and there are many more who would do so if they knew its scope and merits.

In the editorial "The Enemy at Work" in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, January 14, Dr. Meek truly said: "If there was ever a time when we needed to put wholesome literature in the homes of our population, it is now—not simply in Methodist homes, but in all homes. The Christian Church must somehow get close to the masses and influence their thinking and way of living and win them for Christ." Every Methodist pastor should ponder well this paragraph in the light of his ordination vows and prescribed duties as a divinely appointed shepherd of souls. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men and the rudiments of the world and not after Christ," (Colossians 2, 8) as is now the case in Europe.

A HAPPY FARMER LAD.

By H. H. Farlss.

Pa says I'm downright lazy,
But Ma says, with a smile,
"Our Willie's just a growing boy,
He'll work lots after 'while."
My goodness, how I hate those chores!
Yet, every hour or so,
They shout and call, "You, Willie—Bill!"
And back to work I go.

What I do like is to go out
And watch the baby calf
Go capering around the lot.
'Twould make a donkey laugh.
Then, there's the hen that hatched out ducks,
She used to be so prim,
But now she throws a dozen fits
When they go in to swim.

I love them all; they are my pets,
From Dobbin clear on down.
I'd rather be just what I am
Than any boy in town,
For I've these friends, who love me, too.
Farm life ain't half so bad.
So I just guess I will remain
A happy farmer lad.

JOHNNY "ALL-RIGHT."

Seven-year-old Johnny was busy making a new sled. He was pretty small to do so big a thing, but Johnny was what people call "smart," and then Uncle Steve had lent him a hand and had shown him how to do a good deal of it. It was not a very handsome sled, but it was strong; and Uncle Steve said it would run well, and so Johnny had named it Speed. He was just putting on the last coat of red paint, and he did wish he could put the name Speed on the side with gilt letters; but that was beyond him. "If nothing bothers me, I can get it all done this morning, and then I can go coasting with it to-morrow. It'll be dry by that time. What, ma'am?" for someone had called Johnny. It was mother.

"I want you to go over to Mrs. Pratt's for the butter right away, son," she said. "We haven't enough for dinner."

"All right," said Johnny cheerfully, putting his paint and brush carefully away on a shelf in the wood-house. Then he washed his hands and face and took the basket his mother gave him and ran off whistling.

It was a good half-mile to Farmer Pratt's, and Johnny would hardly get back in time to finish his sled that morning, but he said to himself: "All right, I can do the rest this afternoon just as well."

But when afternoon came papa told him there was a load of stove wood coming, and he wanted him to pile it up. This would take every bit of the afternoon and a lot of the next day, and it was beginning to thaw. But Johnny said "All right," and went to work bravely.

He was still at it when Uncle Steve came along. "Hello, little chap," he called out cheerily. "Got your sled done?"

"No, sir," said Johnny. "I had to do a lot of other things."

"Well, that's too bad," said Uncle Steve.

"No, 'tain't," said Johnny stoutly. "It's all right. Papa and mamma told me to do 'em, and it's all right. I love to help them better than play, anyway. I can coast when the next snow comes."

"Well, Johnny All-Right," said Uncle Steve, pulling off his coat, "suppose you let me help you." And the way Uncle Steve piled wood was a sight.

It was every bit done by four o'clock, and then the sled was finished, too; and Uncle Steve said he thought it was getting colder and would freeze hard that night, and the hills would be like ice in the morning.

"I guess it'll be all right, anyway," said Johnny with a smile. "And I'm so much obliged to you, Uncle Steve."

Uncle Steve looked thoughtfully at the sunny-faced boy. "Johnny All-Right," he said, "if you keep the 'all-right' spirit up, you'll be an all-right man. Do you know that?"

"Well," said Johnny, "that's what I 'spect to be, of course."—The Child's Hour.

Yale "speaks" for his food by standing on his hind feet and letting his front paws droop. One day he was found all alone, in this attitude, speaking for a bone which lay on top of the ice-box.

In politics, Yale is a strong Republican. When asked if he prefers being a dead dog or a Democrat, he "dies" immediately, and stays "dead" until assured that he is a true Republican.

Yale is attractive in appearance, with soft white fur and brown markings. He is but five months old, but has learned to carry the letters to the house and carry a basket. HOLD FAST.

J. M. T.

In olden days children played "Button, button." "Hold fast all I give you," cried the leader. Little hands trembled as they clutched the button or feigned to receive it.

To-day we should hold fast the best we have been given. Hold fast the home life—that precious beginning of all good things. Social life outside the home is helpful. It is an intellectual stimulus to meet different types; pleasant to amuse and be amused; but into that life come also jealousies, rivalries and heartaches. Unrest is in the air, change marks the age. Pause, think, young wives and maidens. Hold fast that which is good.

Hold fast leisure; a little space to meditate; a little time to think.

Hold fast reverence. Let the young man, high of soul, keep his ideals. Hold fast reverence.

And, mark you, the boy with a noble mother has visions of delicate, maidenly beauty and purity. He is looking for a realization of his dreams.

And here—may we make the assertion—is what the girl of to-day may do. She may hold fast dignity, reserve. May be so delicate, so beautiful in spirit that one may instinctively "take off his hat" as he passes.

Holding fast a merry heart, a friendly spirit, she will not rush wildly here and there. She will hold fast a serene repose. For losing hold—losing dignity, dressing loudly, battling noisily, hurts.

In the eager crowd some one may lose an ideal. Something may be blotted out never to return. Hold fast reverence, girls, and you will compel respectful admiration.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THE LORD NEEDS HELP.

A certain preacher, in one of the Southern States, was preaching away one Sunday night, when a fire alarm broke the attentive stillness of the sanctuary.

"Sit still!" he cried to his disturbed congregation. "If there is a fire the Lord will take care of his own and not let anything happen that shouldn't."

Just then two children, who had stepped outside, shrieked:

"Oh, it's the parsonage! It's the parsonage!"

Without a word of farewell that preacher made a wild bound from the pulpit and struck out for his burning residence.

"There is times, it seems," said a lean member of the congregation, "when th' Lord needs he'p."—National Monthly.

PASTOR WANTED FOR A CHOICE WORK.

Mr. Editor: Rev. C. P. Moss has accepted an appointment in Jacksonville, Fla., and this leaves our Church at Iuka, Miss., without a pastor. I want a good man for the place as soon as possible. BISHOP MORRISON ON CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

In addressing the class admitted into full connection at the late session of the Arkansas Conference, Bishop Morrison, among other things, said: "Administer the discipline of the Church. The shepherds are responsible for the conduct of the flock. It takes more religion to administer discipline than it does to preach the gospel. When our eight thousand pastors start to administering discipline a great world-wide revival will start in the Church. Turning him out of the Church should be the last act in disciplining a member. Personal counsel, admonition, and prayer should be given before this last step is taken."

These are, in our opinion, wise words—words that all our pastors would do well to ponder carefully. The New Testament teaches that it is the duty of the shepherd to watch over the sheep as one who must give an account for their souls. In inciting men to live a religious life that is above reproach, nothing is so effective as personal contact and brotherly association and counsel. Herein lay the value of the old Methodist plan of dividing the membership of the Church into classes and thus specifically interesting Christians in the experience and daily conduct of one another.

And since that once serviceable method has now ceased to be used, it would seem that there is more reason than ever why a pastor should bestir himself in this direction. He is solemnly charged "To see that all the ordinances and regulations of the Church be duly observed," and the presiding elder is instructed "To take care that every part of the Discipline be enforced in his district." In the face of the solemn obligations that every Methodist preacher has to assume before his admission into the traveling connection and ordination and these plain and pointed instructions, it is pitiful, as we have known to be the case, to hear one of our ministers who has failed to stand up for the rules of the Church trying to take shelter under what appears to be a merely technical construction in McTyeire's Manual of the Discipline and contending that the only way a preacher can breach his vows is to refuse to go to his work. Such special pleading might possibly avail in a Church court (though we are not by any means sure that it would); but it will certainly not avail when we stand before the Chief Shepherd in the last great day.

RULES HIMSELF OUT OF COURT.

In the Grenada Sentinel of January 22, Mr. O. F. Lawrence, the Editor, reprinted our editorial which appeared in the Advocate of January 7 and made what purported to be a reply thereto. What he said, as we see it, has so little relevancy to the issues involved in this matter, or to the points raised in our utterance, that we stated to our brother in a personal note that we were not disposed to take the space necessary to print the whole of his deliverance unless he desired the full text of it to appear in our columns; and he replied that he would make no such exaction in advance, having been voluntarily assured by us that should he feel that any injustice is done him by our comment upon his last statement, we will publish it in toto. Most of it is directed at the Editor of the Advocate, and we care little for his satirical thrusts; so, strong as the temptation is to analyze his latest remarks and uncover what we conceive to be their glaringly weak points, we have decided, for the present at least, not to do so.

Toward the close of his last utterance, Brother Lawrence makes the following statement: "But returning to our original editorial about the Bishop, we are thoroughly cognizant of the fact that cases are usually determined in the courts of our country upon the preponderance of testimony adduced. It is not our desire to bring in further testimony or to make out a case. Applying the rule above alluded to to Bishop Waterhouse, there could be but one verdict and that would be that the Bishop was eminently wise and commendably discreet in what he did while presiding over the Conference of Methodist churches at Starkville. By the foregoing we are not to be understood as in any wise discounting the statements of those godly men upon whose expressions we based our first editorial." (Italics ours).

This statement is somewhat contradictory, but our brother admits that the evidence is against him; so much so that his side would have no standing in any court; and while he claims not to discount the expressions of his alleged informants, he does, as a matter of fact, discount the correctness of their (to the public) unknown representations about as effectively as it could in a general way be done.

The situation may be briefly summed up as follows: 1. Our brother was not at the Conference and personally knows nothing about its proceedings. 2. He has not set down a single word or act, or cited a single witness to sustain his aspersions. It is not at all known to the reading public whether what he claims to have heard was such as to furnish any sort of reasonable basis for his spectacular fling—some men have a wonderful way of trying to evolve much out of precious little. 3. He now admits that the "preponderance of evidence" is against his hurtful representation, and the fact is, he has not actually adduced a single shred of evidence of any kind to support it, though he presumes to speak of "further evidence." And this "preponderance of evidence" was within his reach before he rushed into print, three prominent Methodist ministers who could have enlightened him residing in the same town with him; yet he failed to verify beforehand this alleged information, which now in effect he discredits, after having scattered it over the State of Mississippi to the disparagement of an honored Chief Pastor of his Church. Such is the plight in which our brother is left.

In conclusion, we will say that we expect this to be our final word on this subject in the Advocate unless some new development should arise, and that Brother Lawrence need not consider himself under any obligation to us to print this comment in his paper. We are perfectly willing to rest our cause before his readers upon our preceding somewhat extended statement, which he published.

A TIMELY PROTEST.

A well known Christian lady in our patronizing territory wrote to the Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, a few days since, the following respectful but timely letter:

"Gentlemen: My subscription to the Ladies' Home Journal will expire with the February number. The Journal has been in my home for twenty years, and I had intended renewing my subscription; but I have decided not to do so, as I cannot lend my endorsement to your policy of giving publicity and support to the "tango dance" and what you term "the castle waltz." I have always appreciated your progressive policies and it may be all right for you to incorporate these dances into your progressive program, but I must say that I am too old-fashioned to attempt to keep pace with progress in this direction. It is not my intention to criticise your publication and the expression of my views is intended as an explanation of why I am not renewing my subscription. I have learned to love the Journal and I feel that I am parting with an old friend; but I cannot reconcile my views sufficiently with this feature to give endorsement to it in a publication which, to my mind, has always taken a high stand for dignity, morality, and culture."

This stand and utterance, are we think, much to be commended. The dancing craze seems to be increasing rather than waning, and it has taken possession of nearly everything. Leading periodicals that would not have thought of doing so a decade ago are now extolling the dance and giving instruction in its various forms; the hotels and restaurants have caught it up and one can scarcely eat a meal without being interrupted by exhibitions of it, and the public schools of the country are giving it sanction and encouragement. And, worst of all, the Christian people of the land seem to be becoming more tolerant of it.

Has the Church been wrong in her attitude toward the dance in all the past, and is she about to withdraw her protest against it? There are some, we know, who hold that she has little ground for such opposition, and who would like to see her sound a retreat at this point. But we do not believe that her ministers and members who are most spiritual entertain any such view. For our part, we do not hesitate to say that it is our profound conviction that it would be a frightful apostasy for her to change her position on this issue. On the contrary, we believe that if there ever was a time when she needed to stand up openly and firmly against all questionable practices and amusements and insist upon her members living a pure and consecrated life, it is now when there is abroad in the land so much nominal Christianity that is shot through with worldliness.

We thank God for such an old-fashioned Methodist as the author of this letter. Would that there were vastly more of them! Our people cannot be too careful in excluding from their homes publications that are harmful in their teachings. If church members generally would do this, the tendency toward a lowering of moral ideals which is manifest in so many of our prominent journals would be checked. This class of publishers would not seek to maintain long a policy that was hurtful to their circulation. There is such a thing as a Christian boycott, and it is not enough invoked in this day of latitudinarian views and spurious standards of conduct. We owe it to our Lord and our fellow-men to place the whole of our influence on the side of right.

DEATH OF DR. HAMILL.

Dr. Howard M. Hamill, one of the best known ministers and most useful workers in Southern Methodism, died at Tate Springs, Tenn., on January 21, 1915. His health had been failing for more than a year and his demise was not a surprise to those who were informed as to his condition. It was evident to us when we saw him at the General Conference in Oklahoma City last May that "the fading time" had come to him and that his splendid carcer lay mostly behind him. His obsequies were conducted in McKendree Church, Nashville, Tenn., in the presence of a large audience. Feeling addresses were made by Bishop E. E. Hoss, Mr. Marion Lawrance, Secretary of the International Sunday School Association, and General Bennett H. Young, Commander-in-Chief of the United Confederate Veterans. The body was carried to Mexico, Mo., for interment.

Dr. Hamill was born at Lowndesboro, Ala., on August 10, 1848, being the son of a minister, Rev. Edward J. Hamill. He was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Alabama College, in Auburn. He served in the Army of Northern Virginia and was a gallant Confederate soldier. After the war he taught school in Missouri for several years; he was licensed to preach in 1885 in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and soon began to make a specialty of Sunday school work. In this department of service he had no superior and his fame became more than national. In 1902 he was made Superintendent of the Teacher-training work in our Church and had since filled that position with conspicuous ability. At the time of his decease he was President of the International Sunday School Association and Chaplain General of the United Confederate Veterans.

Dr. Hamill was a teaching preacher of the best type. No one could sit under his ministry without being informed, strengthened, and helped. Perhaps no man in America, and certainly none in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, did more than he to lift the Sunday school work in the United States to its present high plane of efficiency. He was a man of strong faith, of deep piety, of tireless energy, and thoroughly loyal to the ideals and interests of the Christian Church. He will be greatly missed, and his place will be hard to fill. Dr. Hamill is survived by his wife and one son, to whom we extend sympathy in their bereavement.

AN INTERESTING PAMPHLET.

We have on our table a pamphlet entitled, "Sunday Work in the Mills and How It May Be Avoided, and Why," by Mr. W. H. Emerson, of Pachuta, Miss., a local preacher in our Church. Brother Emerson has for many years been one of the best known mechanical engineers and operators of cotton seed oil mills in the South and in the handling of this theme he speaks out of a large and varied experience. This address, before it was printed, was delivered to a large gathering of men connected with this important industry, and we dare say that it made no small impression, for it is clear, comprehensive, and convincing. A more powerful plea for the preservation of the holy Sabbath, compressed into so small a space, we have scarcely seen. Brother Emerson has done well to print this discussion, and his pamphlet ought to be widely circulated.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. A. Battle, of Baton Rouge, La., was a visitor in New Orleans last Tuesday.

Rev. S. N. Young states that he has been kindly received at Barlow, Miss., and that the outlook is bright for the work of the new year.

Anyone who knows the addresses of Mr. H. C. Hudson and Miss M. Carlisle, both of Mississippi, will oblige the Publisher of the Advocate by sending such information to our office.

Rev. B. H. Rawls, of Seminary, Miss., is looking after the interests of the Advocate in his rounds and our mailing files are showing the result. We are grateful to our brother for this good service.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. W. J. Burt, of Mayhew, Miss., for 4 subscriptions, sent in on Jan. 26. Brother Burt seems to be having his usual success in his present field.

In the absence of Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the Parker Memorial Church of this city, who had been called to the country by the death of a relative, his pulpit was filled last Sunday, both in the morning and evening, by Rev. J. L. Sutton.

Mr. D. W. Heidelberg, a prominent attorney at Shuhuta, Miss., recently gave a year's subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate as a prize for the best attendance upon his Sunday school class. It was awarded to Mr. J. E. Rainwater.

The Board of Supervisors of Jones County, Miss., in a recent meeting at Ellisville, the county seat, decided that a negro sentenced to be hung in that community should be executed in private. They are much to be commended for this action.

The address of Rev. S. M. Thames, of the North Mississippi Conference, is 1123 N. West Street, Jackson, Miss. Brother Thames and his family are now making their home in Jackson. Read Sister Thames' statement which appears on another page.

Rev. A. C. Searcy states that some time since he sold a few books to preachers in Louisiana, whose addresses he has lost, and that the money is now past due. He requests us to say that his address is Shreveport, La., at which place those owing him may communicate with him.

A dispatch from New Iberia, La., to the Times-Picayune on January 27 stated that Rev. Sam Small and Rev. A. S. Lutz had addressed a large audience on the subject of prohibition at the opera-house on the preceding evening. There was much enthusiasm and the speakers were frequently applauded.

The Young Men's Christian Association of New Orleans celebrated its 63d anniversary on February 2. The address on this occasion was delivered by Dr. W. A. Barr, after which refreshments were served. The friends of the Association gave a practical turn to this celebration by making it the opportunity for a large "linen shower."

Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Guntown, Miss., gave us a club of 5 subscriptions on January 30. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate his good work in behalf of the Advocate. Brother Carlisle is much pleased with the situation in his charge and will tell our readers something about his work in our "From the Field" Department next week.

We clip the following from the Lincoln County Times (Brookhaven, Miss.) of January 28. "Rev. J. M. Morse preached a forceful sermon last Sunday on the subject of 'Christian Stewardship.' It was an authoritative exposition of the Bible plan for one's business relations with his Creator, and it carried conviction to the congregation."

Mrs. W. H. La Prade, of Hazlehurst, visited Mrs. Robert Selby at Brookhaven, Miss., on Monday, January 25, and in the afternoon of that day made an interesting talk at the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of that city. Mrs. La Prade is the Corresponding Secretary of the woman's work within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

We regret to be informed that Brother D. C. Farmer, of Wesson, Miss., still has affliction in his family. He states that Sister Farmer, who was forced to go to a hospital last October, is yet in a poor state of health and does not seem to be improving. We trust that her case will soon take a turn for the better, however, and that the outlook will grow brighter for these servants of the Master.

At a meeting of the Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans last Monday strong resolutions were adopted condemning race track gambling in the city and looking to its prevention in the future. These resolutions were introduced by Rev. W. W. Drake and Rev. A. J. Gearheard and were passed without a dissenting voice. We hope to print them in the next issue of the Advocate.

Writing from Eunice, La., on January 28, Rev. A. A. Bernard says: "We had a great time at the prohibition rally here last night. Dr. Morrow was at his best. Old whiskey-soaked Eunice was awakened to some extent to the great need of a remedy for the evils developed in a saloon atmosphere. We had fully 200 at the speaking, and two-thirds of them were men. Let's pull for a dry Louisiana."

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Okolona, Miss., sent us a few days since 1 renewal and 5 new subscriptions to the Advocate, for which he has our hearty thanks. Brother Brown adds: "Do not cut down the size of the paper; there are enough interested to keep it going." If all our pastors were as active as he is in circulating the Conference organ, there would never have been any suggestion of reducing its size.

Dr. J. S. York, of Rayville, La., was in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call, but, much to his regret, the Editor was out and missed seeing him. Dr. York, whom we formerly knew and learned to esteem at Boyle, Miss., brought greetings from Mrs. York and Rev. A. I. Townsley which, as we were absent, he jotted down on a slip of paper. Rayville is fortunate in having secured Dr. and Mrs. York as residents.

Rev. and Mrs. O. L. Savage, of Belzoni, Miss., celebrated their silver wedding on January 9, with Rev. B. P. Jaco as the master of ceremonies. The occasion was a most interesting and happy one. Referring to his charge in a personal note to the Editor, Brother Savage says: "The people of Belzoni have done all that any pastor could expect for our comfort since my re-assignment to them for the fourth year. They are a worthy and loyal flock."

A note from Rev. J. H. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Corinth District, states that Rev. C. P. Moss, of Iuka, Miss., has been transferred to the Florida Conference and assigned to a church in the city of Jacksonville. Brother Moss has for many years been a popular and useful member of the North Mississippi Conference, and we give him up with not a little reluctance. The Methodists of Florida will find him in every respect worthy of their confidence and esteem.

The Protestant pastors of New Orleans, representing 32 churches, have started an evangelistic campaign of personal work. Each congregation will operate separately, but there will be a general spirit of co-operation. A committee has been named, with Dr. George Summey as chairman, to see if Billy Sunday cannot be secured at some time in the near future for a series of services in the Crescent City. This movement, however, is not a part of the present campaign of personal work which is now in progress.

At a meeting of the official board of our church at Lexington, Miss., on the evening of Jan. 28, at which 16 members were present, the assessment for the support of the preacher was increased from $1200 to $1500. We congratulate the Lexington congregation upon this forward step. Theirs is one of the best business towns in North Mississippi, and there is no reason why our church there should not take high rank in the Conference with which it is connected. Rev. V. C. Curtis, the new pastor of this flock, has already made a profound impression upon the community.

Mrs. W. S. Westbrook, of Prairie, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, states that she and her husband read it together with interest and appreciation for twenty years, but that he is now no longer with her, having been summoned into the Master's presence, and she has to read it alone. We are glad to know, however, that she still finds in its columns messages that comfort and strengthen her. May the gracious Heavenly Father continue to abide with her and bless her until she shall overtake the loved ones gone on before in the "city which hath foundations."

Rev. W. L. Broome, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but now a citizen of Oklahoma, in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "I was returned to Konawa at our Conference last fall, and my salary has been raised $200. Everything is starting off well and the prospects point to a better year than last year. I went out yesterday and collected the money to meet our assessment for home and foreign missions and sent it off to-day. That is pretty good for an hour's work, is it not? I have received 11 into the Church since the beginning of the new Conference year. I am happy in the work."

Rev. C. W. Baley writes as follows: "I have been in charge of the North Main Street Church of Water Valley, Miss., about six weeks, and the outlook seems to be quite promising. Brother W. J. O'Bryant wrought well here for the past four years, and he has a warm place in the hearts of the people. This congregation is alive and we have some as good workers as can be found anywhere. They stand by the preacher and hold up his hands. The Sunday school is doing a fine work. The membership of the church numbers about 100, and the Sunday school has an enrollment of 150, and an average attendance of from 95 to 100. I think that this is a fine showing."

Rev. W. A. Mangum, of Denham Springs, La., reports that the work has opened favorably in his charge and that everything indicates a successful year. Brother Mangum sent us a few days ago the names of the post offices on his work and requested us to send him a list of our subscribers at each of them. This is the proper way to campaign intelligently for the circulation of the Conference organ. In our office we have the names of all of the charges, but the Minutes of the Conferences do not give us the names of all the post offices in each of them. Hence we have many delinquent subscribers that we cannot connect with any one's pastorate. So if a preacher desires a complete list of the persons who receive the Advocate in his field, he must first furnish us with a list of all the places where his members receive their mail.

Mr. R. A. Maddox, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Mississippi Conference, has announced the following schedule of Institutes in the Seashore District: Hub, Feb. 5-7; Carriere charge, Feb. 8-11; Logtown, Feb. 12-14; Poplarville, Feb. 15-17; Americus charge, Feb. 24-27; Escatawpa charge, Feb. 28, March 3; Lyman charge, March 4-5; Brooklyn charge, March 6-7; Coalville charge, March 3-11.

The Commission Council of Shreveport, La., last week, acting upon the theory that the law making the parish the unit in local option contests is unconstitutional, made provision for an election to be held in that city on March 4 to determine whether it shall remain "dry," or have open dramshops. The prohibitionists have decided to take no part in the election ordered and to make their fight, for the present at least, exclusively in the courts. If the parish unit law should be invalidated it would, of course, affect the whole State of Louisiana. This action of the liquor men is not at all surprising. There is scarcely anything that they are not willing to resort to if it gives any hope of enabling them to carry on their nefarious business. But nothing can long save them. The saloon is doomed to complete and final destruction at no distant day.

A letter from Rev. J. L. Neill, the gifted young pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Laurel, Miss., written on January 29, brought us 25 subscriptions, of which 14 were renewals and 11 were new. In his communication Brother Neill said: "It is our plan to have 50 copies of the Advocate taken in our church before the second quarterly conference. With the multiplication of a pastor's duties in these days, he finds it hard to do all that he would like, but I have found that there is one thing that he must look after if it is taken care of at all, and that is the circulation of the church paper. I find also that its distribution among the people more than pays him for any effort that it costs to accomplish it." We thank Brother Neill both for his fine work in behalf of the Advocate and his valuable testimonial. So far, he heads the list in the number of subscribers sent in since the beginning of the new Conference year.

In a letter to our office, bringing us 9 subscriptions, for which we extend to him our thanks, our esteemed friend, Rev. Eugene Johnson, of Hernando, Miss., says: "Sister W. S. Weissinger had a serious accident about two weeks ago which resulted in the fracture of her hip. She suffers considerably, but her physicians are hopeful that she will recover sufficiently ere long to walk some with the assistance of crutches. She has long been an active member of our church here and will be greatly missed in the working circle." It grieves us to be informed of this sad occurrence. The Editor in the days agone was the recipient of many kindnesses at the hands of Mrs. Weissinger and her worthy husband, Dr. W. S. Weissinger, and he has not ceased to hold them in grateful and loving remembrance. May the Heavenly Father shower upon them both his richest blessings!

THE SECRETARY'S EXPLANATION.

The $3 that New Albany Station paid for Minutes, $6 that New Albany Circuit paid for Sunday School Field Secretary, $68 that Amory and Nettleton paid for Conference Claimants, and $25 for Sunday School Field Secretary, do not appear in the Minutes because these items do not appear on the statistical reports from these charges.

Here is a way for a city to get ahead of loan sharks. The Christian-Evangelist says: "Kansas City has a municipal pawn shop. It was founded to save worthy indigents who must have emergency money from the fleecing usually perpetrated by the loan shark. They made 12,000 loans last year, totaling more than $270,000, and paid six per cent on the capital invested. Such institutions save a multitude their earnings, defeat the wolfish business of the worst gang of human vultures to be found on the ragged edge of business, and keep many from sinking down into poverty."—Baptist World.

YOUR FRECKLES
Need Attention in February and March or Face Will Stay Covered.
Now is the time to take special care of the complexion if you wish it to look well the rest of the year. The February and March winds have a strong tendency to bring out freckles that may stay all Summer unless removed. Now is the time to use othine—double strength.
This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful that it is sold by your druggist under guarantee to refund the money if it fails. Get an ounce of othine—double strength, and even a few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the smaller freckles even vanishing entirely.

Death entered our community on Dec. 17, 1914, and claimed one of our best beloved citizens in the person of Miss SUSAN CATHERINE LYON. While we bow in humble submission to the Heavenly Father's will, our hearts are made sad by the loss of one so dear to us all. "Aunt Sue," for it was by this title that she was best known, was the youngest of several children that came to bless the home of Stephen Harmon and Matilda Crockett Lyon, and was born on Dec. 2, 1841, near the present site of Mt. Vernon Church, in Tate County, Miss. Early in life she gave her heart to God and united with the Methodist Church, South. She was a devout Christian, an earnest Sunday school and church worker, her one thought seeming to be for the advancement of the Master's cause. She was ever a friend to the sick and poor and those in need. We can hardly suppress our selfish feelings when we think of how much her life meant to all who knew her, but we know that her pure, white soul has gone to its Maker and we find a sweet consolation in the thought that, all is well with her. S. L. CROCKETT.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

(Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of Alberta, La., in appreciation of Mr. B. F. McClure.)

In the beginning of the new year, it has pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom to remove from our midst one of our beloved friends. Could we but speak to him we would say, "We miss you, dear brother," and our hearts go out in sympathy to those loved ones left behind, but God knows best; therefore be it resolved:

1. That in the death of our beloved Sunday school superintendent our Church has lost one of its best members, whose going is deeply felt, and that we all share in this great loss.

2. That we bow submissively to His will who doeth all things well, and while we grieve with his loved ones, there is a consolation in knowing he is at rest, and that our loss is his eternal gain.

Signed: Mrs. W. O. Hood, Mrs. W. A. Davenport, Mrs. W. B. Cooper, Committee.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF
Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.
If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.
Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

"TIZ" FOR ACHING, SORE, TIRED FEET
Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.
Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

From the Field.

Tremont Circuit, North Miss. Conf.

As I do not see anything from this part of the field and thinking it may be of interest, I will give the Advocate a brief report of the work on Tremont circuit. We are progressing finely with the Lord's work within the bounds of this charge. We have five Sunday schools at all the churches and have several prayer meetings begun. We had good revivals at nearly all the churches in the summer. At the Tremont Church we had one of the best meetings we have ever had there. Some of the visible results of the meeting were about a 100 conversions and 30 additions to the church on profession of faith. The church also was quickened into deeper spiritual life. The preaching was done by Rev. W. D. Bass. I think all the churches on the work are in a better condition than they were before Brother Bass came among us. But we feel that we have done very little for the Lord when we think of the many blessings he has bestowed on us, and we hope to do more for him this new year than we have ever done before. We have a good pastor. Brother Gean seems to be a power for God, both in the pulpit and out of it. He preaches Scriptural holiness wherever he goes and discusses the great fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion in such a way that even a child can understand and appreciate them. He preaches a Gospel that lifts men up and brings them closer to Christ.—(Miss) Estelie Townley.

Grand Cane, La.

I have been asked the question, why so few preachers write for the "Advocate," and also why I did not write. My answer was that I refrained from writing to give those room who had better news. I notice however, that what is written from the different charges is usually read with much interest by those on the charge from which it comes. I am back on the Grand Cane charge for a second year's work. The outlook is bright for a good year. The sun shines and the sea is calm, which promises a safe and prosperous voyage. Grand Cane is up here in DeSoto Parish in a very delightful climate, and has a splendid citizenship—a citizenship that it would be hard to duplicate. I serve, in connection with Grand Cane, Stonewall and Kelthville, and I can say as much for them as for Grand Cane. We have a most excellent class of young people; most of them are in the Church and are working at their job.

I have received many words of welcome since my return, by letters and in person. Our prayer meetings are fine. We closed our study of Old Testament characters with the old year, and with the new year have begun a study of New Testament characters. I have tried various plans for my prayer meeting and find this one most satisfactory. We usually have a gentleman, generally a young man, to lead the prayer service. After the reading of the lesson and prayer there is a paper read by a lady, usually a young lady, then the subject is discussed in short talks by any who will take part. Prayer is offered at intervals between the talks. On paper is an easy place to make promises, but I want to say that I am going to give the Advocate a chance on my charge, as I consider it my assistant pastor.—J. C. Price, P. C.

FROM A NATCHEZ FRIEND.

I have taken the Advocate so long—I really don't know how many years—and I surely do not want to do without it now when I am so old and cannot go to Church often; so I am renewing my subscription. I miss the names and writings of many who used to contribute to its columns, but who have now gone on before to their home in heaven. So many of the preachers that I used to know and love so well are gone—scarcely one is left. Many changes have taken place since I joined the Methodist Church. Well do I remember the opposition that was felt and what an awful sin it was thought to be, when a small melodeon was first used in the Church and a few members formed into a choir, in place of the old-time lining of some of the hymns when all of the singing was done by the congregation. That was a long, long time ago.

I miss the old preachers, but I have a dear, good pastor, whom I love very much, Brother H. B. Watkins, the grandson of my old, dear friend, Dr. W. H. Watkins, who received me into the Church more than fifty-eight years ago and who, with his good wife, were such good, faithful friends to me until their death.

May the blessings of our Heavenly Father be ever upon you and yours and the Advocate.

Your sincere friend,
LAURA L. DeLAP.

A REQUEST.

To the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Perhaps you have in your library a good book for young men or women to read. If not, you may have one that would just suit a boy or girl from the ages of seven to fifteen; possibly you have not opened this book for years, and now have no use for it at all. Of course, it was written to be read.

I am going to tell you how you can make hearts glad with this neglected book. Send it to (Rev.) W. B. Perritt, 1628 Caperton Street, Shreveport, La., who has under his care about one hundred people from the ages of five to twenty-five, who are anxious for a library for their Leagues and are unable to purchase it.

Many of the noble young men and women of Bossier City have not had the scholastic advantages that they should have had for two reasons: first, the schools in the past have been inefficient, and secondly, at an early age most of them were forced to quit school to assist in the support of the family.

Many of them still work in the large department stores in the city of Shreveport. We want to organize a reading circle in connection with our two Epworth Leagues, which are doing a great work among these young people; but we cannot organize the circle without the books, and we are not able to buy them.

Just write your name and address on the fly leaf in your book and send it to the above address. Not a new book is asked for, but one that you have read. The time to mail the book is just after reading this. You might forget it and we are waiting to read it. W. B. PERRITT.

A CORRECTION.

Dear Brother Meek: Please make a correction in the amounts paid by the Amory charge in the Advocate. The Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference show an assessment for Amory and Nettleton of $90, and nothing paid for Conference Claimants, whereas we paid the whole of our assessment, which was $68. We also paid the whole of our assessment for Sunday School Field Secretary, the amount being $25, for which we are given no credit. W. M. YOUNG, P. C.

A NOTE FROM SISTER THAMES.

Dear Brother Meek: During our recent great bereavement, we have received many letters from preachers and friends in the North Mississippi Conference, expressing their deepest sympathy and tender love for us, as we walk in the valley of tears. It has been impossible up to the present to express to each of these dear friends our gratitude and appreciation by means of a personal letter, but we hope to do this soon.

We have just moved into our new rented home at 1123 North West Street, Jackson, Miss. I wish to state to the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, that my address has been changed from Hernando to this place. I will continue to look after the work of my office, and will be glad to render any service in my power (sending literature, etc.) in the Children's Department.

Your friend,
Mrs. S. M. THAMES.

You Owe Your Face a Good, Clear Skin

And Stuart's Calcium Wafers in a Very Short Time Will Clear up Your Complexion Naturally.

Just in a few days one may clear the skin of all manner of blemishes, such as pimples, blotches, liver spots, etc., if one will use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Don't use pasty lotions and creams to fill up the pores when they are working constantly with the blood to throw off the impurities of your system.

"Before I rid my face of pimples I was not thought to be pretty. But all the change I made was to clean my blood and skin."

Many a face is made with beautiful contour and artistically lined, but when the skin is discolored one cannot see the beauty of the face lines. One notices only the skin blemishes.

It's because pimples and eruptions come from the inside—from impure blood—and you can't cure them by rubbing stuff on the outside of the face. Purify the blood and the blemishes will disappear.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers will often clear the complexion in a few days' time. That's the wonderful part of it—they act right off—in a hurry. That's because they're made of just the ingredients needed to drive all poisons and impurities from the blood. That's why doctors prescribe them so constantly.

You will speedily enjoy a beautiful complexion if you use these wonderful little Wafers. Your face will become as clear and pure as a rose. Nobody likes to have pimply-faced people around. With Stuart's Calcium Wafers you don't have to wait for months before getting results. Even boils have been cured in a few days' time with these remarkable effective blood cleansers. Your whole system will feel better in a marvelously short time, and my, what a difference in your looks!

You can get Stuart's Calcium Wafers of any druggist at 50 cents a box. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

The Sunday School.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Our problems are pretty much the same in all the churches, whether in the country or in the town—a lack of vision and religion. These problems challenge our faith and call us to deeper consecration. Let us thank God for them, take them up as they come, one at a time, and in His strength go forward.

If any superintendent doubts the superiority of the graded literature over the uniform lessons, let him observe two schools: one with class rooms and other modern convenience where the uniform lessons are used, and another school with only one room; but using the graded lessons in the Beginners' and Primary departments. The latter school will continue to draw pupils from the former. The graded literature outdraws all other equipment.

There are so many things we are called upon to do, that we are tempted to let them all alone and just drift along as we have been drifting. We know that will not do; for a Church that is not pressing forward is going backward. We must grow or die. Let us lay hold upon one proposition at a time, solve that, and we will have faith and strength for the next. The entire Sunday school is a missionary society. The Missionary Board is anxious to furnish a monthly program for each school. All other literature, catalogue of books adapted to each grade in the school, and other helps can be had for the asking. Address Dr. E. H. Rawlings, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Some one will have to get and read this literature, and then get the second person to read it, and by the time the third one reads it, three people will say we can and must carry out this program. All these helps prepared by the Board of Missions, unused, are good seed not planted. Better put the seed on stony ground than to fail to sow them anywhere. We are to sow; God will see to the harvest. It is in our power to make the Church of to-morrow what we will. Shall we make it "Non-Missionary," "Near-Missionary," or, like God wants it to be, "Missionary?" Back this missionary program with concentrated, concerted prayer, and the whole Church will move out of the grave-yard onto the firing line of God's battle-field.

A WIDE-AWAKE WESLEY CLASS.

The Queensborough Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., has a Wesley Bible Class which, I dare say, is unique in its purpose and its workings. Or it may be that I only think so. Anyhow I am going to tell you what we conceive to be our duty as a class organization. We have named our class The Earnest Workers. We meet every Monday night. Aside from the Sunday school lesson, which is conducted by a different member each night, the one to instruct in this being named a week in advance by our President, we take up at each meeting, under their various heads, reports from the social membership, and devotional committees. The duty of the devotional committee, primarily, is to conduct religious services at our charity hospital on Sunday afternoons. Our committee holds services there on the second and fourth Sunday afternoons, a committee from First Church taking the first and third Sundays. That is why we do not, as we used to, hold such a service every Sunday. It is also the duty of this devotional committee, made so by our present President, Mr. S. F. Kiligore, a man full of zeal for the Lord, to hold religious services anywhere, where they are asked for, or needed, at any time. Our class also does charitable work. We have assisted several whom we found in need, the money from such work coming directly from the treasury of our class. In order to be prepared for this, we have a voluntary assessment of 10 cents per month from those who feel inclined to make this contribution. This is not compulsory; it is entirely optional.

Then again, we have been the means of sending several, whom we found at the hospital, to their homes, such a desire having been expressed to our committee while it was holding services there. It has been the good pleasure of the devotional committee to report many conversions at the hospital, due to the efforts of the members holding the services. In fact, God has blessed the efforts on almost every occasion of their holding these services there. It has never been our disappointment to have his Word returned void; for, at every meeting held, if no conversion followed, there were those who held up their hands, asking for prayers in their behalf, showing that good seed had been sowed, anyway.

Neither is The Earnest Workers' Class composed altogether of members of the Queensborough Methodist Bible class. To the contrary, we have members who are not members of that Sunday school nor of that church. In very deed, we have members who are members of the Queenshorough Baptist Church. But we all work together in perfect harmony and brotherly love.

CARL D. HICKS.

MISSIONARY AND SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES.

There will be held three institutes in the Port Gibson District as follows:

1. At Centerville, for Centerville, Woodville Station and Circuit, Gloster and Liberty, Roxie and Nebo, beginning at 2:30 p. m. on February 16, and closing with a night service on February 17.

2. At Fayette, for Fayette, Natchez, Washington, Harrison, Hermanville, Utica and Rocky Springs, beginning at 2:30 p. m. on February 18, and closing with a night service on Fehruary 19.

3. At Vicksburg, for the Vicksburg churches, Port Gibson, Oak Ridge, Silver City, Roiling Fork, Anguilla and Mayersville, beginning at 2:30 p. m. on February 24, and closing with a night service on February 25.

The pastors, local preachers, charge and church leaders, and Sunday school superintendents are earnestly urged and are expected to attend. Come praying and ready to help all you can and learn all you may.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy, thick with a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply molsten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

A Better Digestion and Liver for You

It's bad blood that makes your liver sluggish and the same bad blood causes your stomach muscles to lose their elasticity and become flabby and weak and that means indigestion.

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, purely vegetable and free from alcohol or narcotics, is the great and powerful blood purifier of to-day. It is extracted from American forest roots with pure triple refined glycerine.

Take it as directed and it will search out impure and poisonous matter throughout the system and eliminate it through the natural channels.

It will penetrate into the joints and muscles and dissolve the poisonous accumulations. It will replace all the bad blood it drives out, with rich, pure blood full of vital force. It will furnish you with the kind of blood that increases energy and ambition, that puts the entire body in such perfect physical condition that brain or muscles know no fatigue.

It will clear the skin; eczema, pimples, rash, blotches will dry up and disappear; boils, carbuncles and other evidences of tainted blood will pass away, never to appear again.

Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery from any medicine dealer today, in either liquid or tablet form, as you prefer. It's the one great blood maker and purifier that all weak or run-down people ought to start to use at once. If you want good blood, good health and clear skin, get a supply today.

NO CHARGE FOR THIS BOOK.

If you will send three dimes, or stamps, to pay for wrapping and mailing and enclose this notice, Doctor Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., will send you a revised copy of his Common Sense Medical Advisor, in cloth binding, 1008 pages, with color plates. Just what you need in case of sickness or accident. Treats of Physiology. Anatomy, Sex problems, Marriage relations, Hygiene, Exercise, Disease and its prevention.—Adv.

GROWTH OF KOREA MISSION.

The Korean mission of the Southern Methodist Church was opened in 1894 by Dr. C. F. Reid. In 1898 the missionary force consisted of Rev. and Mrs. C. F. Reid, Rev. and Mrs. C. T. Collyer, Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Hardie and Mrs. J. P. Campbell. There were two stations and circuits, four assistants, twenty-two students enrolled in the schools and 116 church members. The native contributions were $67.08.

The reports for 1914, as given at the recent annual meeting, show the following statistics: Missionaries, 43; wives of missionaries, 21; ordained native preachers, 7; local preachers, 23; membership, 6000; native contributions, $5611. There are 105 exhorters, 30 colporteurs, 48 Bible women and 208 class leaders. Of Sunday schools there are 175, with 500 teachers and about 7000 pupils. There are nearly 2000 students in the schools and colleges. Many thousands of patients are treated annually in the several hospitals.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid in the blood, which affects the muscles and joints, producing inflammation, stiffness and pain. This acid gets into the blood through some defect in the digestive process.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the old-time blood tonic, is very successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It acts directly, with purifying effect, on the blood, and improves the digestion. Don't suffer. Get Hood's today.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS.

If your Back is aching or Bladder Bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acids of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

FACTS THAT COUNT.

While but twenty-five years ago there was but one church in Uganda, there are now over 1200. Some 2300 African Christians, supported by the native church, are engaged in work there. Forty have been ordained, and are ably taking charge of thousands of African adherents, communicants and scholars.

Two of Dr. Livingstone's descendants, Dr. Hubert and Miss Ruth M. Wilson, have sailed from England to take up work as missionaries in Livingstone, near Lake Nyassa, which was discovered by Livingstone in 1859.

"We hope the war situation abroad," says Robert E. Speer, "will recall the Church to the sacrificial principle of missions. The Church as a whole has never done anything sacrificial. Individual Christians have followed Christ, but the Church, as Duff said, "has played with missions." In Europe to-day great nations have risen to the height of an unlimited sacrificial devotion. Is the Church to show less loyalty to Christ and his honor? Every soldier dying for his country on a European battlefield, every home giving up its blood and tears, is a summons and a reproach to us men and women who have accepted the Christ of the Cross, but not the Cross of Christ. If they have counted their cause above their lives and their every possession, why not we? What they freely yield to their lords of war and death, shall not Christians give with joy to their Lord of Life and Peace?"

THE NEED OF BRAZIL.

The great need of Brazil is to get the Bible to the people. This includes not merely getting the Book into the hands of the people but many times instruction in learning to read and the explanation and presentation of its truths. There must be given to Brazil the religion of Jesus Christ to overcome the sin and transform the present corrupt moral and religious conditions. Enlightenment of conscience and renewal of moral life are needed that true principles of service and responsibility to our neighbors may develop.

It has fallen largely to the women of our Church to give the Bible and its teachings to this country through its schools, aiming by a Christian education to develop character and to teach the relation the individual bears to the kingdom of God and to society. It is an endeavor to make lives stronger, purer, and nobler.

Much more attention must be given to the training of our native teachers. Our schools are not preparing enough helpers, and is it not true that those who will best meet the demands are those who have received their preparation and normal training through us?

There have been occasions when our schools have faced the question, not of securing a competent teacher, but of getting one at all. Can the importance of having a school for advanced work and normal training be overemphasized?—Miss Blanche Howell.

REPORT OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF HOME DEPARTMENT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

This report as compared to 1913 is as follows:

Adult auxiliaries 86, increase 2; Adult members 2227, increase 49; Young People's auxiliaries 13, increase 1; Young People's members 329, increase 10; Junior Divisions 39, increase 14; Junior Division members 900, increase 221; Total number of members 3456, increase 280; Members on Baby Roll 309, decrease 169; Subscribers to Missionary Voice 762, increase 22; Subscribers to Young Christian Worker 163, increase 77; Members Mission Study Class 690, increase 20; auxiliaries using leaflets 51; Number pledged to Christian Stewardship 48; auxiliaries observing Week of Prayer 29; auxiliaries visiting sick and strangers 20; auxiliaries holding cottage prayer-meetings 22. We have a Woman's Board of City Missions with nine auxiliaries identified with it. We pledged $2000 to our Home Department work, and from our State treasurer's report only $1476.21 has been paid, which leaves a balance of $523.79 unpaid. In 1913 we pledged $2025 and paid $1615.40; so, you see, for 1914 we paid $139.19 LESS than in 1913.

Our Week of Prayer offering for 1914 was $206.08, which is $28.94 less than for 1913.

We can only look forward and hope that each auxiliary will enter heartily into the new plans for our missionary work. Mrs. W. T. CUNNINGHAM,
Cor. Sec. Home Dept.

REPORT OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY FOR FOURTH QUARTER, FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

Eleven new auxiliaries, 3 adult, 2 young people's, and 6 junior divisions. New members, adult, 52; Young People 17; Junior Division 75; total 144. Total number of auxiliaries 130; total number of members 2898. Life members 23; honorary life members 6. Subscribers to Missionary Voice 660; to Young Christian Worker 165. Members of Mission Study Classes 442; missionaries supported 2; scholarships 15; Bible women 6. We support 1 day school; also 1 district school. Our newest missionary society is that at St. Mark's Hall, with a membership of 17, all except one being either foreign born or having worked in foreign lands.

AN INTERESTING GIFT.

The Home Department Secretary has been notified of the deeding of a certain piece of property in Arkansas to the woman's work. It is the purpose of the donor that this property shall be sold and the money invested, so as to found a vested fund, the interest of which is to be used for the support of a deaconess to work in penitentiaries. The donor has done much evangellstic work in the penitentiaries and knows the great need of the deaconess work at these centers. A few weeks previous to the notification of this gift application was made for a deaconess to go to a certain penitentiary where there were sick and dying convicts who had no one to prepare them for death save a convict nurse. Thus demand and supply seem to go hand in hand in our work as they do in nature. There is always an opportunity for service for women of deep religious life and experience.

THE RELATION OF EDUCATION AND EVANGELISM IN MISSIONS.

Almost from the beginning of modern missions the extent to which education should form a regular part of the missionary propaganda has been a mooted question. Some missionary societies have adhered throughout to a policy of pure evangelism, and have refused to employ any of their funds in educational work, on the theory that such work was not religious, but secular. Our own missionary policy in its earlier history not only emphasized the evangelistic work as its main feature, but had little to do with any other forms of educational work except day schools and girls' schools confined almost exclusively to the children of native Christians. In the course of time it developed that the only native leaders and helpers we could secure in our work were those left over from the ones trained by other Missions after they had provided for their own needs. Taught by this experience, we have finally come around to the policy, to be carried out as far as our finances will admit of it, of having both boys' and girls' boarding schools as constituent features of all fully equipped mission stations, and of developing college work in connection with all our Missions.

The expensiveness of educational work is a serious matter, and we find it difficult to develop educational institutions that are worth while without absorbing in them a disproportionate part of our missionary funds, and making it impossible to give the emphasis to the evangelistic side of the work which we still believe it ought always to have.—The Missionary Survey.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Is Harmless To Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.
Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.
I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

How To Get Rid of a Bad Cough

A Home-Made Remedy that Will Do It Quickly. Cheap and Easily Made.

If you have a bad cough or chest cold which refuses to yield to ordinary remedies, get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth); pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking a teaspoonful every hour or two. In 24 hours your cough will be conquered or very nearly so. Even whooping cough is greatly relieved in this way

The above mixture makes a full pint—a family supply—of the finest cough syrup that money could buy—at a cost of only 54 cents. Easily prepared in 5 minutes. Full directions with Pinex.

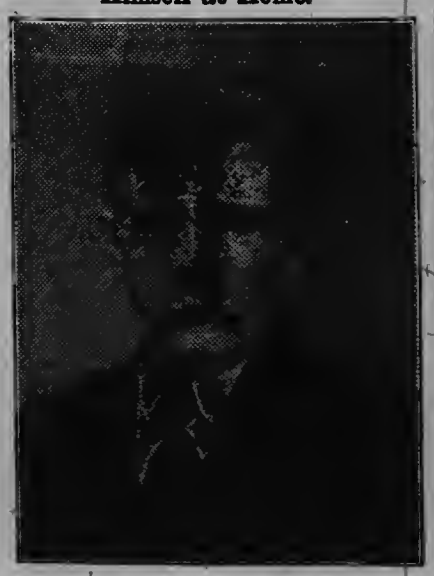
This Pinex and Sugar Syrup preparation takes right hold of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough in a way that is really remarkable. Also quickly heals the inflamed membranes which accompany a painful cough, and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. Excellent for bronchitis, spasmodic croup and winter coughs. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex,"—do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Cured His Rupture

Confederate Veteran Used the Brooks Rupture Appliance and Cured Himself at Home.



Taken From a Photograph of Mr. Henry D. Banks—R. F. D., No. 11—Commerce, Ga.

Mr. Banks writes—"I am sound and so well that I can plow or do any kind of heavy work. I can truly say your Appliance has effected a permanent cure. I was in a terrible condition and had given up hope of ever being any better. If it hadn't been for your Appliance, I would never have got well. I am 70 years old and served three years in Eckle's Artillery of Oglethorpe Co. I hope God will reward you for the good you are doing to suffering humanity."

Brooks' Appliance, the modern scientific invention, the wonderful discovery that makes life worth living, for ruptured people, will be sent on trial. No springs or hard pads. Has automatic air cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Full information and book on rupture, mailed free. Write today. C. E. Brooks, 2023B State St., Marshall, Mich., U. S. A.

IMMIGRATION INTO ARGENTINA.

A vivid glimpse of the cosmopolitan immigration into Argentina—where more than 300,000 newcomers arrive each year—is given in a letter from Mr. W. C. K. Torre. The following paragraphs are of special interest:

"We have in this city of Buenos Ayres 1,500,000 souls, and the population increases. With the natural growth and the inflowing tide of immigrants from Europe, the need seems to me to be increasing. The other day I asked a brother who has been visiting the immigrants on arrival, distributing gospels among them and seeking to help them, if he would go out into the street, speak to the first twenty men he met and see what they knew of the Bible. He did so, and the result is most instructive. These twenty men represented six different nationalities—Spanish, Italian, Servian, Uruguayan, Portuguese, and Roumanian. The Uruguayan said he had read portions of the Bible. One Spaniard knew something about the Bible, but he had never read it. A Portuguese said he had read the Bible An Italian had read the Bible and seemed to have faith in the Lord Jesus. Another Spaniard said he had studied at a Jesuit college in Spain but he had never had a Bible in his hands. And what about the other fifteen? None of them had ever seen a Bible, and by their replies they knew nothing about it.

DON'T CHEAPEN YOURSELF.

Young man or young woman, you are worth something. Don't sell yourself too cheaply. Your strength, intellect, industry, application, morals, principles, and high character—all of these are assets. They are worth something if you have any of them. They are priceless if you have them all, for they are what make our foremost men and women. They make great teachers, workers, preachers, leaders, generals in war, captains of industry, managers of railroads, and heads of corporations.

Remember in this frivolous time that the one thing you really have as long as you live is your body. That is yours. That stays with you to the end. You must live with yourself. Where you go, it goes with you; when you pass away, it is in your casket.

If this be true (and it can not be denied), make the priceless gift to your Creator of a sanctuary, clean, sweet, wholesome, spiritual as well as physical, living the life that you know you should live, putting a high value on the human frame in which you make your home.

Beautify it with all the graces of deportment, courtesy, kindness, and affection. Do not cheapen it with vice, licentiousness, greed, intemperance, sordidness, unbelief, and all the train of sorrow and suffering that follow in the path of sin.

Keep yourself worth all that you can. Hold yourself in the world's market at the highest price.

As the farmer seeks to win the prizes with the best products of the soil and breeding stable, as the manufacturer strives for the finest work of the loom, the forge, or spindle, as the young housewife delights in the most delicate embroidery and the artist in the highest example of his art, so let every one, however humble, seek the best for what he has to offer, and he will get the higher price.

There is a public market always open for our varied talents. We need go to no pawn shop with them. We need not cut prices. We need not sell at a sacrifice. There is no bargain counter for soul and body. "The life is more than meat, and the body more than raiment."

The young man who thinks that the world owes him a living, that he must have it regardless of what he gives in return, makes a fatal mistake.

The young woman who believes that a pretty face, a graceful figure with beauty unadorned, and the display of many jewels will win her way is following the leadership of the blind. She will pay the price with bitter repentance.

Avoid the primrose path of dalliance. Take the beaten way, though it is strait and narrow, for the end is peace.

The discoverer must sail over many troubled seas. He must climb the highest peaks and break his tortuous way through many a jungle; but if in the end he reaches the goal, he will be satisfied.

There is a goal for you.—John A. Sliecher, in Leslie's.

LIES TRAVEL IN LARGE COMPANIES.

Some one has well said: "The way down which the bad ship Wickedness slides to a shoreless ocean, must be greased with lies."

This is a very true statement, for when one lie has been told, it is pretty sure to be followed by another and another, until the liar is really unable to tell how many lies he has told.

Seldom can a boy or a girl tell one lie and then stop at that. Dean Swift, the famous writer, once said, "He who tells a lie is not sensible of how great a task he undertakes, for he must be forced to invent twenty more lies to maintain that one."

Let us beware of telling the first falsehood, for lies travel in large companies, and if we never tell a single falsehood, we shall not be tempted to tell other falsehoods in order to try to conceal the first one.—Christian Intelligencer.

Editorial

"Since time began,
To-day has been the friend of man;
But in his blindness and sorrow,
He looks to yesterday and to-morrow."

* * *

If education is all that is needed to make Christians, as not a few people now seem to think, will some one please tell us what is the matter with Dr. Eliot?

* * *

The Mormons may have abandoned polygamy, but we should hate to belong to a denomination that had to be reformed in that respect by the strong arm of the civil law. We have never had much faith in a coerced decency.

* * *

What is the use of setting men apart to the work of the Christian ministry if the Church is thereafter to entangle them in all sorts of secular affairs and make of them a sort of jack of all trades? If this is to be the kind of service demanded of our pastors in the future, had we not better begin to establish some vocational church schools of the potpourri variety?

* * *

What the Church needs is ministers and members who will lay hold of the mighty powers that are available for human redemption and rightly wield them. The cry of the world is not for forms and creeds and religious speculation, but for a vital force that can break the shackles of sin and give life to the soul and make it clean and strong. The Holy Spirit alone can save the sinner and fill his heart with peace and hope and lofty aspirations.

* * *

A contemporary says: "The worst friend a man can have is a frivolous, irreligious woman." This affirmation, in our judgment, is not in the least exaggerated. The influence of woman is very great, whether it is exerted to lift her associates up or to drag them down. And some of them have been getting men into trouble ever since Mother Eve set them the regrettable example in Eden.

Billy Sunday says that sometimes when a man dies it is considered a noble tribute to him to say that "he didn't have an enemy in the world," but that in reality this is equivalent to declaring that he was "no account." In our opinion, this comes pretty near being true. Christ made enough enemies during the three years of his public service to crucify him, and, according to tradition, all the Apostles died violent deaths except St. John, and he was fiercely persecuted, being thrown into a caldron of boiling oil and banished to the Isle of Patmos. The man who is sufficiently sleek and pliable to avoid creating any antagonisms can scarcely claim to be either Christlike or in the apostolic succession. A person who faithfully does his duty is almost certain to arouse some opposition, however tactful he may be. This is not to his discredit; but let him see that in the face of such antagonisms he exhibits the spirit of his Lord. This is the important thing.

BILLY SUNDAY'S WORK.

The North American thus sums up Billy Sunday's work in Philadelphia at the close of the first month of his great campaign in that city: Number of conversions, not including 2844 who signed cards professing faith in Christ at the services for children, 13,609; receipts at the tabernacle for the first half of the campaign, $43,151.19; 1,500,000 papers containing the evangelists sermons have been circulated, and have been read by at least 5,000,000 persons.

Attention from all parts of the country has been focused upon the famous revivalist for the past few weeks. Ministers and others specially interested in religious work in perhaps every State in the Union have been reading his sermons and studying his methods as they have been described in the newspapers. Even such papers as The Independent and The Outlook have been carrying specially prepared articles concerning the Philadelphia meeting—a very unusual thing. It is to be hoped, however, that this widespread interest and observation will not result in a crop of servile imitators of the oddities and outstanding peculiarities of Mr. Sunday's ministry. To undertake to talk and act like a man of such a unique and extraordinary personality is to make one's self ridiculous. However, the faith, the consecration, the fearlessness, the oneness of aim, and the tremendous zeal of this man of God are well worth noting and striving to emulate.

In this connection the following remarks of Dr. James Cannon, Jr., of Virginia, who has had the privilege of hearing the renowned evangelist and of forming an estimate of him based on first-hand knowledge, will doubtless prove of interest to many of our readers:

"Billy Sunday's methods are both sane and Scriptural. He relies chiefly upon the Bible and prayer. He considers preaching to be 'rightly dividing the word of truth.' Like Mr. Moody, he preaches the Word. He is dogmatic, openly, almost fiercely dogmatic. He indulges in no speculations; he knows no compromise: 'Jesus Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree.' We are saved by faith and not by character. Personal responsibility, heaven and hell, are vital facts. Absolute loyalty to Christ as divine Master and Lord is demanded on pain of rejection by him before the assembled universe.

"'The word of truth' means to him the old fundamental orthodox doctrines which have always gripped the hearts of men, and which have always been preached in any great outpouring of the Spirit and revival of religion. The Christian religion is thoroughly uncompromising, and the Master himself with all his mercy and love never made any compromise as to the truth. The man who accepts him as Savior and Master has eternal life and the man who rejects him has eternal death. Thank God, the preaching of Billy Sunday demonstrates afresh that what the people need and that what they really hunger after is the 'word of truth.'

"Other objections lie against the personal characteristics of the man. Here I am obliged to refer the critics to God for answer. I am not an apologist for some of the gestures Billy Sunday makes, nor for the attitudes he strikes, nor for some of the expressions he uses. 'To his own Master he standeth or falleth.' I know that God has made use of men and of methods which I shall never understand. But I have been obliged to accept them and to rejoice in the results of the labors.

"The blowing of rams' horns about Jericho was not scientific, but the walls fell. The exploits of Samson are a tangled web which it is hard to untangle, but he stands in the eleventh of Hebrews as one of the heroes of faith. Gideon with his lamps, pitchers and trumpets is utterly inadequate as an explanation of results. What figure is more spectacular than that of John the Baptist, with his camel's hair coat and his locusts and wild honey denouncing men as thieves, liars, hypocrites, and serpents? The people cried that he had a devil, but the Divine judgment declared that no greater man had been born of woman. What reception would John the Baptist receive to-day if he should step out on the banks of the James River with only a camel's hair robe and a leathern girdle, and if he should denounce men to-day as he did then? Doubtless some Herod or Herodias in high society would seek to muzzle his lips and denounce him as possessed of a devil.

"With Samson and Hosea and John the Baptist before me, I do not propose to reject the work of Billy Sunday because I would not use some language he uses or make some gestures he makes. God seems to be using him to accomplish a great work, just as he used Samson. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' Test Billy Sunday by the fruits and not by our pre-conceived opinions of what God will and will not do."

A HIGH COMPLIMENT TO SOUTHERNERS.

In discussing the large cotton crop of last year, its low price, and what should be done to improve conditions in the South, the New York Commercial concludes a recent editorial utterance with the following high compliment to the citizens of this section of the Union:

"At least half of this crop has to be sold for what it will bring to carry the farmers through because so many of them are in debt, but the bountiful yield should be regarded as a blessing and can be made one if the market is not swamped by another large crop planted in the face of known adverse conditions. This country owes its growth and wealth to the versatility of its people. We have progressed because we have shown aptitude for turning our hands to anything that promised profits. Whenever they have left the South Southerners have displayed this national faculty more notably than any other class of people. They were the leading pioneers in the settlement of the Southwest, the Intermountain country, and California. They are the most versatile men who come to New York and they have won more than their share of the successes due to merit and industry. If those at home on the plantations will adapt themselves to existing conditions as rapidly and cheerfully as do those who go farther afield in search of fortune, they should find this the most prosperous year they have ever enjoyed."

HIS HAND.

There is a Hand that wipes away
The tears from eyes that weep;
That calms the fevered brow, and gives
To wakeful eyes sweet sleep;

A Hand that blesses children, as
They play the hours away;
A Hand that comforts aged ones
Who watch for close of day;

A Hand that guides through darkness,
Through storm and sore distress;
That leads the weary traveller to
The port of happiness.

That Hand was, pierced and bleeding, nailed,
Oh, nailed to Calvary,
For the love the heart of Jesus had
For those like you and me.

WESLEY'S PRAYER-ROOM.

City Road Chapel is the historical church of Methodism—a sort of Wesley Westminster Abbey. At the south side stands the Wesley House, where John Wesley took up his residence at the age of seventy-six. The second floor is open as a museum. The front room was used by Mr. Wesley as a study. In the rear of his bed-room and opening out of this is a little chamber eight feet two inches by six feet nine inches. A very little room it is. But it was the power-house of Methodism. A marble slab under the mantel tells its story: "This little room is the place where Wesley retired for prayer." This little prayer-room is as eloquent an insight into his life as was Daniel's upper chamber with the window open toward Jerusalem an index to the character of that worthy. It is more—here is the secret of Methodism's wonderful triumphs, for Methodism was made by such prayers as were offered in this little room. Wesley's prayer-room is a sanctuary calling us to the too often neglected practice of prayer. How we need just such prayer-rooms in our homes, and in our churches—the quiet time and place where one may go to be alone with God! "In quietness and in confidence shall be thy strength."

Wesley knew the value of such a sanctuary, for he had been with the Master, and learned of him: "When thou prayest enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee."

"Begin the day with God: he is thy sun and day,
He is the radiance of thy dawn, to him address
thy lay;
Thy first transactions be with God himself above;
So shall thy business prosper, and all thy day be love."

—The New York Christian Advocate.

INDIVIDUAL WORK FOR INDIVIDUALS.

There is constant danger of too much generallzation in Christian effort. We give to the general missionary cause; we pray for those in sickness and distress, for the people of the Church and for the community at large. However commendable and good this general Christian labor may be, it will never take the place of individual missionary effort. The kind of missionary work which counts above all others is individual work for individuals.

It is an excellent thing to make a list of the names of needy ones in whom we feel a special interest. For these we can offer special prayer in our secret devotions or at the family altar. For these we may put forth special effort. It is interesting to watch the results of Christian labor of this character. We pray for one who is sick. In time that prayer is answered. How thankful we are then to eliminate his name from the list, and add the name of another in need! We pray for a wayward youth who is backslidden, at the same time manifesting a kindly interest in the wanderer and putting forth judicious efforts to bring about his return to the Lord. We may watch with interest the means which God employs to bring about an answer to our prayer. When the wanderer returns his name may be dropped from the list, and the name of another added in its place. In this way we shall be enabled to watch with great interest our changing list, and our hearts will be led to rejoice many times by the direct manner in which God has responded to our prayers.—Review and Herald.

THE PROGRESS OF METHODISM IN CUBA.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Cuban Mission has just been held in the city of Pinar del Rio, the capital of the western border of the island. The meeting was one of great harmony and spiritual power. The reports showed marked progress in every department of the work. We have now in the island, 3,893 members and 619 candidates for membership, or a total of 4,512. The net increase of the actual membership during the year 1914, was 244."

For all purposes the Cuban Churches contributed during the year $12,187 American gold, or about $3.13 per member. Most of them are poor people, and they are very generous indeed.

Most of our schools have as many students as they can handle. Each of them might have many more, if adequate rooms were provided. For example, Candler College in Havana, over which Rev. H. B. Bardwell presides, has a capacity for 101 students, and the total enrollment for the year was 118. On the waiting list are many seeking to enter, and when for any cause a student drops out, another takes his place at once. This fact explains why the enrollment for the year was seventeen more than the number which the institution can accommodate. President Bardwell could have 200 or 300 students if he had accommodations for them, just as easily as he now has every day 101.

He has organized a church in the new college building, and 50 of the 101 students are candidates for church membership. The institution surely needs a chapel which could be used both for the daily worship of the students and as a church for the growing congregation. Such a building would in a year double the strength of our Methodism in Havana.

The most urgent need of our Cuban Methodism is a church for our central congregations (American and Cuban), now housed inadequately in remodeled old residences on Virtudes Street. The location is most admirable, but the buildings are wholly unsuited to our purposes. They were on the lots when we bought the property some years ago, and were changed in their interior arrangement so as to shelter our American congregation, and Cuban congregation, and our school as it was at first organized.

When the new Candler College was built, two years ago at a point in the suburbs of the city, known as "Puentes Grandes," it was supposed that it would not be necessary, or perhaps possible, to continue school work at the old place; but this has not been the case. A branch of the college (primary and secondary grades) continues in the property on Virtudes Street, under the presidency of Rev. E. E. Clements, and it is very largely attended.

In the property on Virtudes Street we require two missionaries to make their residences, besides finding rooms for the school and places of worshin for two congregations. This results in most uncomfortable crowding, and hinders the highest success. With $40,000, the whole situation can be relieved. This will give us an imposing church, and make the residences of the missionaries comfortable and the rooms for the school adequate. Atlanta Methodists have contributed already $10,000 of this amount, as a special over and above the assessments on their churches. They hope to raise $10,000 more. Will not the Southern Methodists throughout the whole connection speedily raise the rest of the $10,000 required? Surely for such a building in the capital of the Cuban Republic—a city of 300,000 inhabitants, $40,000 is not too much to ask.

The work on the Isle of Pines is doing well in the hands of Brother M. M. Marshall and Brother M. M. Stewart. The former needs about $1,000 more for the completion of the church at Santa Barbara, and the latter should have at least $4,000 for the church and school building at Nueva Gerona. The people of the Isle of Pines are very liberal and will give for these buildings more than twice as much as is asked of the Church at home. They ask help in this time of need, and well deserve all that is asked.

The money which the Church has already invested in the Cuban Mission has yielded the largest and best returns. Shall it not receive now the additional help which the development of the work requires?—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION IS COMING.

Dear Dr. Meek: More than thirty years ago we started the agitation for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in Montgomery County, Mississippi, where the first local option election ever held in this State was held under a special act of the Legislature. Two years after this a local option law was passed for the entire State, and one by one the counties took it up, until to-day there is not a legalized saloon in the State, for which we thank God and rejoice.

It took three years of hard fighting to win in Montgomery County, but it was a glorious victory. We were considered cranks, fanatics, lunatics, and some other names I do not care to have printed. Some people scorned, some laughed, others ridiculed, a number "cussed," and a few pitied us, but we prayed and worked and trusted in God. We won in spite of all the liquor and money the gang could get from Cincinnati to New Orleans and use against us. There were some as brave and true men engaged in that conflict as ever unsheathed a sword on any battlefield. Many of them have passed away and have heard the Master say, "Well done; thou good and faithful servant."

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." It has grown and spread until the cause of prohibition will in the next few years sweep the whole American continent. The sober, thoughtful good people of the twentieth century are tired of the wicked rule of the liquorites. They have disgraced the nation and if they had their dues would be keeping company with many a poor fellow in prison where the liquor business has sent him.

But these fellows have had their day, thank God, and prohibition will sweep the world. One by one, the States have fallen into line and soon there will be a solid South on this question which, to my mind, is a standing argument for our true Americanism. The South is now about the only place where much of that is left.

Any apparent backset in this great movement is only temporary. Like truth, it may be trodden down to-day but it will rise again to-morrow. In Alabama two years ago prohibition was defeated by the gang, but it has now come back stronger and better than it was before; and it will come in Arkansas and Texas soon.

It is to be hoped that the Tennessee people just now will sit up and take notice and begin to enforce the prohibition law. They are our neighbors and we would hate to shut the door on them; but they are doing us harm by allowing their liquor to slop over on us from Memphis, and they ought to have some respect for their neighbors if they have none for themselves.

If the Democrats of Tennessee fail to stand by Gov. Rye and the platform of their party, to which they solemnly pledged themselves, Democracy will go down in awful defeat at the next election, as sure as you live. Any party will die, and ought to die, that will be ruled by a gang of liquor-soaked law violators. That "ouster bill" ought to pass the legislature right away. It is the only thing that will cure the existing evils. It will not hurt anybody in Tennessee, outside two or three cities which have already disgraced the whole State.

The good effects of prohibition in Mississippi are bearing fruit all up and down this good land, even in this generation. Some time ago a Mississippi boy went on a trip to Memphis in company with his father, and while passing up Main Street, they passed a saloon, and the boy got a whiff of one of those hellholes, and said, "Pa, what sort of a place is that?" The father replied, "That's a black whiskey hole, my boy." The boy then said, with an awful face, "Whoop, don't she stink?" These boys are many and the liquorites may get ready to step down and out, as they will soon be coming into their own.

Shame on the Nation for the respectability and protection she is giving this accursed business! It will not be long now until all those who are standing in the way of prohibition in the National Congress will be asked to step down and out. Some of them have created a stench in the land that makes decent people shut their eyes and hold their noses. The Speaker of the House not only disgrace himself, but also his "houn daug" and the whole Nation, when he recently appeared before an audience of 1000 people in Detroit to speak, so drunk that he was compelled to hold to the speaker's stand, and that his words were incoherent. It is said one-third of the audience left in indignation, and when the Secretary of the Board of Commerce asked him to desist and leave the platform, he refused. So the lights were turned off, but the Speaker of the House of Representatives rambled on, and was finally led from the platform by a committee. This is the man that the United States of America, narrowly escaped having for President in place of Woodrow Wilson. This is the man who says Congressman Hobson is "a knight errant, a political fanatic." And all this right in the face of a mighty wave of prohibition that is sweeping the world.

Whatever may be the harrowing scenes and heartaches of the awful war in Europe, there has come to the nations engaged in it and to the world a blessing that will be more lasting than the devastation and ruin of war. They will not stop with having learned that men under the influence of liquor are inefficient soldiers, but they will see that it disqualifies them for good citizenship. Prohibition will do more to help them rise from the wreck and ruin of this horrible war than everything else combined. Already it is yielding fruit. The Comptroller of the Russian treasury has stated that, because of the great increase in national savings due to prohibition, the extraordinary outlay occasioned by the war has caused no great suffering in Russia. He said that the national savings which in December, 1913, amounted to $350,000 had increased to $14,550,000 in December, 1914, and he added that the total savings for 1913, were $17,000,000, as compared with $42,000,000 for 1914. May the Lord speed the day when the whole world shall be free from the awful curse of drink! W. S. LAGRONE.

Clarksdale, Miss.

REV. WARREN C. BLACK, D.D.

By H. M. DuBose, D.D.

No other country has furnished so many examples, as has our own, of men who have successfully contended with fortune and circumstance and risen to distinction in life and service. To be born into that great typical American class whose heraldry is red blood, the choice of labor and the love of domestic quietness, is to be favored of providence. To this class, as has been demonstrated a thousand times, the Church and the Nation must look for their prophets and leaders. The life story now to be written runs significantly back to the precedents and traditions of this racial nobility.

Rev. Warren C. Black, D.D., was born in Copiah County, Miss., May 24, 1843, being the son of William Black, a native of Georgia, but of clearly traced Irish descent. His mother, Eliza McRee, born in North Carolina, was of Scottish blood as clearly traced as was the Irish lineage of her husband. Thus was united in the son the Celtic and Gaelic qualities which have so largely made the romance and heroism of the Western world.

About the end of the territorial era of Mississippi history the parents of Dr. Black, being then in their youth, were brought by their respective forebears to that State. The two families settled in the same district of Copiah County where, during the next decade, the young couple were married. They began life very poor, but being industrious and frugal, they began early to prosper, and by the end of the life of the husband, in 1860, had accumulated a moderate fortune consisting chiefly of lands and slaves. Their farm house stood within two miles of the site of the present town of Gallman, and was the birth place of the subject of this sketch. The house was burned many years ago, and the lands were afterwards subdivided into many smaller tracts.

The family of William Black consisted of ten children, three of whom died in infancy, the others reaching maturity. The eldest daughter, Mary Elizabeth, became the wife of Richard T. Hennington, who, after the war between the States, emigrated to Brazil, where his descendants yet live. The second daughter, Rebecca Jane, married John Fletcher Enochs, of the well known family of that name in Jackson, Natchez, and Oklahoma City. A son, James Monroe, lived to the age of sixty, dying in March, 1913.

When about six years of age, the son Warren, who was destined to bring distinction to the family name, was by the parents given to the care of a teacher in what for nearly a century has been known as "Bethesda School," in the neighborhood of the Black farm house. Dr. Black, in an unpublished autobiographical sketch, describes this primitive place of learning as "a small, rough, poorly lighted log cabin." In after years this cabin was succeeded by a more pretentious structure, described in the autobiography, as "sufficiently large for the use for which it was designed, with glazed windows, and also a stove."

The farmer lad was studious and alert—the solvent of every difficulty in the equation of youthful fortune. He was given to out of school reading, a habit stimulated by the good sense and sympathetic interest of his mother. Books and periodicals suited to juvenile literary tastes were scarce enough in that time and place, but some tales of adventure, a simple classic or two, a well worn outline of history, the Bible, a hymn book, and the church paper made the foundations of a research which in after years went into almost every field of literature and thought. In his more active years, Dr. Black was not only a man of omniverous reading, but was also a man of catholic mental sympathies and of manifold capabilities.

"I grew up with the habit of attending Church," he writes. Illuminating record! The power which gives the onward marching hosts of reform, and which evermore widens the vision of civilization, comes of the generations that on the Sabbath day crowd the rural altars of the land, more than from other cause or influence. So long as Israel stood with unpolluted hands before the altars of Jehovah, so long was Israel invincible. America's glory and power to-day are not in her marble Capitol, her army, or her navy, but in her unambitious and unlusting millions who gird themselves with prayer and listen with reverence to the evangel of truth.

At the age of thirteen, Dr. Black was converted and joined the Methodist Church, the Church of his parents. As in his literary tendencies, so in his religious convictions, he acknowledges the potency of his mother's sympathies and leadings. And so the records of life continually emphasize the meaning of a mother's ascendency over the lives of her children. This mother died in 1888, after her son was well advanced in his career of honor and usefulness.

In 1861 young Black was a student in Centenary College, Jackson, La. He was then eighteen years of age. The breaking out of the War between the States caused the College to close before the end of the year, and thus was terminated the bright promise of mental advancement which had risen before him, and thus was he left to that hand to hand struggle for knowledge which lasted throughout his years. For a few months after the discontinuance of the college classes, he taught in the rustic school at Bethesda, but was soon led to give up the schoolmaster's task for enlistment in the Confederate Army, whose battallions were then forming in terrible earnest. He was quickly advanced from the rank of a private to that of quartermaster sergeant. After two years of service he, with his entire command, became a prisoner of war at the fall of Port Hudson, on the lower Mississippi River. Having been, in the same year, paroled and exchanged, he re-entered the army as a member of the Twenty-fourth Mississippi Battallion of Cavalry, being elected first lieutenant of his company. The ranking officer of this company was John Wilkinson, an Irishman, who afterwards became an honored member of the Louisiana Conference. An associate lieutenant was David I. Purser, who later entered the ministry of the Missionary Baptist Church. With these two comrades, there being no chaplain attached to their company, he supplied religious instruction to the men in camp. "These non-ecclesiastical and unconventional services," as he describes them, were honored of God and produced lasting results in the lives of not a few to whom they were offered.

In 1864, during a visit, on furlough, to his mother's home, he was licensed to preach by the quarterly conference of Georgetown Circuit, Rev. William Finn, pastor. He was then within a few months of completing his twenty-second year. On March 24, 1865, the young soldier-preacher was united in marriage with Miss Phebe Marshall, of Spring Ridge, Hinds County, Miss. This union continued for forty years, the faithful wife passing to her reward on January 10, 1909. To her memory the husband bears this pleasing testimony: "Her life was devoted to the service of God, her family and the Church." Her children have called her blessed.

For four years, immediately following his marriage, Dr. Black taught school at Bethesda, and this appears to have been the period of his own greatest advance in letters. He was a student-teacher. He was also active in using his gifts as a preacher. As a local helper he filled, every Sabbath, the pulpit of some church or chapel in the districts about. In 1870 and 1871 he was, with his brother, James Monroe Black, engaged in a mercantile venture at Bolton, Miss., and, during the latter year, was also employed as a supply on the Raymond Circuit, which included the towns of Raymond, Bolton, and Clinton.

In December, 1871, came the final and crowning decision of his life. He entered at that time the itinerancy, joining the Mississippi Conference, at its session in Meridian, in the class with J. J. Smylie and H. W. Featherstun, the latter of whom alone remains. During the next twenty years he served six different charges in the Conference, as follows: Madison, Camden, Edwards, Jefferson Street, Natchez, Central Church, Meridian, and First Church, Jackson.

At the session of the Conference, held in the old First Church, Jackson, in December, 1877, the writer of this sketch was admitted into the traveling connection on probation. To recall the names and faces of the men familiar to the sessions of the body at that time is an exercise which produces deep emotion. Amongst the acknowledged leaders of the Conference were W. H. Watkins, H. H. Montgomery, W. E. M. Linfield, H. F. Johnson and Richard Abbey, each masterful in his way, and the first three of unusual power in the pulpit. Charles K. Marshall, not then in active service, towered amongst his fellows, clothed with the dignity of a Roman and incarnating an eloquence which had marked the age then closing. Amongst the younger and maturing members of the Conference were Charles B. Galloway, of glorious memory, Charles G. Andrews, the scholar and educator, Ransom Jones, the Knightly Messenger of a blameless King, W. B. Lewis, a Saint John amongst his brethren, Hiram R. Singleton, a soul of gentleness, Beverly Carradine, afterwards noted as an evangelist, and Edwin H. Mounger, a paragon of Christian manliness. To this group memory adds the name of Warren C. Black. He was strong, active and wide awake. He had already entered fully into the confidence of his brethren, and was coming forward as a leader and man of affairs. A sermon preached by him before the Conference, about this time, on the reference of the Master to the sparrows and lilies showed in an astonishing way how scientific knowledge may be used to illustrate the truths of religion. It recalled the discourses of Dr. Alexander Means, the great geologist-preacher of Emory College. A year or two later, he delivered before a session of the Crystal Springs Camp Meeting his justly celebrated address on "The Philosophy of Methodism." Being put into pamphlet form, this address enjoyed an extensive circulation, and became the foundation of that Church-wide distinction which his unusual talents had prophesied from the beginning of his ministry.

In December, 1892, the Bishop presiding at the South Georgia Conference transferred him to that body and stationed him at Mulberry Street Church, Macon, a Church whose pulpit has enjoyed the ministry of many eminent and eloquent men. He might have remained there for a quadrennium, but, in October of his first year in that pastorate, he was offered and accepted the editorship of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. In this office he succeeded such famous men as H. N. McTyeire, John C. Keener, Lewis Parker, Charles B. Galloway, and Charles W. Carter.

As an editor he sustained the record of a student of times and thought, and showed himself a capable and fearless defender of righteousness and the doctrines of the Church. His term of editorial service extended over a period of seven years, at the end of which he returned to the pastorate in his native Conference, being reappointed to his old charge at First Church, Jackson, Miss. This experience was followed by successive pastoral terms at Moss Point, Jefferson Street, Natchez, Brookhaven, and Court Street, Hattiesburg. In 1907 he was transferred by Bishop Ward to the North Mississippi Conference and stationed at Tupelo, to fill a vacancy caused hy the election of the pastor, Dr. Lewis, to the agency of Miilsaps College. At the end of the year he was re-transferred to the Mississippi Conference and made presiding elder of the Meridian District. A pastorate at East End Church, Meridian, followed this, to be itseif followed by an appointment to Edwards, wbere his health began to fail, making it necessary for him to ask to be relieved from active work. As a superannuate he lived for a considerable time at Tupelo, but more latterly resided at Meridian, where on January 4, 1915, he departed to be witb the Master whom he had so long served and preached.

It is impossible within the limits of a paper as brief as this must be to more tban outline the work and results of a life like that which is being treated of. In addition to being an unusually popuiar and effective preacher, Dr. Biack, in his years of strength was welcomed to a wide hearing on the lecture platform. The subjects of these lectures were nearly always religio-scientific. They were deeply engaging to every class of hearers, and instructive to an extraordinary degree. One of these lectures, "Genesis and Geology," summed in a truly learned way the investigations and conclusions of geologists and Bible critics up to the time of the lecturer's work. "God in Nature" was even more widely known and received as a popular utterance. "Is Man Immortal?" a discourse given sometimes as a lecture, sometimes as a sermon, was delivered before one hundred and forty, or more, public audiences in nine different States, from New York to Texas. Amongst these audiences were two State Legislatures and the Constitutionai Convention of Mississippi, held in 1890.

In the field of authorship Dr. Black was also not without success. In addition to the pamphlet on "The Philosophy of Methodism," he printed "A Centennial Retrospect," "Temperance and Teetotalism," and "Christian Womanhood," the last named heing a twelvemo book of three hundred pages, which quickly ran tbrough six editions, and left an unmistakahie impression upon the public sentiment of the time. His rank in the world of letters and theology was, in 1886, recognized by the Southern University which conferred upon him thc honorary title of Doctor of Divinity. About this time the presidency of two colleges was successively offered him, but he preferred the more active duties of the pastorate.

When he took charge of the New Orleans Christian Advocate he found the paper greatly embarrassed with debt. As editor-publisher he expended his strength to the point often of a nervous break down, and permanently impaired his health: but with the assistance of his son, Rev. Marvin McKendree Black, who did much editorial writing for him, he was able at the end of his term to leave the paper in a good financial condition. One of the marked features of his editorial work was his advocacy of temperance and probibition, by which means, as well as in his pastorates in Mississippi, he contributed much to the success of the reform and legislative movements of his day.

As a pastor Dr. Black madè a record of great faithfulness. He made it a rule to visit with especial diligence the humble and the poor of his Church, and to seek out strangers and new comers. He was tactful and sympathetic, and steered clear of partisanism and strife. He was successful in adding members to the Church, and also met the fiscal affairs of his pastorate in a business-like way. In faith he was strong, in labors ahundant. He originated the organization of Wesley Chapel, Natchez, as also the West End Church, in Meridian, and Rankin Street Church, in Jackson. He was from the heginning a trustee of Millsaps College and one of tbe promoters of that splendid enterprise.

To Dr. Black were horn eight children, only four of whom survive, namely: Warren F. Biack, of Birmingham, Ala., Rev. M. M. Biack, a heloved pastor in the Mississippi Conference, and two daughters, Miss Ada L. Biack, of Meridian, and Mrs. Clara A. Turner, of New Orleans, a widow.

To his children he leaves the memory of a faithful and well rounded life, and to his Church the fruits of a loyal and consecrated service. His end was peace. He had been confined to his room for fully three months before his death. He suffered much, but was uncomplaining and remarkahly cheerful. To his presiding èlder, Brother J. T. Leggett, who was leaving for Conference, he said: "I may drop off before you get back, but if so, you will know where to find me."

We shall know where to find him! With Smylie, and Bradford, and West, and Weems, with Powell, and McLaurin, with Parker, and Mellen, and with others of his class and age, together with the fathers ascended, we shall find him in the kingdom of giory and of God.

"It is a great thing if we can learn to see in other men the possibility of what they may become."

II.

In Brother Felts' further suggestions he presents for our consideration, very significantiy, one in which the Board of Education is singled out (for what reason in Texas we know not), aiong with tbe Joint Board of Finance (wbose work is executive more than deliberative), as put under a rule that their reports to the Conference shaii be made "not later than the Saturday morning session; said reports to lie on the table until tbe next regular session."

As a member of the Board of Education during the past quadrennium and one of its members at present, and as Conference Secretary of Education, we naturaliy take special interest in this suggestion; especialiy when it is foliowed hy assertions by Brother Felts that "We rush through important business with an assurance that is more apparent than real. We have a whole year to wonder why we did some things and to resolve not to do so any more." "It is impossible to get a clear idea of a voluminous report read under the stress of an 'appointment hour.'" "Every item the Conference considers should be weil considered. (Black letters his.) Let us take more time, brethren. We wiil then do more satisfactory work, more abiding work."

Again, Brother Feits is quite happy and direct in his way of putting things; and to much that he says we respond with a hearty Amen. Certainly we ought not to act without full conviction, or reasonable assurance, that tbe proposed action is in wisdom and for the general good. But, frankly, if Brother Felts is proposing (as plainly he does) that every man shouid consider every detail of every report of every Board and Committee that is offered to the Conference, and should vote on nothing favorably till every detail is explained or argued to his entire satisfaction, I must confess that my mind is not capable of considering in detail all the work of the Sunday School Board, the Board of Missions, the Church Extension Board, etc., etc. To my shame it may be, I must confess that the work of the Board of Education, to which I beiong, so demands my time and attention, that I am forced, not unwillingly, to trust largely to the Sunday School Board, the Board of Missions, and all the others the equally important matters entrusted to them. In fact, if I were distrustful of my judgment, or suspicious that with malevolent intent tbey were going to do something wrong, I fear that I couldn't attend to my own business through anxiety lest they should not properly attend to theirs.

In fact, I am under the impression that what Boards and Committees are for is to deliberately consider for the Conference the subjects committed to tbem in every detaii and from every angle, —a thing which the Conference as a whole could not do without endless confusion and weeks of deliberation.

Brother Felts makes the startling admission, "We consider long and well the appointments, long and well the standing Boards (the P. E.'s even had a meeting prior to the session of our last Conference to make the nomination (of the standing boards), which was weil." According to his own admission, then, the Conference is very careful that men known to he informed on the special subjects which will come before them, and men of sound judgment who bave at heart the interests of the Church, are in so far as they can be found, placed on these several boards, after heing considered "long and well." But, in spite of this unqualified admission, Brother Felts demands that the Conference should in effect do over again the whole work of every Board, and that no man should vote until the debates in the Board meetings, settled by majority there, should he reproduced on the Conference floor; for plainly men within the Conference will see the same objections to measures that men on the Boards saw at first; and if they must take nothing in trust, all this must be done.

Brother Felts may not have intended it, but the whole tendency of his discussion is to sow seeds of distrust in the minds of the brethren—distrust of the men of their own Conference to whom special causes have been committed because, as he admits, the Conference beiieves them to be worthy in knowledge and judgment of such confidence. Sowing the seeds of distrust is very popular, I know, now-a-days, as also is the preaching of an individuaiism which takes notbing for granted, or on faith; and which holds up every man's snap judgment as worth more than the joint deliberations of many; but certainly no sucn spirit should enter the Churcb, or be propagated among Christian brethren.

I affirm that the attitude of the Conference towards its boards should be that of confidence and esteem; that the attitude of the Conference towards the reports of its boards should be that of prepossession in favor of the report, as made by men who have considered all sides weil: and that opposition should arise only when some other member of the hody is fully convinced that, not through local bias or on inmature consideration, some proposed policy or action is wrong. Then the attitude should not be that of distrustful antagonism, but brotherly difference of opinion to be settled by the judgment of the Conference after fair debate. The place of such debate I, of course, recognize in all deliberative and legislative bodies; but the large place of confidence and trusting in general to others the matters committed to them, whiie doing well the matters committed to you, I also recognize and would emphasize.

To be sure, the work of all the Boards is criticised—the work of the presiding eiders and bishops also. The critic is aiways abroad in the land. His joh is easy. Douhtless, too, mistakes are sometimes made by all the Boards—I have not heard of any inside or outside the Boards who make no mistakes; but I am convinced that fewer mistakes are made by proceeding as we do, than would be made if wc tore to pieces tbe work of the Boards under the ieadership of men who would thereby become cyciopedic censors of aii boards. It would take a big man for that job, surely!

I am going to niake another confession, without repentance, either. I have voted many a time in Conference for the adoption of reports, tbe wisdom of the provisions of which I was not sure of. But happiiy for me and for the Conference, I was not sure of my own wisdom in the matter either; and as the other brethren had considered it fully and I had not, I voted in their favor; quite sensibly, I think, and did not without good cause hinder the proceedings of the Conference. Wc should need special eariy morning prayer-meetings for patience, if every man adopted the policy suggested by brother Felts. So we are inclined to think that there is more heat than iight in Brother Feit's suggestions as to radical changes in our Conference policy in tbis rcspect.

But weighed in the baiance of fairness as weli as wisdom, why should the Board of Education he singled out as the only deliherative board whosc report shall be demanded by Saturday morning, and required to lay on the tabie for a full day? Has the Board of Education more important matters to consider than the other Boards—the Sunday School Board, or the Board of Missions? Or must it be "watched?" Is it iess worthy of confidcnce? There may have heen special reasons in Texas why such a reguiation should have heen enacted; hut when suggested for consideration by another Conference tbe reason in the new Conference should be given, or else a very unjust aspersion is cast upon the board, thus specified. No self-respecting hoard would continue to serve an instant if a reguiation wero passed concerning it, demanding early reports, with only the silent reason implied, "because we do not think we can trust either your judgment or your character." Such a regulation applying to all the Boards would in effect be saying to all, "We are not sure we can afford to trust you. Hurry up, and tell us what you think; and then we will tell you what WE think, and want time to do it in."

But such a regulation would defeat its own ends, as stated by Brother Feits. He pleads for greater deliberation by the Conference, and then would not give the boards time to deliberate. If it wants half-baked stuff presented, needing indeed further consideration, let the Conference hurry the boards in the consideration of the matters before them. Every man on a board knows, and the secretaries and those writing the reports know especially, that reports cannot be prepared until the deliberations of the board are concluded. It is then no little task to get it in proper shape, being sometimes "voluminous,"—voluminous reports cannot be prepared to order, by men who desire judiciously to consider matters and properly to present them.

We are not convinced, however, that the Conference is so dissatisfied with the reports it adopts as Brother Felts suggests. Certainly the reports of the Board of Education for several years past have been presented in good time, each time as early as possible—with an intermission and a session following for further consideration if desired.

Of the report to our last Conference, certainly it was apparent that it met with the hearty endorsement of the Conference; for it was ordered published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It was, furthermore, I may venture to say, as I had but a small part in its construction, harmoniously consistent throughout—in principles enunciated and in practical application. That it was recognized as expressing the judgment of the Conference (not every member of course, but an unquestioned majority) was shown by the fact that no attempt at reconsideration was made.

Does Brother Feits think that some features of this report were not duly considered? If so, he should state what they are, that the Conference may see wherein it blundered in its adoption and may begin to plan to remedy the mistakes that it made.

I feel sure that the Conference can afford to continue to trust all its Boards to do their best with the problems submitted to them, as before God, for the general good. All the Boards, too, will doubtless welcome brotherly suggestions and advice; and as in the past so in the future, freely submit their conclusions for the further consideration of the Conference.

We do not believe, however, as we pointed out in our first article, that private correspondence schools should be established, in view of the organized provision of the Church; or new restrictions placed upon the Boards, suggestive of distrust and provocative of discord.

Weighed, therefore, in such scales of wisdom and fairness as we can command, we vote nonconcurrence in these suggestions. We believe, however, that we may all profit thereby.

"Let us help the young men;
Let us all pull together."

This is the message from Brother Feits to which we may all offer a fervent Amen. As to the "how" of it we may differ; uniting however in upholding the institutions of the Church, and the expressed will of the majority.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will convene at Corinth, Miss., on March 25-29. Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will preach for us and administer the sacrament on the opening night. Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Educational Secretary of the General Board of Missions, will deliver the annual sermon on Sunday. An efficient Council woman will be with us throughout the entire session, and will conduct the noontide devotions, and deliver an address on Saturday evening in the young peopies' service, and also one on Sunday evening. The delegates will have the opportunity of visiting our Co-operative Home, which has been established by our Conference Deaconess, Miss Mary Daniel. The prayers of the Church at large are requested for a gracious outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon this occasion.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE.

At its late session the Pacific Conference of the M. E. Church, South, inaugurated a movement to maintain a Southern Methodist Headquarters in San Francisco during the Panama-Pacific Exposition. To this end, a commodious suite of rooms has been secured in the Pacific Building, at the corner of Fourth and Market Streets. This location is in the center of the hotel and shopping districts and is convenient to all car lines. Bishop R. G. Waterhouse is the Chairman of the Executive Committee which has this work in charge, and Chaplain J. A. Randolph, of the U. S. Army, is the vice chairman. Brother Randolph is a member of the North Mississippi Conference, but his regiment is located at the California metropolis.

"PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF REDEMPTION."

The Louisiana Conference has in its membership a number of men whose scholarship is of a very high order, but they have not hitherto produced much literature in book form, however capable they may be of doing so.

This recent publication by MacMillan from the pen of Dr. H. B. Carre, is a very notable accomplishment by one of our Louisiana men. The author, who has occupied the chair of Biblical Theology in Vanderbilt University for a number of years, presents his readers, as the result of his inductive study of Paul's Epistles, with an attractive volume, entitled "Paul's Doctrine of Redemption."

Dr. Carre sets forth what seems to him to be Paul's consistent theological view of the great objective work which was accomplished in the death and resurrection of Jesus. He does not attempt a logical analysis of the method, but rather the essential character of the results achieved.

The view is rooted in what the author regards as Paul's practical world philosophy, namely a universe both physical and moral that is dominated by personal forces of evil, the central point of emphasis in redemption being a great cosmical overthrow of these organized powers. Man's redemption from Sin and Death is a part of the redemption of all creation. This great salvation is progressively realized as a dynamic in the hearts of men, and looks forward to a great consummation in the future state.

Thoughtful teachers and preachers, though possibly disagreeing with the author in some points, will be greatly interested and profited by reading this reverent and painstaking discussion which is in excellent literary form, and will find the volume a valuable addition to the library.

THE HOLMES STORE

OF NEW ORLEANS

is one of America's truly great department stores.

It has perfected a buying organization that reaches into every producing market of the world, maintaining offices in Berlin, London, Paris and Florence, as well as New York.

It never presents any merchandise that is not of good quality and equitably priced.

Its very efficient service to patrons in the city is supplemented by the largest and best-equipped mail order department of any store in the South. Ninety-eight per cent of all orders received are filled on date of receipt..

The aim of the store is to merit fully the confidence that has been manifested by the public during its seventy-two years of merchandising history.

NEW ORLEANS' DEBT TO CENTENARY.

It has been said that the location of Centenary College in Shreveport has placed it so far from New Orleans that the Crescent City does not derive any great benefit from it. We have not the figures at hand concerning the laymen in New Orleans, leaders in the various churches, who have been students of Centenary, hut it is amazing to know the size of the debt that Methodism in New Orleans owes to this grand old institution.

Take a single church as an example. A few years ago Parker Chapel was a struggling little organization on Laurel Street. I do not know the order of their coming, hut just look at the array: H. H. Ahrens, a Centenary boy, was sent to the struggling little church and built for it the parsonage that it now has. Dr. F. N. Parker, a Centenary product, wrought with great success in that field. Dr. R. H. Wynn, the President of Centenary and a child of the institution, was one of the most faithful pastors of what is now Parker Memorial Church. H. T. Carley, a professor in Centenary at this time, although not a former student of it, but of Millsaps, a Church college, was another pastor; K. W. Dodson, son of a Methodist preacher and product of a church college in another State, served there; C. D. Atkinson, the man who pulled together both the enthusiasm and the action that caused to be huilt the great stone structure that now constitutes the church building is a Centenary product; H. R. Singleton, who accomplished large results as a pastor, sat in the halls of Centenary, and R. H. Harper, the present pastor, who is leading with a masterful hand, is a child of this loved college. Thus it may he seen that this church is scarcely less than the work of the boys produced by Centenary College.

We might look at the whole list of New Orleans preachers that are now serving charges in the most distant city from Centenary in the State. One man, Dr. F. R. Hill, and that one alone, received his education out of a church college. But Dr. Hill has given of his very life blood to Centenary College as one of its most successful presidents. He loves it and has loved and served it as he has served no other college in Methodism Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., is a product of two schools, Hiwassee and Vanderhilt; Dr. S. H. Werlein is an Emory and Henry product, one of our schools; W. E. Thomas is a Vanderbilt man; Presiding Elder Holmes is a Millsaps and Vanderbilt product; R. M. Brown came from Millsaps College; Rev T. V. Peters took the A. B. degree at Wright College of the Northern Methodist Church; A. J. Gearheard studied in Marionville College and Baker University of the Northern branch of Methodism, and W. W. Drake, W. L. Doss, J. L. Sutton, R. H. Harper, and H. W. Jamieson all came from Centenary College. Certainly the Church is th mother of the New Orleans preachers.

While this is true in New Orleans; it does not come far from heing true throughout the whole State, and it all argues for the existence of a college owned and supported by the Church in Louisiana. But a few years ago fourteen young men were in Centenary at one time preparing themselves for the itinerant ranks. Think of it! The men who will preach to the children of the present Methodists of New Orleans and the whole State are to he trained mostly in Centenary College, and it is important that it shall be so cared for and equipped that it will give them training that is the very best.

On the twenty-eighth of this month, in every Methodist church of New Orleans, a collection will be taken for Centenary College. Our people should let this great work find lodgment on their hearts. Great would it be, indeed, if there should be many checks for $100 or more handed in on that day. Such beneficence would relieve Centenary now and pave the way for larger results in the future.

THE NEW ORLEANS WAY.

At one of its recent sessions, the New Orleans Methodist Preachers' Association considered the question of raising the assessment for Centenary College. The New Orleans preachers are fortunate in that they have with them to lead, Rev. W. W. Drake, the Conference Educational Secretary. He suggested that a concerted move be made here in the city, and that as near all the assessment be provided for on one day as possible. In accordance with this suggestion, Rev. W. L. Doss moved that February 28 be set apart as Centenary Day and that it at all practicable all the preachers take the offering on that date. The motion prevailed. It was made clear, however, that if rain prevented that day from being a profitable one, March 14 should be set apart for the same purpose. The New Orleans District is the farthest from the seat of Centenary College, yet there is here a deep interest in the College and if there is any way to do it, Brother Drake will report the New Orleans District in full.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS RECEIVED SINCE CONFERENCE.

"I feel encouraged over the outcome of the Centenary question at our Conference. I believe we have things in better shape than ever before. I trust you will have health and strength to push the plans to completion."—Henry Beach Carre.

"I shall never forget the debt I owe Centenary College, and as long as I live, I expect to do what I can for it. May God bless and direct you continually in your worthy, yet very arduous task."—Henry T. Young.

"I will do everything I can for Centenary. We have set February 28, as Centenary College Day in New Orleans."—W. W. Holmes.

"I am thinking of you and counting on you for a great year, and somehow I think this is going to be a big year with you."—J. M. Henry.

"I notice from the Advocate that you are receiving contributions for Centenary. As I was not present at the Centenary Rally, I did not promise anything, but make you a donation of $5 on it. My wife goes without a new hat to do this, but we do it for His glory and in His Name."—A Pastor.

IS IT HONEST?

What is truth? Where, outside of the Bible can it be found? The old philosopher said, "In the bottom of a well;" but there are surely other places where we might seek it. We might think, for instance, that in the Minutes of the Annual Conference it surely could be found. but alas! "Figures do not lie," they tell us, alas again!

The statistical tables of the Minutes look very honest, and we feel sure that the Secretary and the printers were perfectly honest in compiling and printing them. It seems a pity to throw a doubt upon their honesty, but in the interest of truth and a correct report, I dare to do so. It is of that part of the report concerning the salaries of pastors and presiding elders that I make my complaint.

To make myself understood, let us take a supposed case. It is just before Conference. The pastor has been bending every energy to bring up his collections. The needs of Missions and the Conference Claimants weigh heavily on his heart. He preaches and prays, visits and pleads with his people; and, just in the last few days, with the help of the good women of his Church, the victory is won. During this time, the stewards are busily bestirring themselves to bring up the salaries. They had taken it rather easily during the year—the preacher was not allowed to suffer; there would be time enough; now, however, times are hard, and the stewards are having a hard time. The last day has come; the preacher is about to take the train; the stewards, or their spokesman, approach him: "See here Brother ———, we have promises for all the balances. They are all good. Just report the salaries paid in full, yours and the presiding elders, and we'll hand you the balance after Conference."

Now, what is that pastor to do? He has taken such pride in his work. He wants to report it "paid up in full." More than he wants the balance due him, he wants a good report. He has full confidence in his brother, the steward; it will be all right. So, at Conference he reports the salaries, his and the presiding elder's portion, paid.

After Conference something happens. They wanted that preacher back and he was moved, or they wanted him moved and he was sent back—it matters little which—and the stewards and people, or some of them, are "mad," so they refuse to pay what they promised. Or, things went to suit them, hut times are hard, and they have next year to plan for, anyway. Yet they, and the preacher have reported it paid.

There you have the whole situation. A false entry is made in the Conference Minutes. They stand in the Minutes from year to year, and go uncorrected.

Who is responsible? The preacher who made the report? Yes. Would a banker report money in his safe because he expected to collect it? Has a preacher a right to do in God's work what would be tolerated in no business deal?

What of the stewards who made the promise? Are they responsible? Yes. Just as responsible as if no one else was considered. A promise is binding in the sight of God. And what shall we say of those who promised the stewards? Perhaps it would be best not to speak of them at all.

Do you think these cases are rare? I have known of preachers sending the presiding elder sums they felt they owed him because they had reported it paid, one, two, three and four years afterwards. Did they save it up from salaries paid them at other places? But I have rarely heard of stewards sending a preacher the balance of his salary, even though they had given their word, and reported it paid.

Thus, dawdling about the collections in January, February, March and April, results in downright dishonesty in December.

But whatever may be the cause of failure, let us be honest, and have true reports.

BE CAREFUL OF YOUR COMPANY.

By Florence Jones Hadley.

A little song rings in my ear
And haunts me all day long,
And this is, however it runs,
The keynote of my song:
"Be careful of your company,"
The little song runs ever—
"The down once brushed from off the peach
Returns again, ah, never."

All boys have wondrous golden dreams,
The future's filled with bliss.
Dreams may come true, but don't forget
It all depends on this:
"Be careful of your company,
'Tis youthful days that mold you,
The chains you play with when a boy
In manhood will enfold you."

So, when you dream, as youth will dream,
And form some wondrous plan,
Remember this, dear, that the boy
Is father to the man.
Be careful of your company,
Sin's chains are hard to sever;
The down once brushed from off the peach
Returns again, ah, never!

KATHERINE'S DIARY.

Katherine looked lovingly at the new diary, with its rich leather binding, and silver-tipped pencil fastened between the edges of the cover, a present from Aunt Katherine.

"I dread the first page," she said; "getting started is the very hardest part; that is, if you start right. And, of course, Aunt Katherine wants me to do that. I'm going to put my New Year resolutions on the first page."

Mamma smiled at this, thinking how many times little girls had commenced with a list like that. "You'd better write them out first on waste paper," she said, "and then copy them into the book after you have carefully thought over just what you want."

Katherine was pleased with the idea, for even in the few minutes that she had been thinking so many rules came into her mind that she did not know which to write first.

"It must be written very neatly," she said to herself; "to please auntie; and with the biggest things first." Then she thought some more, and the harder she thought the more she was not sure about this "Parson Plummer always leaves the biggest thing until the last, and then he pounds on the top of the pulpit when he says it. That's so we'll remember it better, I suppose. But then I ought to remember all of my resolutions; and so, after all, I don't believe it makes much difference which comes first.

"I'll just write them down as I think of them, and then maybe I'll think of some rule for arranging them:

"I will not put off when mamma calls me to tend baby, for I heard her tell grandma the other day that this was one of my worst faults.

"I will not tease the cat, though it is such fun to see it spit and snarl.

"I will not make fun of Sissy Carter, even if she does look funny with that outgrown dress and her Aunt Mary's cut-down coat."

But all at once Katherine stopped short, for there were so many things that she could think of which she ought to stop doing. It would take altogether too much space in her diary to write them down. And yet there was not one which she felt might be omitted.

Just then she saw Uncle James coming up the walk, and she asked him what to do.

He read her list over carefully, and listened to some of the things which she thought ought to go down. "I think one 'will' is worth several 'will nots,'" he said. And then Katherine noticed that her resolutions were every one of them not to do something.

"Now," continued Uncle James, "I'm going to tell you of the one resolution made many years ago by a very little girl when she found out that if she lived longer than her uncle, who was then King of England, she would be the next queen. It was only these four little words, 'I WILL BE GOOD.' And so well did she keep this resolution that when she died, after reigning for more than sixty years, people all over the world declared that there had never before been such a good queen as Victoria."

Katherine looked her list over thoughtfully, and then exclaimed, after copying the four words neatly at the top of the first page in her diary, "Why, these take in all the rest!"—Bessie L. Putnam, in The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

STRAIGHTENING OUT THE FURROWS.

"Boys," he said, "I've been trying every day of my life for the last two years to straighten out furrows—and I can't do it!"

One boy turned his head in surprise toward the captain's neatly-kept place.

"Oh, I don't mean that kind, lad, I don't mean land furrows," continued the Captain, so soberly that the boys became breathless as he went on:

"When I was a lad about the age of you boys, I was what they called a 'hard case,' not exactly bad or vicious, but wayward and wild. Well, my dear old mother used to coax, pray and punish—my father was dead, making it all the harder for her—but she never got impatient. How in the world she bore with all my stubborn, vexing ways so patiently will always be to me one of the mysteries of life. I knew it was troubling her, knew it was changing her pretty face, making it look anxious and old. After a while, tiring of all restraint, I ran away, went off to sea—and a rough time I had of it at first. Still, I liked the water, and I liked journeying around from place to place. Then I settled down to business in a foreign land, and soon became prosperous, and now began sending her something besides those empty letters. And such beautiful letters as she always wrote me during those years of absence. At length I noticed how longing they grew—longing for the presspresence of the son who used to try her so, and it woke a corresponding longing in my own heart to go back to the dear waiting soul.

"So when I could stand it no longer, I came back, and such a welcome, and such a surprise! My mother is not a very old lady, boys, but the first thing I noticed was the whiteness of her hair and the deep furrows on her brow, and I knew I had helped to blanch that hair to its snowy whiteness and had drawn those lines in that smooth forehead. And those are the furrows I have been trying to straighten out.

"But last night, when mother was sleeping in her chair, I sat thinking it all over, and looked to see what progress I had made.

Her face was very peaceful and the expression as contented as possible, but the furrows were still there! I hadn't succeeded in straightening them out—and—I—never—shall—never!

"When they lay my mother—my fair old sweetheart—in her casket, there will be furrows in her brow; and I think it a wholesome lesson to teach you, that the neglect you offer your parents' counsel now, the trouble you cause them, will abide, my laddies."—Presbyterian Standard.

MAKING GOD HEAR.

A very little girl said one day to her father: "Papa, I have something I want to tell God. I want you to say it to him for me."

"Why can't you tell him yourself, little one?" said the father.

"Because I have such a little voice that I don't think I can make him hear away up in heaven; but you have such a big loud voice that he will be sure to hear you."

Then the father said: "God will hear a little child's prayer if it has a little, weak voice, if it whispers or if it only thinks the wish and does not say it in any words. If all the angels in heaven are singing, and God listens to that music, he will hear at the same time the prayer that the little child speaks in a low voice, or whispers, or even thinks."

No matter how weak your little voice is, God will hear your prayers up in heaven.—The Picture World.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: I take this method of calling your attention to "Veterans' Day" in our Conference, which is Sunday, March 7, you remember it was adopted unanimously by the Conference. The claimants are wholly dependent on us for the funds needed and the Joint Board can only use such as you place at its disposal during the year. Let me urge you to observe this day. Collect all the assessments if possible, but please do not rest satisfied with less than half of it in cash. Brethren, there is just one way for us to settle this matter: If we were worn out and dependent, what would we want the Church to do for us? Ask yourselves that question and act accordingly. Listen to this statement from one letter: "Unless the Board sends the money early I shall be in actual want." What will we do? Send your remittances to Mr. S. A. Tomlinson, Gulfport, Miss.

Editorial

TO OUR PASTORS.

"Do you want to help the revival for which you are praying and planning?

"Do you want to increase the contributions of your church to the various benevolences?

"Do you want to have a congregation really interested in the best sermons you can prepare?

"Do you want a people loyal to every interest of the denomination, and ready to join you in every forward movement of the local church?

"Do you want to increase the respect and affection of the congregation for yourself so that your ministry will be more fruitful?

"Then see to it that every family in your church takes a church paper. The one you now hold in your hand will serve your purpose admirably."

A SUGGESTIVE VOLUME.

As was stated in the Advocate some two weeks ago, the MacMillan Company has recently brought out a volume from the pen of Dr. H. B. Carre, of Vanderbilt University, entitled "Paul's Doctrine of Redemption." This discussion was submitted by Dr. Carre as a thesis to the Faculty of the Graduate Divinity School of the University of Chicago in connection with his course leading to a Ph. D. degree in that institution. It contains 175 pages, and is beautifully printed on choice paper and substantially and attractively bound. The price is $1.25.

We are publishing this week a brief notice of this publication by Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College, and will print in our next issue a more extended review of it by Dr. S. H. Werlein, which, much to our regret, we are unable to give a place in this number of the Advocate. In the statements of these two brethren our readers will learn something of the scope of this work and of the purposes and contentions of the author, and for this reason we shall refrain from giving an outline of his dissertation. We feel moved, however, to make two or three general observations concerning this suggestive treatise, which is strikingly well written and which we have read with considerable interest.

1. We desire to say that, however interesting it may be to isolate and study separately the different sacred authors, we do not think that this is the wisest and best way to arrive at a correct and comprehensive understanding of any of the great doctrines of the Divine Revelation. The Bible needs to be studied as a whole in order to do this, since the written Word of God is a gradual unfolding of the fundamental and necessary truths that the Heavenly Father designed to convey to humanity, and, as a result, the various books of the Sacred Canon strengthen and shed light upon one another. The proof of this is seen in the manner in which the inspired writers, and even our Lord himself, quoted from different parts of the Scriptures. There is no reason to think that Paul meant to set forth fully his views concerning all the doctrines of Christianity in his few brief epistles to the Churches. It should be remembered that the great Apostle also ministered to these Churches in person and that these letters were probably supplemental to that ministry and the ministry of his fellow-laborers. Evidently Paul as a Jew and a former Pharisee held firmly to the unrevoked teachings of the Old Testament, though, like others, prior to his conversion, he largely misconceived the true meaning of some of them. And even if it he assumed, as may have been the case, that the writing of his Epistles antedated that of the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, there was previous to this a spoken Gospel concerning Christ with which he must have been familiar, as were also doubtless the Churches of that period. After he was stricken with conviction on the road to Damascus and Ananias had taught him concerning Jesus, he went to Jerusalem and was for a time with the twelve who for three years had kept company with our Lord, and what he learned from them we can well imagine.

This difficulty of undertaking to learn the whole of a great doctrine from one inspired writer alone Dr. Carre himself bumps squarely up against when (see pages 153 and 155) in discussing Paul's teaching concerning the resurrection he admits the uncertainty as to whether he held that the wicked are annihilated or will be raised from the grave and continue to live, and when in speaking of the Apostle's views as to Gehenna, or a lake of fire, he declares that, though he may have believed in the existence of such a place, his silence on the subject prevents us from affirming with certainty that he did. And if we may not accept Paul as a full and complete authority on these tremendous questions, why must we accept him as such (apart from the other inspired writers) concerning the nature and significance of the atonement?

2. The principal part of Dr. Carre's argument is directed to show that Paul did not believe in a sacrificial atonement—that he held it to be in a sense vicarious, but not sacrificial. His reasoning on this point is scholarly and ingenious, but to us not convincing. Some of the very expressions of the Apostle that he labors to explain away appear to us to be well-nigh overwhelmingly against him, and to say nothing of the other New Testament writers, back in the distance, yet ever in view to the reasoning mind, are the teachings of the Old Testament on this subject, particularly that of the symbolical and prophetic sacrifices kept up for long centuries among the Jews.

3. The extent to which Dr. Carre's interpretation of St. Paul's teachings as to the atonement makes them clash with the accepted standards of Methodism cannot, in view of the fragmentary character of his discussion, be stated with definiteness. Certainly, if they were adopted, portions of our ritual would need to be largely rewritten, and some of our Articles of Faith would also need revision. And what he makes the Apostle teach seems to us to leave the doctrine of the sinfulness and guilt of the human race, as it is commonly understood by the Christian Churches, considerably upset and weakened. Little weight appears to be attached to the turpitude of the offense of breaking the moral law of God.

We are disposed to agree with the view that God did not himself need to be placated by the atonement. The fact that he was willing to give his only begotten son to die on the Cross for man's redemption seems to us to prove conclusively that this was not true. As we see it, the necessity for a substitutive sacrifice lay in the fact that the universe was under moral law and that God was its administrator. It had been infracted and he could not be weak and uncertain in the enforcement of the prescribed penalty. A perfect law enacted by a perfect being needed to be perfectly upheld—apparently the welfare of all the moral beings of the universe demanded this. The effect of the atonement was to enable God to meet this requirement of justice and yet spare the sinner. But we do not concede that the death of Christ, if sacrificial, could not have been dynamic or cosmic. On the contrary, as Bishop Marvin shows in his admirable little book, "The Work of Christ," it was probably all three of these. We heartily concur in the suggestion that more needs to be made of the dynamics of Christianity, but we believe that the sacrificial death of our Lord on Calvary opened the only possible way for bringing into exercise its mighty life-giving and transforming powers.

The lack of space forbids us to pursue this subject further. In conclusion, we will say that Dr. Carre's volume needs to be read thoughtfully and weighed with the utmost care. We think it would be a good idea for persons perusing it to read at the same time the small volume by Bishop Marvin mentioned above. If we mistake not, it can be had of our Publishing House for less than fifty cents, and it is worth its weight in gold.

It is perhaps due Dr. Carre to state that we do not know to what extent his interpretations of Paul's teachings concerning the work of redemption are representative of his own views. We do not desire to have what we have said in the course of this discussion to be construed as being applicable to his personal convictions. We hope that our readers will carefully note this point, since we do not wish to do Dr. Carre the slightest injustice.

DR. G. C. RANKIN DEAD.

How fast they are going! A few months ago Dr. W. B. Palmore, the dean of Southern Methodist editors, laid down his pen and passed into the sphere invisible; a few days since Dr. H. M. Hamill, the foremost of our Sunday school leaders, went from us; and now comes the news that Dr. George C. Rankin, the rugged and picturesque editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, is with us no longer. How brief and uncertain is human life, and how remorseless is the Reaper Death in gathering in his ceaseless harvest! The good and useful fall before his ever-descending blade, as well as those whose characters are evil and whose lives are worth little or nothing to the world. All are steadily marching to the tomb, and we know not what a day may bring forth.

Dr. Rankin died suddenly at his home in Dallas, Texas, about noon on Tuesday, February 2, 1915. He had for a couple of weeks been somewhat indisposed with what had been pronounced indigestion, but his condition was not thought to be dangerous and his improvement had been such that he was adjudged to be practically well. He had been cheerful all the morning and had made no complaint as to his physical condition until a short time before the unexpected end came, when he noted and commented upon the weakness of his pulse. He died almost instantaneously a few minutes later as a result of heart failure.

Dr. Rankin had for many years been a prominent figure in Southern Methodism. He was born in Dandridge, Tenn., November 19, 1849. His father died when he was eleven years of age, and as he was the eldest of several children he had to shoulder the heavy responsibility of helping his widowed mother to earn a livelihood. This he did by arduous manual labor on a farm. His educational advantages were meager: when eighteen years of age he attended for a time an academy in Bradley County, Tennessee, taught by Prof. Burkett, a somewhat noted teacher of that day; he also attended a high school at Resaca, Ga., and later studied at Hiwassee College. He was converted at Center Valley, Ga., in 1857 and immediately joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was licensed to preach in 1870, and in the fall of that year joined the North Georgia Conference. He soon, however, became a member of the Holston Conference and filled a number of its leading appointments. After this, he was pastor for a couple of years of Central Church in Kansas City, Mo.; he was then transferred to Texas (in 1892) and made pastor of the Shearn Memorial Church of Houston, which he served for a quadrennium; thence he was sent to First Church, Dallas, where he was serving in 1898 when he was elected editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, which position he had since continuously held. He was a member of several General Conferences.

Dr. Rankin was a man of unusual force. This was clearly shown by the manner in which he rose above the obstacles confronting him in his early life and attained to distinction in the Church. He was not a finished scholar and the reach of his information was not as wide as that of some of our leaders, but he had a large amount of common sense, an intellect that was naturally vigorous, and an energy that was remarkable. He was alert, courageous, and aggressive. His temperament was more that of the crusader and reformer than that of the thinker and philosopher. He had a wonderful hold upon the people of Texas and his influence was largely felt for good in that commonwealth. He was a tower of strength to the prohibition cause and did much to promote it. In theology he was a conservative and stood resolutely for the maintenance of the doctrinal integrity of Methodism. He will be greatly missed, and it will not be easy to find one who can take up and carry on his work. We sincerely regret his comparatively early death, and we pray God's richest blessings upon the sorrowing members of his family.

"WILLIAM McKENDREE: A BIOGRAPHICAL STUDY."

This is the title of a book from the pen of Bishop E. E. Hoss, which is just from the press. The Introduction is by Dr. H. M. DuBose, of Atlanta, Ga. One of the noblest figures in the history of American Methodism is Bishop McKendree, and we scarcely need to say that the story of his remarkable life as told by Bishop Hoss makes a most fascinating and instructive volume. To read it intelligently is to study the Methodist movement in the United States in its formative stage and to see how it gradually tended to crystallize into an efficient and durable organization. There is also in its pages much to stir the heart and incite to high endeavor. Bishop Hoss has rendered the Church an important service in the writing of this biography, and we hope that it will be widely circulated and read. Smith & Lamar are the publishers, and the price is $1, net.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mr. W. A. Odom, who graduated at Centenary College in June, 1914, is teaching Latin and Mathematics in the High School at Tallulah, La.

Among those who gave us appreciated clubs of subscribers last week, was Rev. O. W. Bradley, our gifted young pastor at Winona, Miss. Brother Bradley states that the work of his charge is moving on encouragingly.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Okolona, Miss., continues to favor us by sending in subscriptions to the Advocate. He is making fine progress in his inviting new field. There are larger things ahead for both Brother Brown and our Church in Okoiona.

The installation service prepared and recently used by Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Rayville, La., was printed in full in the Nashville Christian Advocate last week. This indicates that Brother Townsley is good at making a ritual, as he also is at many other things.

Mr. W. P. Krestchmar, the capable young president of the Commercial Savings Bank of Greenville, Miss., has lately been spending a few days at Gulfport resting and recuperating. Mr. Kretschmar is an official member of our church in the Queen City of the Delta.

We regret to state that Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, our pastor at Greenville, Miss., has recently been ill with la grippe and that he was unable to fill his pulpit last Sunday; but we are pleased to know that he is now up and we trust that he will soon be quite himself again.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Eupora, Miss., for a recent club of 5 subscriptions to the Advocate. Brother McCafferty is a wide-awake pastor who serves a worthy flock. His Sunday school at Eupora is one of the best in the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. R. T. Ware was released from the Pearl Circuit by Rev. C. F. Emery, the presiding elder of the Newton District, and is attending school at Puckett, Miss., which is his present address. He requests us to state that he would be pleased to make some engagements for revival work this summer.

The address of Rev. C. P. Moss, who formerly was a member of the North Mississippi Conference but who has been transferred to Florida, is 833 West Monroe Street, Jacksonville, Fla. Referring to his charge, Brother Moss says: "I am happy in my appointment and feel that I have a new lease on life."

After taking a course at Trinity College, at Durham, N. C., Rev. M. F. Adams has again taken his place in the itinerant ranks of the Mississippi Conference. He is stationed at Fayette, where he is giving a good account of himself. Equipment, as well as consecration, counts in the Master's service.

Mr. H. H. Ahrens, of New Orleans, has been made Religious Editor of the Times-Picayune of this city. A better selection for that position was scarcely possible. That great journal seems to take pleasure in giving the public the news of the Churches. It is one of the cleanest of our Southern dailies.

Rev. G. W. McLain, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., reports that he is well pleased with his work and that he is praying and planning for a revival at all his churches. He is aiming at the right thing. A church that is spiritually alive can usually be depended upon to give a good account of itself in meeting all its responsibilities.

Rev. J. A. Wells, pastor of the Topisaw Circuit, has lately been pressing the claims of the Conference organ among his people with gratifying success. We scarcely need to say that we are grateful for this good service. Brother Wells is an enthusiastic worker and does not believe in neglecting any of the interests of the Church.

Rev. W. M. Langley, of Vaiden, Miss., remembered us with 6 renewal subscriptions from his field a few days ago. Most of the names on this list looked quite familiar to the Editor and called up many pleasant recollections of the past. Brother Langley is entering upon his third year in his present pastorate, and success continues to attend his labors.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney says: "I have heard of a few people reading the Sunday school items that I have been sending you." We dare say that they have been read by a great many. Brother Gladney's notes have been of a superior quality, and, to our delight, they have reached the office in printable form, which is not often the case with the copy that is sent us.

Rev. A. H. Steele, our pastor on the Leake (Miss.) charge, has a new parsonage enterprise under way. He states that, though his people are generous, it will be difficult to raise enough funds to carry forward this undertaking and that he will appreciate any assistance that may be given him. Brother Steele's address is not Leake, but Dossville, Miss.

A card from Rev. T. H. Lipscomb states that another young Methodist—a son—arrived at his home at Starkville last Sunday, Feb. 7, about noon. The ladies of the church had given the little stranger a linen shower prior to his coming. Both the mother and babe, we are glad to state, are doing well. We extend hearty congratulations to Brother and Sister Lipscomb.

Writing from Tunica, Miss., on February 8, Rev. A. C. McCorkle, our pastor at that place, says: "Things are moving along very well in this charge. The assessment for the preacher has been fixed at a thousand dollars, an increase of $114 over that of last year." We have learned from several sources that Brother McCorkle has made a fine impression in his new field.

Rev. G. G. Yeager, of Hermanville, Miss., has our thanks for a club of 5 subscriptions, sent in a few days since. Brother Yeager says: "I am going to try to make the work hum along lines this year, and I will not forget the Advocate. The Old War Horse was with us yesterday, Feb. 5, whooping up things." That is what Brother Adams generally does. He knows how to give the cause a forward impetus.

Rev. J. Y. Bowman, our pastor at Collins, Miss., under date of February 6, writes as follows: "For several days Rev. J. H. Evans has been quite unwell. He was stricken with an attack of la grippe, from which he has not recovered. The physical man is growing very weak, but his faith is unfailing and as bright as the noonday." We are sorry to learn of the illness of this worthy veteran. Let the brethren remember him at the throne of grace.

We desire to state again that we cannot get into the succeeding issue of the Advocate copy of much length which reaches us later than Saturday morning, and it is much better to have it in the office by Friday morning. The forms for the first side of our paper are closed on Saturday at noon and those for the second side on Tuesday at noon. A paper is not made on the day of the date it bears or during the day or two immediately preceding that date.

Mr. M. J. Farrar, of Kingston, Miss., in renewing his subscription takes time to say some kindly things concerning the Advocate. Before the Civil War it came into the home of his mother, Mrs. Eliza King Farrar, who passed to her reward in 1864, and it has since been coming to his address, which he states he desires to have it continue to do as long as he lives. Brother Farrar is 83 years of age. May the Lord continue to bless him, and may his path grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day!

Rev. Robert Randle, pastor of the Harrisonburg (La.) charge, has lately been visiting in New Orleans and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Friday, February 5, in company with his long-time friend, Dr. J. T. Sawyer. Brother Randle is one of the best known veterans of the Louisiana Conference and has had a worthy part in planting Methodism in the Pelican State. He was bright and cheerful and is keenly alive to all the interests of the Church. May his bow long abide in strength!

In a note ordering the renewal of her subscription to the Advocate, Sister J. W. Mason, of Benoit, Miss., speaks in terms of high appreciation of both Rev. E. M. Shaw, our pastor at that place, and Sister Shaw, the mistress of the parsonage. We are pleased to note in her communication the statement that Brother Mason, who is one of the landmarks of Methodism in the Mississippi Delta, is well and sends us loving greetings. We pray that both Brother and Sister Mason may yet be spared to the Church for many years.

We have on our table the Journal of the One Hundred and First Session of the Mississippi Conference, which came from the press some ten days or two weeks ago. It is up to the usual high standard of that splendid annual, and Dr. Watkins and his Associate Secretaries are to be congratulated upon having secured its issuance so promptly. We have seen many Conference Minutes, but none that we considered quite equal to those of the Mississippi Conference in arrangement, in neatness, and in the amount of information given.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Corinth (Miss.) District, informs us that Rev. W. D. McCullough, who last December was appointed to the Moorhead charge, one of the appointments in the Winona District, has been changed to Iuka Station. Brother Mitchell states that Iuka was without a pastor only one Sunday, and that the pulpit was filled that day by Rev. W. D. Bass of Corinth. Such is the efficiency with which our Methodist system works. We have not at this writing been informed who will hereafter have charge of the work at Moorhead.

Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, the mother of Rev. W. M. Young, of the North Mississippi Conference, died on Sunday morning, January 31, at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. C. W. White, in Prentiss County, Mississippi. Mrs. Robinson was twice married; of her first union were born four children, all but one of whom are living; and of her second union, five children, two of whom survive. The funeral service of the deceased was conducted by Rev. B. P. Fullilove, her pastor. We regret to be apprised of the death of this faithful servant of the Master, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

In a business note to our office, Rev. W. O. Harris, of Rome, Miss., says: "Dr. J. W. Price, our new pastor, was with us on the fourth Sunday in January and won all hearts. We are looking forward to a successful year in the Master's work." It is nothing new for Dr. Price to win his way quickly into the hearts of his people.

Rev. S. D. Howard, of Many, La., writes as follows: "My wife has been quite ill for the past two weeks, but I am glad to state that she is now improving. The good women of the church have been very kind and attentive during her attack. Her serious sickness has hindered me considerably in my work, but I hope to get things fully in hand in the near future." We regret to be informed of Sister Howard's illness, and we hope that she will have a speedy and complete recovery.

Rev. James Porter, of Oakland, Miss., writes: "Though much hindered by the weather, the work in this charge is progressing very well. We had Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, our Sunday School Field Secretary with us on Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 30 and 31. His sermon and addresses were enjoyed by all who heard him. He is a consecrated man, and his one aim seems to be to get the people to study God's Word and to be saved. He will prove a great blessing to any charge that he visits. Our Sunday school is in a very good condition, but it will improve. There are no better people anywhere than we have here."

We are pleased to learn that the proposed new church enterprise at Durant, Miss., where Rev. E. Nash Broyles is the resourceful young pastor, is fast assuming a tangible shape. The contemplated new structure will, when fully finished, cost about $12,000, but a competent builder estimates that the foundation, the walls, the roof, the sub-floor, the windows, and the doors, which will make the building ready for occupancy, can be completed for about $8000. Of this amount the ladies of the church have in hand $3400, and the pastor and building committee have about secured the remaining $4600. So this splendid enterprise now seems to be an assured success.

On Saturday, January 30, Mrs. Fannie McGinnis, the widow of the late Col. N. L. McGinnis, who was a well-known Confederate soldier and formerly mayor of Alexandria, La., died unexpectedly in the home of her sister, Mrs. W. C. Lewis, at 723 Eleonore Street, New Orleans. She was a woman of unusual culture and refinement, having been a teacher for several years before her marriage. She had been a life-long member of the Episcopal Church, but the obsequies which were held in the home of her sister in this city were conducted by Rev. R. H. Harper, a cousin of the deceased. Brother Harper also accompanied the remains to Opelousas, where they were interred.

We are glad to know that Rev. J. G. Johnson, of Black Hawk, Miss., who recently underwent a serious operation at the Baptist Hospital in Memphis, is again at home. As he states in a brief note appearing elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, he has had, as a result of his fatiguing return trip, a slight recurrence of his trouble; but we trust that it will soon pass off and that his health will be perfectly restored. Brother Johnson tantalizes the Editor with an invitation to come up and go bird hunting—a sport of which he is very fond, but the pleasure of which he has had to totally deny himself for several years because of a lack of time. We appreciate, however, his kindly invitation.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of the North Alabama Conference, was married to Mrs. Virginia E. Mann on February 4, 1915, at the residence of the bride's brother, Dr. J. W. Elliott, of Cordele, Ga. The ceremony was performed by Dr. J. W. Malone, President of Andrew College (Cuthbert, Ga.), assisted by the Rev. Walter Anthony of Cordele. Mrs. Mann was formerly from Brownsville, Tenn., and later from Tupelo, Miss. Brother Bowen was for many years one of the leading Methodist ministers in North Mississippi, but is now one of the authorized evangelists of the North Alabama Conference. Mr. and Mrs. Bowen left immediately after the wedding ceremony for Enterprise, Fla., where they will remain for a few days, after which they will make their home in Birmingham, Ala. The Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes.

FRECKLES
February and March Bring Out Unsightly Spots. How to Remove Easily.
The woman with tender skin dreads February and March because they are likely to cover her face with ugly freckles. No matter how thick her veil, the sun and winds have a strong tendency to make her freckle.
Fortunately for her peace of mind the recent discovery of a new prescription, othine—double strength, makes it possible for even those most susceptible to freckles to keep their skin clear and white. No matter how stubborn a case of freckles you have, the double strength othine should remove them.
Get an ounce from your druggist and banish the freckles. Money back if it fails.

It is with a great deal of sadness that we learn of the death of Brother B. F. McLURE, of Alberta, La. I do not know the exact date of his death, but this I do realize that a good man has gone to his eternal reward and has left a devoted family to mourn their loss. Brother McLure was a member of the M. E. Church, South and served as trustee, steward, and Sunday school superintendent at the time of his departure from this life, and he will ever be missed from the little town and the Church which he so much loved, as the work now rests on the shoulders of another. May the richest blessings of the Heavenly Father be upon the sorrowing loved ones and his many friends and may they realize that behind the darkest cloud the sun is still brightly shining. May the Good Shepherd help us to live a life as beautiful as that of our deceased brother. His former pastor,
H. W. CUDD.

CAREY CHACHER DEAN, infant son of Dr. and Mrs. S. C. Dean, of Starr, South Carolina, was born on Dec. 10, 1913, and died on Jan. 6, 1915. Dr. and Mrs. Dean with little Carey were spending the holidays with Dr. and Mrs. T. C. Chacher, Mrs. Dean's parents, when Jesus called the little one to him. Funeral services were held at the home of the grandparents in Prudhomme, La., and at the Eunice Cemetery. God did not see best to let little Carey linger long in this world, but while here he won a place in the hearts of all who knew him. To know him was to love him. We know that all things are done according to God's will and we submit ours to him, but our hearts ache and we miss the one we loved. The little form we knew lies in the little white casket in the tomb, but the soul of the dear little one is mingling with that mighty band of angels that ever sing sweet songs of praise around the great throne of God.

"Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul."

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING
Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.
Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.
There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.
Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

Scooba, Miss.

I am glad to report that the outlook on the Scooba charge is very promising, notwithstanding the many drawbacks that seem to be in the way just at this time. Since our arrival here the weather has been very cold and disagreeable. I have not been able as yet to carry any of my plans into effect; I trust, however, that I shall soon have everything in good shape for the year's work. The good people of the town have been mindful of the pastor and his family. We arrived in this little city on Dec. 22 and were cordially received, and since that time we have had many tokens of appreciation both from members and non-members of the Church.—C. C. Evans.

Guntown and Baldwyn, Miss.

Dear Editor: Allow me to say that we were returned to Guntown and Baldwyn for the second year, and have been kindly received by the good people here. As you know, we serve a very choice people, who have expressed in many ways their willingness to work with their pastor another year and we are well cared for and happy. They are continually remembering us with good things, which might be called a pelting of the variety that does not hurt, but makes one very thankful. Let the good work go on! We are enjoying it. We appreciate all this kindness. The outlook for a good year is better than we had anticipated; and while we are not a prophet we are going to predict that we will have a better year's work in 1915 than we did in 1914. We are sending you some renewals and one new subscription, with the promise to give some time to the work of securing subscribers to the Advocate. We cannot afford not to go ahead. Times are hard, but we have seen worse. I move that we all quit grumbling and get to work. You are giving us a good paper. May God bless you and the Advocate!—W. C. Carlisle.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER NORSWORTHY.

Dear Mr. Editor: Here I am, just back from Florida, the Land of Flowers and Sunshine, where I have been for some weeks conducting revival services.

At Kathleen, Florida, we were blessed with a most gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit and a great victory was realized. In a few days I will return to that State for other meetings and will be there until April 1, when I will return for work in Mississippi and will be open for calls in this State.

Well, Mr. Editor, the longer I live and the more I see of it, notwithstanding its defects, the more I believe our system of distributing our ministers is the very best. For several years I have watched very closely the progress of affairs in the Methodist Church here in Yazoo City. Under the ministry of our dear Brother N. B. Harmon, who was so universally loved and respected here, the Church made marked progress along all lines, and when it was known that he was to leave us we greatly feared it would not be well, but the cause has not suffered. Brother Sullivan seems to be the very man to take up the faithful, painstaking work laid out by his worthy predecessor and press it to a splendid success. He is succeeding beyond every hope. On every side you hear words of commendation and appreciation. The congregations have continued to increase and the prayer meetings resemble Sunday morning services, so large is the attendance. On yesterday, while riding with him on the street car, one of the leading and most capable men of the Church said to me, "I firmly believe we are going to have the very best year we have had in a long, long time. So mote it be."

In view of the hard times (?) incident to the coming of the boll weevil and the war, there was considerable talk of reducing the salary of the pastor here, but after Brother Sullivan got on the ground and began his work, though he said not a word about the matter, the very men who had thought such a course necessary became convinced that such a laborer as they had secured was worthy of the very best support they could possibly afford and moved to have the salary made the same as it was last year. The duplex envelope is being introduced and other modern ideas not theretofore in use here are being incorporated into the work of the Church. The signs of the times are propitious and we are happy in our church work in Yazoo City.

May 1915 be a year of wonderful revivals all over our beloved Zion!

Yours sincerely,

THOS. J. NORSWORTHY.

Yazoo City, Miss.

The Sunday School.

CHILDREN'S DAY WORTH WHILE.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

Children's Day, under the provisions of the New Discipline, is the last Sunday in April or as near thereto as possible. That every Sunday school should observe Children's Day we all agree. It should be made the great Day of all the year to the adults as well as the children. A day to which they will look forward with pride and pleasure.

There are many things we can do to make the day a real Red Letter Day. Here are a few of the things we can do: Let all infants that are to be baptized be brought to the church on that day and parents be instructed in their responsibility, etc. The children whose hearts have been touched by the Sunday school should be encouraged to unite with the Church on that day. Have an up-to-date program with life in it. Let everything be for the welfare of the children; have the church beautifully decorated for the occasion, let pastor, superintendent, and church and Sunday school officers be in hearty accord with the spirit of the day.

Do not sandwich the program between the Sunday school hour and the 11 o'clock service. Call off everything; clear the track for the gospel train of childhood.

The committee getting up the program should be appointed at least six weeks before the observance of the day. It would be wiser also to appoint a committee on the offering, and an advertising committee.

The program determines the success or failure for the day. Some Children's Day programs are wonderfully made. They consist of a little speech, a little sermon, a little song and then a little collection, and it is all over with. No one has been entertained or inspired. Did you ever attend one like it?

The program should be crisp and to the point, with at least one great theme running through it as a red thread. Do not have certain recitations just because Sallie knows it and John won a medal with it, etc.

Songs should be carefully selected, practiced beforehand, and in harmony with the main program. This will add to the interest of the day. An interesting Children's Day will do much toward advertising the school.

The offering. This should not be dealt with carelessly by any means. Here you may use the Offering Committee. The purpose of the offering should be explained that all may contribute intelligently and liberally. The writer was present at a Children's Day exercise once upon-a-time, heard the "little speeches, little sermons, little songs" and when the time on the program came for "the little collection" the superintendent explained that "this collection is for the orphans of the State and we want a good collection." On being told better he replied, "Well, when was it changed?" He got about $1.85. Not because the people did not want to help the orphans of the State, but because the explanation was erroneous and indefinite and no thought given to it.

If you want a large contribution on that day, advertise it, order little children's envelopes from the Publishing House, hand them out the Sunday before, and ask that they be brought back next Sunday or sent back. Take these envelopes up at the morning service and at night. Let the teachers inquire of their pupils if they brought an offering, and encourage them to do so. In this way it will be possible to get an offering from every pupil. You can easily double your collection if you will only try a plan like this or one better if you can think of a better plan.

If Children's Day is worth while, it is worthy of our best efforts. Remember that the Methodist Church gave to the world Children's Day, and we should never fail to honor the Day by observing it. If you cannot observe the day with a program preach a sermon to the children and take the offering, and thus let your church and Sunday school help in a great cause.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Sunday School Board at Columbia ordered the "Missionary Messenger," a new publication to promote the cause of missions, sent to every superintendent and pastor in the Mississippi Conference. It will mean much to the future Church if you will have this program carried out in your Sunday school. If we want a Church to-morrow that will stand for the cause of missions, we must educate our boys and girls in that cause to-day. Missions in the Sunday school means far more than the collection. It means instruction also.

We spent a very pleasant and valuable day at Hermanville, on Sunday, Jan. 24, though the sleet fell and it was very cold. The teacher of the Beginners' Department will try the graded literature, and the superintendent and pastor are very anxious to have a workers' council (teachers' meeting) and teacher-training class, cradle roll, and home department. Thus the Hermanville school will move up about 40 per cent on the "Standard of Efficiency." Rev. G. G. Yerger, the pastor, and the people of Hermanville, do not believe in being behind in church work. Brother Yerger is a hustler.

Since last writing, we have also worked with Brother Meigs, at Rankin Street, Jackson. He has one of the best Sunday schools in the Conference and a corps of workers second to none. They have an up-to-date workers' council which meets every Friday night in the homes of the workers. They do not only study the lesson, but they study the needs of the school and the pupils.

There is one other place we must mention that we have had the pleasure of visiting this month and that was the Orphans' Home. Upon the invitation of Brother W. M. Williams, we went over and talked Sunday school work to the teachers and workers there. After enjoying a delightful supper, we went immediately to the chapel and talked about forty minutes; then for about fifteen minutes we had a Round Table talk concerning Sunday school work in which all participated. Then we went to Millsaps College and heard one of the best lectures I have ever had the pleasure of enjoying. I have often said there was not another man in Mississippi that could run the Orphans' Home as Brother Williams does, and the more I visit there the more I am convinced of the truthfulness of this statement.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Important Notice: The preachers will please send orders for Children's Day programs to me at once, I can have the programs sent to all our superintendents by the first week in March. You remember the new law provides that Children's Day be held on the fourth Sunday in April.

The Sunday School Board is anxious to have every school use Methodist literature, because it is the best. If any preacher is troubled with union literature, or that of other Churches, write to me for a supply of our own for this quarter.

Rev. R. I. Collins can be counted upon to command the forces at Courtland and the surounding country. He is studying, praying, and working. His schools will move up a round or two.

Brother James Porter, of Oakland, says he is going to put a list of his church members where it can be seen by the Sunday school and never stop working until every church member is in some department of his school, and every member of the school is in the Church.

The Methodist Church at Noxapater is composed of a heroic band of workers. With a membership of less than a hundred, they have built a creditable church with a sufficient number of rooms to do high class work. Rev. H. M. Cockrum, the pastor, and Brother Webb, the superintendent know how to do team work. The organized class of men taught by Brother Glenn, and the young ladies' class taught by Miss Claudine Curtis, are organized for a purpose, namely, to help bring in that ten thousand we are after. These two classes have doubled their membership in a short time. The Teacher-training class in this live school is taught by Mr. Geo. B. Taylor.

The Eupora school claims to be organized according to the standard of efficiency. How many more in the Conference are up to the standard? From Brother McCafferty down, or from Brother McCafferty up, every worker is going in the same direction—up. Professor Campbell the capable superintendent, has a Teacher-training class of nineteen. He is quietly solving many problems through this class of fine young people. The Morris Bible Class have shown their appreciation of Miss Willingham by presenting to her a gold watch. She has watched her class and her class has "watched" her. The best thing about this school is, they want to do better work, and are reaching out and up for all the help they can get.

WOMEN NEED NOT WORRY OR SUFFER

Feminine Ailments Once Considered Serious Now Easily Conquered and Speedily Ended.

Give your heart to God and your life to earnest work and loving purpose, and you can never live in vain.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS.

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acid so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

A NOTE FROM CLEVELAND, MISS.

Dear Editor: Some weeks ago a visitor at this place was so impressed with the preaching of the pastor of the First Methodist Church here that he saw fit to express his admiration through the columns of your good paper. It has occurred to me that a mere visitor should not be allowed to say all the good things for Rev. E. R. Smoot, whom we proudly claim as our pastor. You will, therefore, pardon me for again calling your attention to this brilliant man of God. Of rare and attractive personality, he instinctively arrests the stranger's eye, and kindles within him a desire to know the man better; and to know him better is to admire him more. Endowed by nature with a voice full of music, tall and imposing, with a clear and analytical mind, there is a lofty strain to his preaching that characterizes the true orator. With equal ease, he leads his hearers into the realms of the metaphysical, or applies the teachings of his Master to the daily affairs of life. His store of information is most wonderful; his illustrations apt and impressive. He has preached sermons here that would have been printed in many denominational papers over the country, had he been a Bishop. There are few preachers with more promise. His work here has been attended with unusual success, and he has the united support of his flock. Although a young man, Brother Smoot has had experience far beyond his years. Before entering the ministry, he traveled for some years with the Rev. Sam Jones, and subsequently was engaged in the evangelistic work for about six years, holding meetings in twenty States.

STOPS TOBACCO HABIT.

Elder's Sanitarium, located at 513 Main St., St. Joseph, Mo., has published a book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit, and how it can be stopped in three to five days. As they are distributing this book free, anyone wanting a copy should send their name and address at once.

FROM McCOOL, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: I will send you a short report from the McCool charge. I was appointed to this place at the last Annual Conference at Starkville, and we arrived here on Dec. 16 and were taken into the hearts and homes of some of the best people to be found anywhere. I have made one and a half rounds on my work and find it very well organized along Sunday school lines. The outlook is good for a bright future, and I feel as never before the desire to work for God and mankind. My faith is strong in the hope of bringing the work up to what it ought to be, and I would ask the prayers of all interested friends to that end.—T. L. Oakes, P. C.

WAYNESBORO, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our presiding elder, Rev. James T. Leggett, was with us on Jan. 30, 1915, at Fedora Church, and preached to the delight of all, at the 11 o'clock hour, using as his text Luke 24:49. His exposition of this great text was of a high order. I want to say that when Brother Leggett threshes out a text, that there is not much left untouched. Truly he is one of the strongest men in our Conference. I am always glad for the time to roll around for him to come to my charge to preach and hold our quarterly conferences. Our first quarterly meeting was very well attended, all the churches being represented, except one—Winchester Church. I have made my first round on the charge for the new year despite the bad roads, and the inclemency of the weather. We have had fairly good services at all of the Churches except at Pleasant Grove. Though I was there on time, only four young men came, but we went into the Church, and I read a Scripture lesson, after which we knelt down in earnest prayer invoking God's blessings upon us and the work of the Church for the new year. I have made it a rule since joining the Conference never to leave the house of God, without kneeling down and asking him to bless us in all our work. I hope to be able with the assistance of the Christians in the charge, to prosecute all of the different phases of church work, much more effectively this year than we did last year.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C.

A MESSAGE FROM BROTHER JOHNSON.

Dear Brother Meek: I am at home again after a three weeks' stay in the Baptist Hospital at Memphis, and while the trip was a little too much for me so soon after my operation and I have suffered a relapse, I am again convalescent, and think I will be myself again in a few days. These people know so well how to make a preacher feel good that it will almost make him well when he is sick. This is our second year on this charge, and we must say that we have never spent a more pleasant time anywhere. It is true that a few weeks ago we got an awful "pounding" from the good people here, but as it was the kind that most preachers like and as it left the pantry well filled with all kinds of good things, we could not find room for complaint. Our people at both Churches—Black Hawk and Acona—are loyal Methodists, and many of them are truly spiritual and love the Lord and are earnestly trying to do his will. We are looking for a good year. Pray for us.—J. H. Johnson, P. C.

TETTERINE CURES PILES.

Every sufferer from Piles ought to read these words from H. S. Hood, Bellaire, Mich.: "For 16 years I had been a sufferer from itching piles. I got a box of Tetterine and less than half the box made a complete cure." Tetterine gives instant relief in all skin diseases such as Eczema, Tetter, Ringworm, Ground Itch, etc., and constitutes a permanent remedy. 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

A FEAST OF GOOD THINGS.

The people of Oxford, Miss., have just enjoyed a rare treat. Dr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, author of a series of devotional books, spent five days with us, giving two addresses a day. He is unique in style and manner. His quiet appearance, his deliberate manner, his clear, strong grasp of truth as revealed in the Word of God, and his deep spirituality, mark him as an exceptional man. Not that all of his addresses were extraordinary, because they were not, but several of his sermons were most magnificent and all of them were good. He is certainly a gentle man, as well as a gentleman. He helped the Church by pointing the way to mountains of unmined gold and by digging deeper the wells from which men draw their spiritual strength and nourishment.

Dr. Gordon is rendering a very helpful service to the Church. He is not an evangelist in the sense that Billy Sunday is, but in quite another field, he is doing valuable service. His ministry tends to sweep away the petty differences which in the past have been so unduly magnified, and he holds up a lofty standard for the child of God. He charmed young and old alike. The churches are closer together here in Oxford, prayer is looked on as a richer and more necessary thing and religion is a thing of greater vitality because of his services. He carries with him our best wishes and prayers.

Oxford, Miss. E. S. LEWIS.

POTASH

is food for thought as well as for crops this year.

When shipments were interrupted by the war, it was estimated that there was enough Potash on hand in the United States to provide two and three per cent Potash in mixed fertilizers for this spring's trade. Some manufacturers had more than enough for these percentages.

Since then minor sources of Potash have been fully utilized, and additional shipments from the usual source are still being received.

The supply is below normal, but this need not prevent farmers securing some Potash in their fertilizers, nor should it lead farmers to decide not to use fertilizers.

There is no reason to return to the out-of-date goods without Potash, although some authorities may try to "wish" them on us.

We have not used enough Potash in the past. The largest annual import of Potash was only one-seventieth of the Potash taken from the soil by our 1914 corn crop and only one-fifteenth of the Potash lost every year in drainage water.

Spring crops use from two to ten times as much Potash as Phosphoric Acid. Get as much Potash in the fertilizer as possible. A few firms are offering to furnish from four to ten per cent.

There is no substitute for Potash. It may be harder to get just now, but POTASH PAYS.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE.

Don't stay gray! Here's a simple recipe that anybody can apply with a hair brush.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and abundant.

MISSIONS IN 1914.

The banner year of the American Foreign Mission Boards was 1912. In 1913 the income was not so great. In 1914 the contributions exceeded those of 1913 hy more than $1,100,000. The total income of the American Foreign Mission Boards for last year was $17,168,611. Thls does not include $509,510 contrlhuted for certain mission work in Mexico, Cuha, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Alaska.

The showing made by natives in the foreign fields indicate that great progress is heing made in the direction of self-support. Last year the natives contrihuted $4,243,967 to work conducted hy American missionarles alone.

Great Britain and Continental Europe are naturally hehind their figures for 1913. The amount of their contrihutions last year was $13,884,411.

The followlng are some statistics of the American Mission Boards: Missionaries, 9969; haptized during the year, 159,286; numher of churches, 9946 (a gain of 34,475 over 1913); colleges, theological seminaries, and tralning schools, 606; other schools, 12,619, with a totai attendance of 547,730.—Nashvilie Advocate.

AFTER THE WAR—WHAT?

Dr. John R. Mott, in a recent address, made the foliowing statement: "I have come hack from the European war zone carrying the heaviest burden on my heart that I have ever carried. When the great struggle is over, you wiii find the great nations of Europe exhausted not only economically, not only in the sense of having laid under the ground millions of lives; hut exhausted, I fear, in hope, in faith, in courage. Then will come the solemn hour for America to assume far larger responsibilities in world service than ever hefore, when we with our unspent energy, with our fresh courage, will place at the disposal of these nations the choicest products we have evolved."

MARY HELM SCHOOL, SONGDO.

Miss Lillie Reed writes: "The past year has heen filled with joy in the work assigned to me. The Lord has wonderfully hlessed every department of the work, and the growth in numbers and results of the work accomplished has been very gratifying. The Mary Helm School for widows and married women has had a good year, although for the first six months the entire class-room work of four grades was carried on in two small Korean rooms. We had no seats, and the pupils sat on the floor. The enrollment from April 1 has heen twenty-nine; previous to this for six months the enrollment was elghteen. We have three splendid teachers, two women and a man. All of them have done faithful work. The pupils have improved every opportunity and have made good progress in their studies. On Sundays some six or more of the girls teach in the morning and afternoon Sunday schools of the different Churches. One student, wife of one of our preachers, completed the course of study during the year and is now teaching a country school. One of our most-felt needs is some kind of Industrial work that would assist the girls to earn all or a part of their board while in school and that would be a means of livelihood after leaving school if it should be necessary.

PARKER MEMORIAL AUXILIARY, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

This society is composed of thirty-five interested women, who find much to do under the wise guidance of capahle leaders. An especially helpful and inspiring meeting was held recently at the home of Mrs. R. H. Harper. The parlors were attractively decorated with maps, pictures of our different schools, also pictures of the saintly women who have given their lives for the Master's work.

Mrs. Godat gave an excellent talk on "Being a Cheerful Giver" and made it very plain to every one present that they must give all they can in the spirit of Him who gave it all to them, and that such giving hrings a joy which knows no limit.

Mrs. Harper presented the finances, dwelling upon the division of the dues and through what channels they finally reach their destination. It was encouraging to learn of the vast amount of good being accomplished hy what seems so little when individual auxiliaries are considered. But large amounts grow from small contrihutions.

Miss Cora Godat, a graduate of Scarritt Bible and Training School, presented the work in foreign fields, giving a brief resume of the work and dwelling upon the fact that America has heen instrumental in sending the rays of light into heathen darkness, reaching to the lowest depths and lifting poor benighted souls to Christ, the Savior of mankind.

Our mission helow Canal Street—St. Mark's Hall—was not slighted, hut Mrs. Brandt told of the good it is accomplishing, how hungry souls are heing fed with the hread of life and how bodily wants are being ministered unto. The need of more workers was strongly emphasized.

Mrs. Harper in her own clever way "set the fashion" and wore the "missionary hat." She was accompanied hy Mrs. McChanguy who sang a song entitled "Subscribe" to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." Needless to say this brought down the house, for the novel always appeals to us.

This was a thoroughly enjoyable meeting even to the dainty refreshments served hy the hostess. We feel that we are a very live auxiliary handed together to do something for our King.

Mrs. F. W. BRADT,

MRS. J. B. COBB HONORED.

Mrs. J. B. Cobh, formerly Corresponding Secretary of the Forelgn Department of the Woman's Missionary Society of our Church, has heen chosen Chairman of the Nashville territorial commission of the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions. This territory includes practically all of the Southern States; and twelve denominations are represented in the Federation.

HOLDING INSTITUTE, LAREDO, TEXAS.

Just before Christmas Mrs. T. A. Brown, the West Texas Conference Secretary, and Mrs. R. W. MacDonell, visited the Mexican school at Laredo, Tex., which is named for Miss Nannie Holding, who was its founder more than thirty years ago. This is the first visit that the school has had from any of the officers of the Council or Conference Society since it passed to the Home Department. The school carries a faculty of fifteen. Nine are Americans, five are Mexicans, and one is a Porto Rican. All of the faculty are Methodists save two. The Home Department has expended some $5000 in very necessary repairs since assuming control. Much needs to be done, however, to render the institution comfortable and the work efficient. A new dormitory, a room for social gatherings for the students, a better library-room, and various periodicals are needed at once. Here is an opportunity for some one to whom God has given large wealth to turn his money into service. The spirit of the school is fine and much good is being accomplished.

A WORD FROM THE SUPPLY DEPARTMENT OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

Mrs. J. H. Yarbrough, Superintendent.

The terrible war which has lasted so many years has devastated Mexico so that her people have become impoverished, and many have come to America, not only to avoid the horrors of war, hut to secure some employment by which they may have bread and clothing.

The condition of our own country, as a result of the European War, has made it almost impossihle for these people to secure work. As a result, there are thousands of poor starving Mexicans on our borders. Many of these people have come from the tropics, and the high altitude of Arizona and New Mexico causes them to suffer intensely with the cold.

Repeated appeals for hoxes of warm clothing have come to my office; and while our Woman's Missionary Council authorizes hoxes to be sent through the auxiliaries, only to ministers, our own mission schools and settlements, we make an exception in this instance, hecause of the dire suffering of these people. The call comes especially from the Pacific Coast.

Auxiliaries or individuals that find it possible, are urged to send warm clothing (particularly bed-clothing, hlankets, quilts, as well as clothes for men, women, and children) to our missionary at Nogales, for distribution. Send to Rev. Jose Thacker, Nogales, Arizona.

The auxiliaries that send these hoxes must report the same through their Conference Superintendent of Supplies, who will include it in her report for 1915 to my office.

We trust that we may be ahle to send relief to those suffering people immediately.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK. DON'T STAY BILIOUS, CONSTIPATED

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Clean Your Sluggish Liver Better Than Calomel and Can Not Salivate.

Calomel makes you sick; you lose a day's work. Calomel is quicksilver and it salivates; calomel injures your liver. If you are bilious; feel lazy, sluggish and all knocked out, if your bowels are constipated and your head aches or stomach is sour, just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone instead of using sickening, salivating calomel. Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and bowels regular. You will feel like working. You'll be cheerful; full of energy, vigor and ambition.

Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal guarantee that it will clean your sluggish liver better than nasty calomel; it won't make you sick and you can eat anything you want without being salivated. Your druggist guarantees that each spoonful will start your liver, clean your bowels and straighten you up by morning or you get your money back. Children gladly take Dodson's Liver Tone because it is pleasant tasting and doesn't gripe or cramp or make them sick.

I am selling millions of bottles of Dodson's Liver Tone to people who have found that this pleasant, vegetable, liver medicine takes the place of dangerous calomel. Buy one bottle on my sound, reliable guarantee. Ask your druggist about me.

PROTESTANT MINISTERS TAKE ACTION.

At the meeting of the Protestant Ministers' Association, held on Monday, Feb. 1, the following resolutions were adopted:

"The resumption of horse-racing in this city with its concomitant evils of gambling, under devices which we are persuaded are a violation of the spirit, if not the letter of the law and which offer to men and women inclined that way, a standing inducement and temptation to risk their own or their employers' funds, has restored an evil which good citizens had thought abolished forever by the enactment of the Locke law. Already, if public reports are true, New Orleans has become the Mecca of the race gambling fraternity who have been driven out of California, New York and other States through legislative and gubernatorial action, and we feel that the permitting of racing in New Orleans under present conditions constitutes an insult to the intelligence of the moral forces of this State; therefore, be it

"Resolved, First. That the Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans view with regret and grave apprehension the re-introduction of racing into this city with its regular arrangements through official stakeholders to promote personal betting:

"Resolved, Second, That we condemn as directly contrary to the spirit of the Locke law the entire arrangement as reported in the daily papers by which the spirit of gambling is being fostered, and large sums are daily being wagered upon the races;

"Resolved, Third, That we call upon the farming and live stock interests of the State to repudiate the proposition to further develop the racing interests by combining a live stock exhibit with future race meetings;

"Resolved, Fourth, That we call upon the public authorities to bring forward for judicial interpretation the present betting methods so as to determine whether or not the Locke law is being violated."

END STOMACH TROUBLE, GASES OR DYSPEPSIA

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes Sick, Sour, Gassy Stomachs surely feel fine in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach-headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest stomach doctor in the world. It's wonderful.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

The examinations for the first half year have been finished and for the most part the work has been satisfactory. The students and faculty have entered with enthusiasm upon the work of the second term. It is with regret that some students have been compelled to leave college due in some instances to falling health and, no doubt, in others to the effect of the European war upon our commercial and industrial interests.

The readers of the Advocate and all friends of the College will be interested to know that at present the enrollment in the College proper is between 170 and 175, as against 144 for the entire session last year in the same department.

Professor Styles, an A. B. graduate of Colorado College, has been selected as Acting-Head-Master of the Preparatory School instead of Professor Henderson, who was compelled to give up his work on account of his health. Professor A. M. Withers is at present in the Jackson Sanitarium where he went for a minor operation. At the present he expects to be back home in a few days. Dr. Sullivan and Professor Harrell attended the Mid-year Meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference, which was held at Hattiesburg during examination week.

The Lyceum Course for this year is about finished, there being one other number on the program. Edward Baxter Perry, the blind pianist, will be the last attraction. The course this year has been an exceptionally good one.

Of the basket ball games which we have played at home this year we have won a majority. It will soon be time for practice in base ball to begin and there is every reason to think that we will put out a winning team in that great American sport. Good, wholesome athletics properly regulated and safeguarded, is a great boon to an institution.

Dr. Kern and Professor Lin recently lectured before the Shakespeare and Fortnightly Clubs respectively.

Those who assisted in replacing the lens in the James Observatory may be interested to know that it is now being used in observing variable stars in connection with Harvard College Observatory. The results will be published in the Harvard Annuals. In this work the Observatory is being used to advance knowledge as well as to impart it. The class in Astronomy is making all possible use of the Observatory in general observation, in finding the latitudes, and in finding time.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

Finds Cure for Epilepsy After Years of Suffering

"My daughter was afflicted with epileptic fits for three years, the attacks coming every few weeks. We employed several doctors but they did her no good. About a year ago we heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and it certainly has proved a blessing to our little girl. She is now apparently cured and is enjoying the best of health. It is over a year since she has had a fit. We cannot speak too highly of Dr. Miles' Nervine."

MRS. FRANK ANDERSON,
Comfrey, Minn.

Thousands of children in the United States who are suffering from attacks of epilepsy are a burden and sorrow to their parents, who would give anything to restore health to the sufferers.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

is one of the best remedies known for this affliction. It has proven beneficial in thousands of cases and those who have used it have the greatest faith in it. It is not a "cure-all," but a reliable remedy for nervous diseases. You need not hesitate to give it a trial.

Sold by all Druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The recent prohibition campaign in Louisiana was quite a success. The meetings were well attended from start to finish. Every speaker reports kind and courteous treatment at every place. In fact they are loud in their praise of Louisiana, saying, "The Louisiana Campaign was the best and most satisfactory of the kind pulled off in the States."

The Patterson meetings were an ovation from first to last, closing out in Shreveport with an audience of 2000; and 500 were turned away because standing room could not be had in the building.

It is safe to say that never before were the Anti-Saloon forces so strong or so well organized, as they are at present. There are several parishes ready to swing into the dry column as soon as elections can be secured. East Baton Rouge is one of this number. And as our State University is located there, it is time to move either the liquor holes or the University. There is no reason to continue this unnecessary temptation to our young men. I know some parents in Louisiana who are now thinking seriously about this very matter.

I desire in conclusion to thank our friends for their co-operation. Without their help we would have failed in the campaign. We could never succeed without their aid, but with it we can win out. On with the battle! A. W. TURNER.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

All contributions, regular and special, for the Board of Education should be sent to Rev. C. A. Battle, Treasurer, Baton Rouge, La. Those who made subscriptions last year to the Educational campaign conducted by Rev. P. M. Brown, which were to run through several years, should remit the amount promptly as it falls due to Brother Battle, who will duly credit and receipt for same. Let pastors call the attention of subscribers to this notice.

All pastors are also requested to remit the amount of their assessment for the Centenary special to Brother Battle as soon as it is secured.

Those who can send in their regular Educational assessment by March 15 are requested to do so, as pressing obligations on the Mansfield Board of Trust are due.

QUITE CORRECT.

The New York Christian Advocate says: "That he may have greater doctrinal liberty, a minister in New York has resigned his pastorate and accepted an invitation to a church of another domination. He has been very successful in the place he now occupies, and will leave behind him a host of friends and well-wishers, so that he is not making this transfer to escape from an uncomfortable position. The man's honesty is to be commended, and his example might well be emulated by all who secretly hold views which they know to be contrary to the standards of the denomination to which they belong. It is quite impossible for any man long to conceal his theological aberrations. Almost unobserved by him they will slip into his public speech. As soon as a minister has discovered that he is hopelessly at variance with the tenets of his Church he should frankly seek affiliation with another body."

We think that this pertinent observation of our esteemed contemporary applies equally to the preacher who finds himself so out of accord with the polity of his Church that he feels that he cannot work in harmony with it, and that he must keep inveighing against it, in spite of his solemn ordination vows.

A ROYAL ROAD TO RICHES.

Henry van Dyke makes this statement: "We measure success by accumulation. The measure is false; the true measure is appreciation." In other words, there are more rich persons in the world than one imagines. Perhaps you are one of them. Perhaps you may become one of them, when you know the way.

Riches, strangely enough, do not make rich. It is one's attitude toward possessions that makes one rich. Some of the rich are the poorest of the poor. Some of the poor are the richest of the rich.

If we appreciate what we have we are rich, even if our possessions might be tied up in a napkin. If we own houses and broad lands and do not appreciate them, we are poor indeed.

Get the habit of appreciation. Do not think about ownership. The open sky, the open road, the broad fields, the forest and the flowers and the songs of happy birds, all belong to the person that has sense enough left in this mad world to enjoy them.

The spirit of man can make over a single-roomed cottage into a palace more full of joy than royal palaces.

Get the habit of appreciation.—Rev. R. P. Anderson, in "C. E. World."

We note every now and then a statement declaring that a revival held somewhere was free from emotion. We have little faith in such reports. There may be unemotional meetings, but not unemotional revivals. Where there is deep conviction for sin, followed by genuine, heartfelt conversions, there must be agitation and joy. It was so on the day of Pentecost; it was so in the early years of the Christian Church; it was so under the marvelous ministries of Wesley, Whitefield, Finney, and Jonathan Edwards, and it is so under the preaching of every truly effective revivalist of this age. No form of life, either physical or spiritual, can be generated in a refrigerator.

THE LATENT WEALTH OF HUMAN NATURE.

Human nature is essentially the same to-day that it has ever been. Men in the fundamental elements of their being are much more alike than different. So true is this that he who understands one member of the race knows a vast deal concerning all its millions. If there has ever been such a thing as evolution it must have ceased to operate before the birth of human history—for the men that we see upon the stage of action in its opening twilight are in their constitutional characteristics in exact correspondence with those now inhabiting the earth. The environments of the several races making up mankind have undergone wonderful changes as the external world about them has become increasingly understood and its mighty forces have been harnessed and pressed into service; but the human body and the human soul are substantially as they were when God first made them. Neither religion nor sin can change a member of our race into another order of beings. Man in heaven will never become an angel; nor is there any reason to believe that even in the abode of the lost he will degenerate into some other kind of creature. Christianity, to be sure, profoundly influences human beings, but it does not give them any new faculties; it only regulates and gives right direction to those which they already possess. As a matter of course, in doing this a marvelous transformation is wrought in human affairs—in society, in government, and in the character of the institutions established and maintained.

These indestructible potentialities of human nature are the world's great treasures and furnish the strongest ground of hope that we have for the race in the future. Men are undoubtedly more or less influenced by their surroundings, especially by the status of society in the age in which they live; and often in a period of wealth and luxury, it seems that they have ceased to be noble and capable of lofty purposes and deeds. But when the touch of disaster comes and there is a call for self-sacrifice and heroism, it is quickly discovered that, instead of being bankrupt, human nature is as rich as it ever was in the splendid qualities that made other days illustrious and golden. A recent editorial in The Outlook, perhaps our greatest American weekly, bears so pertinently on this point that we cannot resist the temptation to quote the larger portion of it. After calling attention to the fact that many are disposed to take a gloomy view of European civilization because of the colossal war now raging, and admitting that there is much in the situation to give one a feeling of depression, the writer says:

"But fundamentally the judgments of the cynics and the pessimists are disproved and made things of naught by the most magnificent illustration of the great qualities of human nature which the world has ever seen. What counts fundamentally is not the surface disorder, though that may work widespread disaster; it is not the failure of this or that political device; it is not the arrest of this or that progressive movement; it is not the failure to realize this or that golden hope; it is the response men make in a great crisis that uncovers the things for which they care most. What is of supreme consequence in the world is not the absence of disaster, it is the presence of an unquestionable and indomitable faith in invisible things. The treasuries of the world may be destroyed, but humanity is not dishonored if in adversity its soul flames out victorious.

"The pessimists have been telling us for years that the old France had perished, and the vulgarities of the Caillaux trial on the very eve of the great struggle seemed to justify this prediction; but on the first day of August that superficial France of the pessimists disappeared and the real France came into view; the France of patriotic passion, of self-forgetfulness, and of self-control; a silent France, sending the very flower of its citizenship to die on the frontiers.

"The pessimists have told us for years that the Belgians were a comfortable, materialistic people, concerned only with the things that make for ease and pleasure; but on the first day of August Belgium went to the stake without a murmur, and has suffered death without flinching. In all the history of the world there never has been a more sublime illustration of the capacity of the human soul to suffer and die for something that is better than life.

"For decades past the decline of the English Empire and the decay of English character have been announced or predicted by scores of cynics and pessimists, who have read in current history the lesson of a great lost genius for rule. On the first day of August England began to gather her children about her. They came from all quarters of the globe. Her nobles, often accused and often guilty of leading luxurious lives and of indifference to social injustice, put their lives in her hands, not only with alacrity, but with glowing enthusiasm. Even the races that have been subject to her rallied about her; and never in her long history, full of peril and vicissitude, has England showed a more heroic mood than in this day when she is fighting for her life.

"Everybody knew the enormous development of Germany during the past thirty years, and everybody recognized her organized energy and power; but concerning all the nations that are now in the field against her armies there has been widespread skepticism of their seriousness of temper, their moral vitality, their physical resourcefulness.

"The luxury of modern life, the devotion to business, the disclosures of greed, selfishness and dishonesty which have come as inevitable results of a great prosperity, have furnished cynics and pessimists with ready material for the arraignment of society and the prediction that the world has lost its ancient courage and devotion. But never in all its history has death seemed such a mere incident as to-day, when the story of indifference to its approach is told in every army corps and by every detachment of men over the whole field, east and west. Courage is the universal possession of the German, the Englishman, the Frenchman, the Belgian, the Austrian, the Russian, and the Japanese. The stories of individual coolness and daring are so many that they have almost ceased to attract special attention."

It looks to us as if the revelation of the great war here pointed out ought to give us some encouragement concerning the religious condition of mankind in the future. Undoubtedly there are many disquieting, not to say alarming, things in the present situation. The churches are far too meagerly attended and numbers of them are having scarcely any conversions or additions; worldliness is widely prevalent among their members, and the Holy Scriptures are being assailed by men claiming to be Christians with an irreverence and recklessness perhaps not equaled since the beginning of the Christian era; there is an astounding lack of regard for authority in nearly all the religious denominations, and, as Mr. Gilbert K. Chesterton has said, the very foundations in some respects seem to be crumbling. But let us not give way to despondency. The vitality of the race that in the past furnished a Paul, a Luther, and a Wesley is not yet exhausted; and the Heavenly Father, Christ, and the Holy Spirit are still the same. Things can quickly change. When we least expect it some man that the people will hear and heed may rise up "a root out of a dry ground." It does not take a revival long to catch from heart to heart, and to sweep from one place to another, until whole nations are aflame. In times of ease and prosperity men may become self-sufficient and go off after other things, but when great crises arise they will discover the futility of other reliances and find their way back to God. This is said to be what multitudes are doing in Europe now. Much dependence may be placed upon the religious needs and capacities of mankind. They are not superficial and ephemeral, but constitutional and enduring. "The faith once delivered unto the saints" is the only adequate faith, and it will never perish from the earth.

PRAYER AND DEEDS.

No answer comes to those who pray,
Then idly stand
And wait for stones to roll away
At God's command.
He will not break the binding cords
Upon us laid
If we depend on pleading words,
And do not aid.
When hands are idle, words are vain
To move the stone;
An abiding angel would disdain
To work alone;
But he who prayeth and is strong
In faith and deed,
And toileth earnestly, ere long
He will succeed.

—"The Bible To-Day."

THE PERSONAL TOUCH.

A noted evangelist was once holding a series of services in a church whose minister was a man of long experience and of great influenee. One night as they sat on the platform together, the minister pointed out to the evangelist a man in the audience.

"For twelve years," he said, "I have tried to win that man to Christ. I have preached to him so long that I sometimes find myself doing it almost unconsciously."

"From the pulpit?" asked the evangelist.

"From the pulpit, yes."

"How many times have you gone to him with the love of God in your heart and said: 'I want to see you become a child of God?"

"I must confess," said the minister, "that I have never spoken to him personally and directly concerning his salvation."

"Then," said the evangelist, "perhaps he is not impregnable after all."

That night the evangelist, after the service, caught the man before he got to the door. He spoke only a few words, but they were earnest and loving. And the next evening in the "after-service," in which so many souls have found lasting peace and eternal life, the man was on his knees with the tears streaming down his cheeks. It was the personal touch that did it.

The sermon is effective with many. Music has brought salvation to many a life. But in thousands and thousands of cases it is only the personal touch that wins.—William Thompsou McElroy, in The Methodist Recorder.

THE HELPFUL EXAMPLE OF A GOOD MAN'S LIFE.

By Rev. W. L. Doss.

I knew a man. He was a plain man. He was a Christian man. He was not one who stood in a prominent place in life. He was one who adorned the place in which he did stand. He loved Christ. He loved the Church. He loved the souls of men. He walked uprightly before men and did those things that were right in their sight. What was better he walked uprightly before the Lord and did those things that were right in his sight. All men held him in high regard and there were none but that spoke well of him and of the life that he lived. The men with whom he labored knew him to be a truly Christian man. They believed in his religion and honored him because of his life and because of the shining Christian character that they saw in that life. None of these men ever spoke anything exeept the best things concerning this man. They would not hear others speak evil of him.

This man spent his life mostly in labor with his own hands. His remuneration was never large. He never knew affluence and luxury. Often was he in trying circumstanees. Amid it all his mind was ever upon the highest things. "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth," might have been the motto of his life. His thoughts were high thoughts. He lived on a high plane. When his pastor went to see him in his home, the pastor received more help than he gave.

In due time he went home to be with God. How long he did suffer and how fearful was that suffering sometimes! But the Father took his child home to be with him. There were sorrowing ones left behind. They all know where they must go to find this one whose memory still lingers to bless men in this life. A young woman said: "He is gone. We can't carry our troubles to him any more. We will have to bury them ourselves now." Thus had he been a sort of father confessor to many of whom the world knew nothing and his strong Christian character had been lent to help many in times when the strength of one of God's noblemen could so bless the lives of others.

Oh! that we might all have something of this in our lives. How good would it be could we all so love God and his Church and so live that all men would honor our religion! How good would it be could we always have high thoughts and purposes, living above the daily routine! How good would it be could our lives be so warmed with human sympathy and love that others would be ready to come to us for compassion and comfort! God has made this possible for everyone of us. Will it be? This is for each one to say for himself. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Through God's power and his Christ, be one of God's noblemen.

"PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF REDEMPTION."

By Rev. S. H. Werlein, D. D.

The above caption is the title of a book recently written by Rev. Henry Beach Carre, D. D., Professor of Biblical Theology and English Exegis at Vanderbilt University. It is a dessertation submitted by Dr. Carre to the Faculty of the Graduate Divinity School of the University of Chicago. In this book Dr. Carre is giving his interpretation of St. Paul's doctrine of Redemption. In this service, which Dr. Carre is endeavoring to render to all reverent students of the Bible, we assume he divests himself of all partisanship and of all predilections to any special theory of redemption. His sole object seems to be to discover St. Paul's doctrine of this great theme. He is not attempting to harmonize the apostle's teach[illegible] to the current theology of to-day, to the books on the Atonement which are used in theological seminaries. He goes back of all these, and as a close student follows with genuine fidelity the steps of the apostle in his explication of Christ's work of redeeming the race. I should say that Dr. Carre's dissertation is a powerful expositlon of the 12th verse of the Sixth Chapter of Ephesians, a verse which has doubtless caused much serious and profound thought on the part of Christian people since the times of the Apostle: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

According to Dr. Carre St. Paul gave great prominence to the personality and influence of the Devil. Demonic power to which our Lord made frequent reference is emphasized by the Apostle. We know very well the attitude which many book writers and preachers assume toward the doctrine of a personal devil; how they smile at the credulity of those who treat seriously what they loftily tell us is simply the weird teaching of the Persians concerning Ormuzd, the god who was the embodiment of right and goodness, and of Ahriman who represented darkness and evil. And with this wave of scholarly pretentiousness they dismiss the whole subject as unworthy of further considcration. How any one can study the Gospels and the Epistles and claim to believe in the authenticity of the Scriptures and at the same time discount and repudiate the actual existence of invisible and powerful demonic beings, I cannot understand.

Dr. Carre has given in his book a list of authors, the names of great scholars whose views on this subject are such as cause them not to speak lightly of this matter, nor to question the intellectual calibre of those who believe that Evil Powers have been contending through all time for dominion over the race of man. Of course, it is a mystery absolutely inexplicable. How or why a God of infinite power should allow beings inferior to himself to set up a kingdom, to unite forces for the avowed purpose of upsetting and destroying the works of rightcousness, no one can explain. It is easy to deny, but denial offers no solution of the clear and emphatic declarations of Scripture concerning these things. The Apostle Paul offers no explanation. These hostile forces have been waging war against God since a period in creation of which man has no knowledge.

To the Apostle the race is in the grasp and control of Satan and his minions. Man is helpless and hopeless. To continue in this condition means eternal destruction. Is there any help? Here the apostle recognizes Jesus Christ as the Redeemer, the Rescuer of men. In what sense is Jesus Christ man's Redcemer? Dr. Carre uses this language: "In redeeming men, Christ encountered and overcame the cosmic powers, which are antagonistic to God and men. The contest was a losing one for men as long as they had to contend with those forces unaided. Christ appeared, sent by the Father, in the fulness of time, as a Stronger One, and rescued men from the slavery of these powers, to which slavery they had been appointed until the time set for their acquiring their legal emancipation." "Christ encountered these demonic Powers, here called "Rulers of this Age." In compassing his death they seemed to triumph over God. But no, it was only a mock victory. Christ, despite his apparent defeat, was the real victor. His death was only one act in the drama. If nothing else had followed, he would have been the vaiquished one. But something else did follow. There was another act to the drama and that not demonstrated beyond question that the demons, the evil forces of the cosmos, including even the most formidable of them, namely Death, had been worsted in the contest."

What was that second act in the drama which demonstrated Christ's victory? It was his resurrection. Had there been no resurrection Christ's death would have availed nothing. Hence Christ was a Dynamic Savior. By his power he routed the enemy and offers salvation to all men who believe. The saerifice Christ made was the greatest which could be made. He gave his life for man. Dr. Carre says: "This therefore was primary. The death of Christ had its necessity not in men, not in men's sins, not in God, but in the wisdom of God as He confronted the task of rescuing men from the sovereignty of Satan under whose power Adam's disobedience had [illegible]." To put his Son at the mercy of the demonic powers and to permit them to put him to death by shameful means of the cross, was an act of supreme love on the part of God. As indisputable evidence of that love, it assures men that if they desire to transfer their allegiance from these Powers of Evil to God and thereby become sharers in the victory he wrought over these Powers, there will be no barrier to their doing so in so far as God is concerned." "Christ alone could perform this work, because man, in the weakness of sinful flesh was unable to cope with superhuman adversaries. The death of Jesus was therefore vicarious, but its vicarious character was due not to the fact that God put him to death instead of us, but because only by his death and resurrection could he vanquish our enemies and set us free, and thus make it possible for us to live eternally with God."

Dr. Carre teaches that St. Paul presents Christ as a Dynamic, rather, than a sacrificial and propitiatory Savior. Here he comes into collision with what is usually designated Orthodox Theology. The evangelical school of theology is agreed as to the vicarious and sacrificial character of Christ's death. According to Dr. Carre's interpretation of St. Paul's teaching, Satan is invested with marvelous power. To a vast multitude of reverent and thoughtful believers, yes Christians, the ordinary teaching of theology as to the Atonement offers a great many difficulties. Dr. Carre says truly: "Theology has never been able to tell just why or how the death of Christ could and did effect a reconciliation with God. Theories have been advanced to explain it, but these theories have been drawn largely from analogics in human affairs, whether judicial, governmental or parental."

This book of Dr. Carre's will serve a good purpose. It will help some people who have not heretofore been able to explain more satisfactorily to themselves why Christ died and rose again. It will not impair the view of those who have received into their lives the great help which has come to them through what they believe the vicarious work of Christ has done for humanity. The book emphasizes the great love God has for man and identifies him most intimately with the work of Christ. The results of this redemption accepted by faith is seen in a life which is wholly rescued from sin. The same dynamic power which wrested from the grip of the devil the race of man is manifest in the righteous life of believers. According to St. Paul Jesus Christ was possessed of all the attributes and functions of God, and the view of redemption as presented by the writer in no way detracts from the dignity and splendor of the Son of God.

NOTES FROM VARIOUS PLACES.

It was my pleasure to spend a few days recently in Brookhaven, where there is much to interest any one, and much that is enjoyable. The place seems to preserve its commercial status as well as any I have seen of late. It is in the midst of a good agricultural region, and on that account will be permanently prosperous, though at present there is some depression in values as elsewhere in Mississippi. Good substantial people are to be found there, as of old.

At the Methodist Church on Sunday morning, the congregation filled the building to overflowing. The sermon by Rev. J. M. Morse, the pastor, was good, and the number of communicants at the Lord's Supper the largest I have seen in many a day. What a good sign this is! The Church that neglects the divinely appointed sacraments lives but a poor and meager life.

Whitworth College is more than ever worth a visit. The attendance is none less than usual, and all else is most encouraging. It was good to look into the bright faces of the pupils and to talk to them from the rostrum for a few minutes. But that which strikes the attention most, is the improvement in the grounds and buildings lately made. Cement walks are found all over the grounds, and these are sheltered wherever needed, and then the massive and stately structures lately erected give evidence of success and prosperity, and inspire hope for the future. Cooper Dormitory is an elegant building, most convenient and commodious, and beautifully furnished. There is hardly a girl's home in the State equal to it, and they are most fortunate who occupy it. All these things are a monument to the ability of Dr. Cooper more durable than marble or brass. It is a matter of congratulation that after all the improvements made no debt remains to vex or annoy.

The history of Whitworth College from the beginning has been a shining one, as year after year throngs of bright young women have gone forth to bless the land. Whitworth keeps equal step with the best also in other things, as literature, science and music. Let the Church be still more liberal in her gifts that this great institution may be the better prepared for its noble work.

There is living in Brookhaven a lady, Mrs. Boswell, whom we visited one day, who is more than ninety-five years of age, and yet most vigorous in mind. A strong memory takes her back through the years, and her conversation abounds in many interesting facts and incidents. She is alert to all that transprises about her, and beyond, and she has a kindly concern for the sick and suffering of the community. She was from Columbus, Georgia, but has resided in Brookhaven near fifty years, and has been a member of the Methodist Church for more than eighty years. A cultivated and refined lady, as well as a devout Christian, it is a pleasure and a blesssing to know her.

A few days were then spent in Warren County among the stately hills and winding valleys that abound there. Among people who grow cattle and hogs in large numbers and who have full cribs of corn, the talk of hard times seems out of place. They will, many of them, hold their cotton for better prices, and no doubt will realize ultimately that they are prosperous indeed.

Then over delightful, serpentine roads and through beautiful scenery we glided in a friend's auto into Vicksburg, a distance of twenty-five miles, in an hour and a half, whereas the same trip used to take full five hours.

The next day was most unfavorable, but a good congregation came to hear Dr. Holloman at Crawford Street, and were rewarded by a good sermon by him. In the evening rains poured down largely and prevented service being held by another. I am sure that things are moving on pleasantly at Crawford Street.

I learned that liquor establishments are numerous, and wide open in Vicksburg, only they are kept on the second floor and not on the first. The police, and the County Attorney, and the District Attorney, and the Circuit Judge, and the Governor —oh, where are they?

In Jackson, a short visit to the Orphans' Home showed us how well everything is managed in that great institution. Brother Williams is making for himself an honored name there, and is doing large and lasting good both for the Church and the State.

I take pleasure in reporting that here in Hattiesburg our pastors, Brothers Crisler, Linfield, and Mellard are preaching to fine congregations, and that everything indicates success.

A Bible Conference was held in this place last week, under the auspices of the Baptist Church, which called together a large number of ministers, and was the occasion of the delivery of some excellent lectures. There were learned and eloquent men on the platform, and their utterances were listened to with much interest and pleasure. President E. Y. Mullens of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary was among these and chief. He delivered one night a lecture on the European War. His account of the causes of it did not differ from what we all knew previously, militarism, false philosophy, infidelity, wrong conception of the State, etc. But the last cause alleged was somewhat startling, viz.: The whole cause of the tremendous war that now desolates Europe and shocks the world is Infant Baptism. And this clearly shows how a particular notion can so obsess a mind, otherwise strong and cultured, that the reasoning faculty may become on that subject paralyzed or perverted.

Hattiesburg, Miss. E. H. MOUNGER.

ATTENDANCE AT THE EVENING SERVICE.

From many preachers comes the statement that the attendance at the Sunday morning service is good, but that the attendance at the evening service is their despair. Preachers are constantly asking why? Do they ever stop to examine themselves to discover if the answer may not possibly lie in themselves? Often they go into the pulpit in the evening with no message and ramble along, following whatever lines of thought or Bible verses come into their minds. Realizing that they have not said anything, these ramblers keep on talking and preach longer than they did at the morning service. The mistake is fatal. The congregation are much more painfully conscious of the preacher's emptiness than he is himself, although the majority of them may not be able to explain the cause.

Many preachers work toward the Sunday morning sermon as the climax of their week's work. By preparation, both mental and spiritual, they strive to give their best on Sunday morning with a fair measure of success. The devil has no better opportunity, and uses no more insidious effort than success. After success the temptation to self-satisfaction, to relaxed efforts, to confidence in the flesh, has often made a failure of the remainder of the day. The preacher often falls to gird up his loins and prepare himself mentally, and on his knees, for the evening service. Indeed, often he has, during the week, neglected the preparation for the evening service. With his whole effort—and sometimes ambition—on the morning service, he is tempted to feel that the evening service is a more informal occasion and to depend on his general information and prayers to carry him through that service.

No speaker can make his hearers more interested in his subject than he is himself. For them listening becomes a literal weariness of the flesh. Nothing is more fatiguing physically than listening to an utterance that has in it no direct message. The uninterested preacher has decidedly the advantage in physical endurance over his hearers. He moves about and the exertion of talking keeps up his circulation, and he can stop. The listener is helpless. His conscience will not permit him to leave, and he must be still. The effort adds to his nervousness. He gets sleepy and tries to think of something to keep him awake. He counts the lights and studies the designs of the windows, but he does not get relief. If the preacher is a little tired at the end of the day, so are the listeners. This is simply a plea for the preacher not to come before them without a definite message in which he is interested himself and which he has laid before God, asking that the Holy Spirit may accompany it.

This is not intended to excuse anybody from going to the evening service. Listening to the sermon is only a part and not the most important part of our worship. We are to worship by feeding on the portions of Scripture read, by singing, by praying, and by giving. We should go to God in prayer before each service, asking him to give to the preacher and to us an outpouring of the Spirit by whom we are to worship and through whom we can be in interested, reverent worship, regardless of what the preacher is saying. There are some good old saints who find every sermon good.

A LAYMAN.

THE HOLMES STORE

OF NEW ORLEANS

is one of America's truly great department stores.

It has perfected a buying organization that reaches into every producing market of the world, maintaining offices in Berlin, London, Paris and Florence, as well as New York.

It never presents any merchandise that is not of good quality and equitably priced.

Its very efficient service to patrons in the city is supplemented by the largest and best-equipped mail order department of any store in the South. Ninety-eight per cent of all orders received are filled on date of receipt.

The aim of the store is to merit fully the confidence that has been manifested by the public during its seventy-two years of merchandising history.

It would probably be safe to say that half of our populaton of responsible age is aligned with no faith or ism. For some years the Chinese Government has been using the income of the indemnity money which the United States returned to China immediately after the Boxer troubles to maintain a hundred young male students at educational institutions in this country. Last year Chinese girls were for the first time allowed to become beneficiaries of this fund and competitive examinations were held to select the most competent ones from among the applicants, who were privileged to come from anywhere in the nation. The result was that of the ten girls awarded scholarships, seven were taken from our schools in China—six from the McTyeire School, at Shanghai, and one from the Laura Haygood Memorial School at Soochow. This was a triumph which should be highly gratifying to Southern Methodists.

A BELLIGERENT PROTEST.

Dear Mr. Editor: "From the Los Angeles Conference notes in the Pacific Methodist Advocate, we take the following: 'Victor Hugo's Masterpiece will be given in dramatic recital by Miss Eleanor Miller of Pasadena next Sunday afternoon, January 3, at Trinity Auditorium, at 3 o'clock.' Let the theater-going Methodists be a little patient, and if the present trend of things keeps up, possibly they will soon be able to get what they want in their churches without having to go to the opera-houses."

The above quotation from the "Church News" column of the New Orleans Advocate, January 21, is so misleading and unjust as to merit correcting; and to call forth a protest against the spirit it manifests. A theatrical performance cannot secure our Auditorium even on week nights, when it is for rent. It is easy for some critical scribe a thousand miles away to tell us what is wrong, but had the author of the above sneer been present, he would probably have enjoyed the marvelous reading quite as much as did some score of ministers and the thousand other Christian men and women present. Two of our honored guests that afternoon were Bishops, one of whom spoke from the platform approvingly of our effort to use our magnificent auditorium on Sunday afternoons in some form of community uplift. Perhaps the writer can sense irregularities from afar, that to ordianry Christian people are not discernible. I once heard a Baptist pastor say, "If I were a cartoonist and tempted to portray some preachers, I would make them all nose."

CHAS. C. SELECMAN.

(Don't worry, Brother Selecman. What the brother at the Crescent City needs is to travel.—Editor.)—From the Pacific Methodist Advocate.

With the Compliments of the Editor.

Nothing was further from our mind than to misrepresent the character of the entertainment in the Trinity Auditorium at Los Angeles. We were careful to quote the exact language used in describing it in the Pacific Methodist Advocate that the public might exercise its own judgment concerning it. We did not state that Brother Selecman's church was now being used by theatrical companies—that is a straw-man of his own making, and, of course, one that he could easily knock down. Our language admitted of no such construction. On the contrary, the fair and logical inference from our utterance was that as yet he was not having theatrical performances of that type. Our observation which followed the quotation was not merely concerning the trend of things where our brother has sway, but concerning the tendency throughout the Church at large and to what it may lead. There was no reason why he should have undertaken to appropriate the whole of our utterance. We did not drag our brother's "DRAMATIC RECITAL" into the notice of the Methodist public—it was intruded there by another in another journal, presumably with his approval.

Brother Selecman also sent the above communication to the New Orleans Advocate for publication; but it was our purpose, before printing it, to explain to him in a kindly manner that we had no intention of misrepresenting his pastoral administration and to request him to make, free from offensive personalities, such a statement in our paper as he thought would repair the injustice done him and his flock and let the matter stop with that. Before we could write him, however, in the press of work, he had rushed into print in the organ of our Western Methodism. And since, like the Germans, he has gone to war, nothing is left us but to meet him in the arena into which he has stridden with his bristles all up and flinging missiles right and left.

We are not at all disposed to retreat from our position because, like Goliath of old, he has shown a frowning front. We are not any more ready now to admit the wisdom of "A DRAMATIC RECITAL" from an author who did not claim to be a Christian in God's house on the holy Sabbath than we were before our brother fired his gun. We have for years been speaking out against the secularization of the Church and the Lord's day and we expect to continue to do so whenever we think it is necessary, whether those conducting such a regime are near by or far away. We do not believe in surrendering our pulpits on the Sabbath to the fighters of tuberculosis, to the advocates of labor rights, or to hookworm combatants, or to Carnegie peace proponents, or to the champions of any other secular issue, no matter how worthy. Nor do we believe in shelving the Bible in a church at other hours on the Lord's day for any sort of literary or dramatic display. The latter we consider particularly objectionable at this time when a large percentage of the membership of our churches in the cities are patrons of the public stage. Wherein lies the wisdom of cultivating their tastes for such things? We would not give the grand old Bible as a means of "COMMUNITY UPLIFT" for all the novels, dramas, and man made philosophies in the world. What such secular culture can do for a people has been demonstrated in Germany. If our progressive (?) friend will get the people of Los Angeles to accept and live the Gospel of Christ they will be elevated to a plane to which nothing else can ever lift them.

Of course, we do not expect a man of Mr. Selecman's type to agree with us in the foregoing sentiments. He is the same YOUNG brother who a couple of years ago was quite willing to assume the task of reconstructing the proceedings of our Annual Conferences, feeling quite able to correct the mistakes of John Wesley and the other Methodist fathers. He is the same YOUNG gentleman who told us in the Nashville Christian Advocate of January 29, 1915, that "the thoughts of men are widening daily," and that what the world now wants is an "electric-lighted, self-starting, six-cylindered Church." We suppose that that is what he imagines he is having in Los Angeles. We do not want to be impertinent, but we should like to ask this young ecclesiastical statesman, who wants to make over the Church of God, how many genuine conversions took place at the altar of Trinity Church last year, and whether any of these occurred at his "community-uplift" services? Big audiences often mean nothing. Anything novel will draw large numbers of people. An ordinary dog fight is hard to surpass in that respect.

Our brother says if we had been present, like the others in attendance, doubtless we would have greatly enjoyed the "marvelous reading." Note that the "DRAMATIC RECITAL" has dwindled down to a "reading." Why was it not advertised as a "reading" at first? This is not the first time that we have seen such things shrink when attention was focused upon them. That is what usually happens. Our brother's supposition concerning us is of the violently hypothetic variety. If the Editor had been in Los Angeles he would not have been at the "DRAMATIC RECITAL"—certainly not if he could have found a prayer meeting or an Epworth League service to attend. And if they had all been done away with by the "DRAMATIC RECITAL" in the "SIX-CYLINDERED, SELF-STARTING CHURCH," he would still have had the Bible that the Gideons had placed in his room at the hotel to fall back on.

But our friend says that two Bishops were present. Why does he not call their names? Does he think that they might not appreciate his doing so? Is not his very silence suggestive of some doubt as to what the Church might think of their being there? Did our brother expect us to get scared and take to the woods as soon as he mentioned the fact that he had BISHOPS with him? No man honors the Bishops of our Church more than we do, or is more ready than we are to defend them when we think they are in the right; but we have never surrendered a principle to keep company with any dignitary in the Church, and, may it please the Lord, we never will. Does our brother think that the mere presence of a Bishop in a gathering or his endorsement of anything settles the question as to the propriety of the occasion or the rightfulness of the issue with the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South?. There may have been a time when such was the case, but if so, it has fully past. The Methodists of the South know that a Bishop of the Church stood sponsor for all of the outrageous proceedings connected with the spoliation of Vanderbilt University: that he declared in Asheville in May, when his utterance was calculated to mislead the General Conference, that the Board of Trust of the University had accepted the findings of the Vanderbilt Commission and intended in good faith to be bound by them; that a month later he acted with the same Board in repudiating practically every finding of the aforesaid Commission and in hoisting the flag of open rebellion; that subsequently when his deposition was being taken and the question was put to him by Mr. Fitzhugh as to whether or not he meant what he said at Asheville, and if so, how he could account for the trustees saying in the bill that they had filed in court that they never had intended to accept the conclusions of the Commission, he declared that he stood by his statement to the General Conference, and that if the trustees had backslid, it was their fault, not his; and they know that at Oklahoma City last spring he again lined up with the trustees, and that notwithstanding the fact that Chancellor Kirkland had pulled off the Carnegie million dollar transaction while the case was pending in the Supreme Court, notwithstanding the fact that according to his own implication, under oath, he had backslid, be sweepingly endorsed him as a Christian gentleman and pronounced him the greatest asset of the University, even placing him above Landon C. Garland. That Bishop, like Mr. Selecman, was a MISSOURIAN: and not all the fulsome compliments written in Northern journals and filtered into some of the spineless papers of our own Church can gloss over and blot out his indefensible and unparalleled record. Nor does this instance stand alone. Does our brother not know that another Bishop was hobnobbing with these same Vanderbilt trustees at a banquet last June and handing out bouquets to that institution under their management, though it was the Commencement at which, with traitorous hands, they severed the last cord that bound the University to the Church, and though it had been less than three months since the Bishops' squirm had been danced on the campus, and one of his colleagues, the noble man who had borne the brunt of the battle for the Church, had been burnt in effigy? No, no; it takes more than the approval or presence of a Bishop in this boasted modern day to guarantee that a thing is proper.

But we would not do the two Bishops referred to by Mr. Selecman any injustice. He does not claim that either of them approved of his "DRAMATIC RECITAL" in the Church on the Sabbath. He does not even say that both of them endorsed his "community-uplift" policy. He only states that one of them commended it. Whether that was before or after the "DRAMATIC RECITAL," we do not know. Possibly the statement that a "score of ministers" were present at this Sabbath-day entertainment furnishes some key as to why Southern Methodism is gasping for life in the Far West and that we are having to retreat from such a city as Seattle.

Using the language of a Baptist brother, our young friend tries to get off something really smart. Some men must shine in borrowed plumage, or they can never shine at all. We feel sure that no one who knows him would ever think of caricaturing Mr. Selecman as "all nose" when it comes to detecting things that are wrong and discovering harmful tendencies. A more fitting way to picture him would be to place him among a thousand pitfalls, with reeking carcasses all around, stone-blind, and with no NOSE AT ALL, but a glaring hole in the head where that organ ought to be—that hole having been eaten out by the cancerous germ of modernism, the infection having resulted from an excessive amount of ego.

If Mr. Selecman can leave off Hugo and his other "community-uplift" books long enough to give a little attention to the Bible, we should like to have him open it and read St. Paul's injunction: "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Doubtless, however, he would take the modern view and insist that the proper translation is: "Abstain from every form of evil." But, anyhow, we have the hymnology of the Church on our side (the critics haven't set to work on that yet), and we recommend to him the practise of singing every day for a while the good old Wesleyan hymn:

> "I want a principle within,
> Of jealous, godly fear;
> A sensibility of sin,
> A pain to feel it near," etc.

But we must not overlook and slight Brother Vaughan who had to butt into this matter. This is the same Brother Vaughan who when Dr. Aked, holding the position of President of the Protestant Ministers' Association of San Francisco, declared against the Virgin birth of our Lord, etc., and incidentally knocked out a chapter or two of the Gospels written by St. Matthew and St. Luke, and the Presbyterians nobly took up the fight for the faith, could not even get up so much as a decent "toot" on his rust-eaten, dust-covered bugle horn. This is the same gentleman who last fall, when it was being pointed out in the New Orleans Advocate that too much unsound teaching was being published, uncombated, in the Methodist Review, sneered out that "the lower critics" were after Dr. Alexander. Does he think that anybody imagines that he knows the difference between a "lower" and a "higher" critic? The circulation of his paper has rendered it impossible for anybody to make such an egregious blunder as that.

Our brother thinks that the "Editor of the Advocate needs to travel." His prescription might make more tolerant of worldliness men of the chameleon type, with a cotton string for a backbone, like himself; but no true man with definite and reasoned convictions is influenced by a change of localities. Paul at Athens and Corinth was not a different man from what he was at Jerusalem; he did not when in Rome do as Rome did. It is not recorded that he staged any "DRAMATIC RECITALS" on the Lord's day in the Imperial City of the Cæsars. Why, even if we were to go out to California and journey up and down the Pacific coast, and breathe the moral miasma of that atmosphere, we feel sure that it would not enervate us enough religiously to set us to writing such nebulous deliverances concerning the great moral questions of the day, as the Church has been wasting money to have put in type for the Pacific Methodist Advocate since that journal last had an editor. And if we were to go to the moon and come back, even with the effect that orb is said to have upon the mental machinery of some people, we feel certain that we should never be able to write as contradictorily as Brother Vaughan has done on the Vanderbilt issue during the past four years, or to talk on as many sides of that question as he did at Oklahoma City last May. If travel is what has made our namby-pamby brother what he is, the next General Conference ought to enact a law forbidding any Methodist itinerant, under the certain penalty of being shot with a SIX-CYLINDERED KRUPP CANNON, to stray even so much as a (Jewish) Sabbath Day's journey from his charge. One such mollycoddle is a plenty, and to spare, for the whole of world-wide Methodism.

THE ATONEMENT.

Rev. W. F. Tillett, D.D.

Having shown how and why "the Scripture hath concluded all under sin," we come now to consider how God can be just, and yet the justifier and Savior of a fallen and sinful race. The "atonement" is one of a number of terms used in the Scriptures to represent God's method of saving a lost world by the incarnation, suffering, and death of our Lord Jesus Christ. The word is found but once in the New Testament (Rom. V. 11): "But we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." But the "day of atonement" and the multitudinous typical sacrifices of the Old Testament dispensation accustomed mankind to the idea of atonement for sin, and prepared them to behold in Christ "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world." Other terms employed to represent this doctrine are: reconciliation, meditation, redemption, propitiation, expiation, sacrifice, satisfaction, and vicarious substitution.

The Atonement Defined.—In our Articles of Religion it is stated that "two whole and perfect natures—that is to say, the Godhead and manhood—were joined together in one person, never to be divided: whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for the actual sins of men." His sacrificial death is there further defined as the "perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction for all the sins of the world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin but that alone." In our Ritual it is also said that the Heavenly Father, "of his tender mercy, did give his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, to suffer death upon the cross for our redemption; who made there (by his oblation of himself once offered) a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world." In these statements we have a definition of the doctrine of the atonement which accords with the teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

The Love, Justice, and Wisdom of God Find Equal Expression in the Atonement.—The originating cause of the atonement is the love of God. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his son to be the propitiation for our sins." If we may conceive that, upon the fall of the race, the justice and love of God seemed for a moment to be in conflict—the one demanding that sin should be punished, the other that man should be saved—then did the wisdom of the Triune God provide in the atonement of Christ that which satisfied fully both the justice of the divine Ruler and the love of the Creator and Father. Zaleucus, the Locrian lawgiver and ruler, found it necessary to make a law that those who committed a certain crime should have both eyes put out. It chanced that the first violator of that law was one very near and dear to him. All eyes were turned to the king to see whether justice or love would triumph. The exercise of justice alone would have resulted in the full punishment of the offender; the exercise of love alone would have resulted in setting the law aside and sparing the offender. His wisdom devised a scheme which satisfied both justice and love: he had one of the offender's eyes put out and one of his own. By thus taking part in the suffering himself, he gave a nobler expression to the importance a righteous ruler attaches to a law, than if, in cold blood, he had executed the full penalty upon the offender, and at the same time gave a grander proof of his love for the offender than if he had ignored the law and unconditionally pardoned him. And so, when God, in the Second Person of the Trinity, became incarnate and, "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," "suffers for us, the Just for the unjust," "bearing our sins in his own body on the tree," he gives the noblest proof that infinite wisdom can devise of a justice that must punish all sin and of an infinite love that would save all sinners. At the cross "mercy and truth are met together: righteousness and peace have kissed each other." In defining the atonement, therefore, with reference to the attributes of God, we may say that in the love of the Triune God is found its source, in the justice of the Triune God its necessity, and in the wisdom of the Triune God its method. Love, justice, and wisdom are the divine attributes which are thus made most manifest in the atonement.—From "Personal Salvation."

"We can tell our dear Savior things we would not care to whisper to another, knowing that in the secret of his tabernacle he will hide us. He will understand where others either cannot or will not."

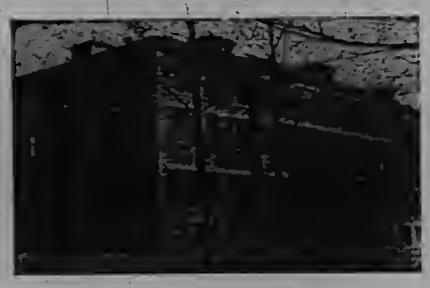
The Louisiana Educational Campaign



LOUISIANA CONFERENCE
BOARD OF EDUCATION

Rev. J. M. Henry, D.D., President

Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Sec'y

Rev. C. A. Battle, Treas., Baton Rouge, La.

(This Department is conducted by Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Secretary of Education, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Publicity Commissioner.)

NOTE.

The new heading of our Educational Campaign department in the Advocate presents, as our friends will recognize, a cut of the Centenary College building on the left and of the Mansfield Female College building on the right. We desire to keep these two institutions constantly prominent in the minds, hearts and prayers of all our people in Louisiana.

A CHURCH COLLEGE IN EACH STATE.

I have recently read the volume giving an account of the activities during the past ten years, of the General Education Board founded by John D. Rockefeller, and have been interested in some of the conclusions at which it has arrived at through careful observation. In reference to the location of a college, I quote as follows:

"State lines have always counted heavily in determining the area of college or university influence. The State line is a formidable barrier."

The great majority of students are educated in their own State, each with its peculiar atmosphere. The Methodist boys and girls of Louisiana, for the most part, are now being educated, and will in the future be educated, in their own State. This is as it should be. I do not believe that any boy or girl is better fitted for life and service in Louisiana by being trained in some other State or section.

If the Church school has a mission to fulfil for Louisiana youth that school or schools must be located in Louisiana. On this ground, the Commission on Education of the M. E. Church, South, in its latest report, declares:

"We would also emphasize the absolute necessity that is now upon the Church to have in each State at least one well-established central college strong enough to battle successfully against the secularizing tendencies in education that today threaten the welfare of the Church and American civilization." (Italics mine.)

Mississippi Methodists knew that they could not secure the results they wished from a college in Louisiana and consequently founded Millsaps College within their own territory. They acted wisely, and if Louisiana Methodists are going to furnish religious education to their youth, it must be through schools established and fostered within their own bounds.

Louisiana Methodists must furnish the college atmosphere in which our young men and women shall hear the call to consecrated service at home or abroad and in which a native ministry shall be equipped. If we lapse into a state of educational dependence upon the church schools of other States, it will mean untold loss of efficiency.

R. H. WYNN.

SUGGESTIVE PLANS.

Every pastor has to solve his own problems, but sometimes a suggestion is well taken. By this time all the ministers in the Louisiana Conference know about how much they are expected to raise in order to relieve Centenary College of its present need. How to raise the amount is another thing. To sit still and hope for the best is about the surest way not to get it. To do a little thinking and a great deal of hustling is about the surest way of having a report worth making.

One pastor suggested that he would like to use a special envelope. In reply to his suggestion, Rev. W. W. Drake has had printed a large number of envelopes with timely suggestions and explanations printed on the outside, to be used by those who want them. If any preacher will write him at once the number he needs they will be sent to him by mail. Another brother, who is to use the envelopes, plans to preach a special sermon on Christian Education and deliver the envelopes to the congregation, and then collect the envelopes in the following week. Still another pastor plans to write a personal letter to his entire contributing membership explaining to them what is needed and why. He will mail out with his letter the envelopes and ask that they be returned the following Sunday. On the Sunday the envelopes are to be collected he plans to present the claims of Centenary College for the benefit of visitors who might contribute.

Still another plan that will be used is the public offering by subscription. The minister who expects to use this plan hopes to get on one day his special offering and his entire assessment for education. All the plans are to be measured by the results. The one thing most needed now is $6000 for Centenary College. Whether it is given by one man, or by 10,000 individuals, the result will be somewhat the same. To this extent the result will be the same—that much money will be spent no matter how it is obtained, so long as the means are honorable. But the big gift by one man should not preclude the small gifts by all. Much money is needed—there is no chance in the world of getting too much money for Centenary College at this time.

A word of exhortation: Brother Drake has the envelopes for every man who will use them. If you can use a hundred, let him know at once and they will be sent to you.

OUR MANSFIELD INDEBTEDNESS.

A part of the bonded indebtedness of Mansfield Female College, which fell due in January, found no money in the treasury of our Board of Education with which to meet it. Loyal friends of the College in Mansfield arranged temporarily for it, but the Board must redeem the credit of the Conference by taking care of this payment at once. In order to meet it the Board has requested that churches which can do so arrange to send in as much of their regular educational assessment as possible, in addition to the Centenary special, by March 15. Some pastors are planning to raise their entire assessment, regular and special, for education at once. Others have funds accumulating through the duplex or other system, and can make a remittance for this purpose. The Church must not default on her obligations.

"SUNDRY THINGS—WEIGHED."

Mr. Editor: When I was a boy preacher I was a member of a "Camping Club." The president of that club was five feet and seven inches tall and weighed 235 pounds. He owned, and occasionally used, a breech-loading rifle. On a certain occasion he found a squirrel in the top of a tall oak. The wind was blowing, making the target a difficult one. He shot fifty-two times at that squirrel without result, save the "bombarding of the universe." Looking longingly in "Bunny's" direction, he said: "By gum, if I had another box of cartridges I'd get you."

Brother Lipscomb spills two and one-half columns of good usable type reviewing my little "Sundry;" then calmly announces (in substance) that he is going for more ammunition. If you can spare a little more space, Mr. Editor, and Brother Lipscomb can procure a little more "ammunition," "he shore will get me." HE EVIDENTLY THOUGHT HE FELT SOMETHING.

Item One.

My "Sundry" was a little "Salmagundi," or potpourri; hence in closing, I said: "I am glad I do not have the making of my appointment. As an addenda I will sign my name. You may print it (the addenda, of course) addendum, if you prefer the singular form." I did not even hint that my name might be signed "in the singular form, Felt, instead of the plural, Felts." I am sure no one other than Brother Lipscomb even thought that I did. It would be just as interesting, and credible, for me to write Brother Lipscomb's name, Lipscum, and insist that he is frothing at the mouth.

Item Two.

I am heartily in sympathy with and in favor of the Correspondence School. More, I shall be pleased if every member of the Class of the Second Year take same. In the meantime, I shall give every member of that class that desires it my part of the examination by correspondence. It can be done just as well that way as at the Conference—BETTER. SOME OF THEM ARE NOT TAKING THE CORRESUONDENCE COURSE. THERE IS NO LAW REQUIRING THEM TO DO SO. The money question does enter in. Brother Lipscomb may never have known the pinch of poverty, hence may fail to appreciate the value of TEN DOLLARS to some men, but some of us know that it often means bread and meat for wife and children.

Further, I have yet to learn that it means to "let down the bars, that in needless ignorance and unpreparedness a man may go forth to his life work," because a member of an examining committee consents to give a correspondence examination to a worthy brother who has not the ten dollars. (There is an "ignorance and unpreparedness" in the rank of the ministry just as appalling as want of lettered attainment.) What is offered one must be granted another. So when this brother asked me to give him the examination by correspondence I promptly offered it to all that desired it.

If I am capable of giving an examination at the seat of the Conference, I am equally capable "in the interim." If I am capable of passing on the work of the Correspondence School I am capable of passing on my own papers. I am not trying to duplicate, avoid, or in any way minify the work of the Correspondence School. I AM TRYING TO HELP THE MAN THAT NEEDS IT. I accept without the slightest mental reservation all that my critic has to say with reference to the school—the need for the best equipment, for careful examinations, and all that. But I do not accept for one moment the idea that the examination I am about ready to give is "irregular." It would be nearer the truth to say that the schools are "irregular"—for in no instance is it required of the committees to accept their work.

Finally.

Brother Lipscomb needs to refresh his mind a little. He might get some mighty good "amunition" by reading paragraphs 538, 539, 731 of the 1914 Discipline. The Church HAS ALREADY DECIDED what course is best—namely, LET THE COMMITTEE BE SATISFIED REGARDLESS OF PREVIOUS TRAINING OR LACK OF TRAINING. Neither Brother Lipscomb nor myself MAY be judge or jury—save as members of committees.

THE LITTLE DOS AND DON'TS.

Pauline Frances Camp.

Two companies of soldiers go
A-marching through the world,
The one, with gay flags streaming out,
The other, banners furled.
Each child must travel with them,
In suits of wills and won'ts;
And march among his comrades,
With the little Dos and Don'ts.

The pleasant things, the helpful things,
The worth-while things, and true;
Are what their pledge requires of Each loyal little Do.
They tread to merry music, and
They're busy as the bees;
And they freshen tired people,
Like a jolly ocean breeze.

The Don'ts do nothing, lazy drones!
They never try to fill
The empty minutes, hours and days;
They've neither strength nor will.
The world must turn without their aid;
For help it spin, they won't!
I hope that you will never be
A useless, idle Don't!

"FOR MOTHER."

The rain beat warm against the outside of the little house, and almost persuaded the bird swinging in his cage that it was spring, instead of winter. At least, he broke into so cheerful a song that Berta looked up from her knitting, and Carl from the little ship he was fitting with sails. The two children had been working silently, an upturned tub serving the one for a seat, and the other for carpenter's bench, but now Berta held up the long stocking that had busied her and viewed it approvingly.

"I am nearly done," she said.

"So am I," answered Carl.

Berta bestowed a careless glance upon the carefully-made, pretty-rigged little vessel, and then looked back at her knitting.

"But mine is real work, useful work, to help our mother," she remarked, "and that toy is only play."

"Maybe—maybe not," replied Carl, briefly. Berta's self-satisfaction was exasperating; she need not be so sure that no one but herself thought of helping the mother, or that no plans but her own were of any use. When the father had gone away to the far country across the sea, the children had talked it over together—that while he was making a new home for them they must help to earn bread in the old one. Berta was doing her best, but Carl thought, with a sigh, that it was easier for big girls to find work than for little boys. When he had tried two or three times and failed, Berta seemed to think he had forgotten.

"The stockings will bring money," said Berta. "I shall sell them at the store and then I shall have something to give mother." She rolled up her work and went indoors, and never once noticed how skillfully the little boat had been made, nor how patiently the boyish fingers had toiled at it: she only wondered how Carl could be content to idle over such things.

The stockings were finished and sold the next day, but, even with the price burning as a delightful secret in her pocket, Berta did not at once tell her mother: she was waiting for Carl to come home. So it was evening and they all were together around the little table when she drew forth her tiny hoard.

"I earned it, with the knitting, for you, mother."

Carl's eyes were shining, his hand was in his pocket; he, too, had a delightful secret and in a moment a second pile of coins lay beside Berta's

"I sold the little ship," explained Carl. One day when I was in the small shop down by the water, where so many things are kept for the sailors, I heard a little boy asking for such a boat. It made me think, and I made one and took it there. The man said he did not have calls enough for such things to pay for it, but he told me of a toy shop where he thought they might want it. They did, and I am to make more for them—as many more as I can make this winter."

The glad mother praised both her children, but Berta's eyes were thoughtful, for that little boat, of which she had been so scornful, had brought more than the stockings. But she was an honest young soul, and when she next wrote one of her painstaking letters to her father, she put under the head of the things she was learning: "Not to be too sure that my work is more important than other people's work."—The Morning Star.

TRIXY.

By Gertrude Winham Fielder.

Once upon a time there was a little dog whose curly coat was white—I mean should have been white, but instead was black, a very dirty black.

One day this little dog pushed open the door of the house where he was living and trotted swiftly down the narrow street, past big, noisy factories. Across the railroad bridge he ran, down one street and up another, then into a pretty shady street, where every house had a green lawn and gay, bright flowers.

But now his short legs were getting tired, so he sat down close to a big iron gate and looked in. Within the beautiful garden was a small boy playing ball: he looked like such a kind small boy that the little dog ventured a low "bow-wow."

The small boy tossed his ball into the air, scampered down the walk, flung wide the gate and gathered the little dog right into his arms. "You dear doggie," he cried, and, with the dog still in his arms, marched straight into the house.

Donald's mamma understood small boys, so instead of saying, "Take that dirty dog away directly," she said, "We will first give him a bath, and then something to eat."

"We will," agreed Donald.

Now you remember I told you that the little dog's coat which looked black should have been white. When he came out of his bath it was white, snow white to the tip of his wavy tail.

"Oh, may I keep him, mamma?" cried Donald.

"I think you may," answered his mother: "His poor little body shows marks of abuse. He was probably stolen, but we will leave that to papa."

Let me say right here that Donald's papa and Donald's good friend, the big policeman, fixed it all right, so that Trixy—for that is what Donald named him—became Donald's very own dog.

Trixy loved Donald so dearly that he allowed him to dress him in a velvet coat and a cap with a feather. Then he would sit up in Donald's high chair, which Donald had out-grown, and wait for his little master to eat his breakfast.

When Donald went to kindergarten, then poor Trixy was very sad. He seemed to know just when it was time for Donald to return home, and would perch on the window-seat, where he could see over the garden wall and far down the street. Then what a welcome Donald would receive!—The Child's Hour.

THEY CAME BACK HOME.

When the war took from Balkan farmers nearly everything they owned, many could never get pay for their losses, and could not find their property after the army had no more use for it.

Two young oxen, Sharon and Jero, were taken from their home farm near Topola in Servia. They were used for pulling cannon to the place of battle. They were strong and did good work in the muddy roads and fields of Thrace. But at the close of the war the cattle were mixed and this pair was given to a peasant whose farm was far from Topola.

One morning the new owner missed them. He followed, inquiring and hearing of them for miles and miles. At last he came up with them at the door of their old home. They had found their way back, but they were so poor and changed that their master did not know them as his lost oxen. They bellowed at the gate and licked the children who came out to look at the strange animals.

But when the gate was opened they went straight to their own stalls and none could doubt that they were really Sharon and Jero. They had come home from the war and were petted and fed as heroes. The peasant gave up his claim when he heard the story, and they were left at their own home.—The Boy's World.

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

NOW IS THE TIME TO HELP.

The Advocate's receipts for the past four months have been largely behind those of the corresponding months of last year. There is a limit to which we can stand such heavy losses, and the situation has already been brought to the attention of the members of the Publishing Committee. Unless there is a change for the better, something will have to be done in the near future. NOW IS THE TIME TO HELP. It will be too late to do so effectively after the finances of the paper have gone to pieces and a reduction in its size has taken place. DO YOU FEEL NO INTEREST IN THIS MATTER? Have you ever considered what the Advocate is worth to the Methodism of Louisiana and Mississippi? The service which it is now rendering the cause of education in Louisiana alone, if calculated on the basis of what the space thus being used would be worth at advertising rates for a year, would amount to between $700 and $1000. And the service given to the other causes has a monetary value of like proportions. Yet this monetary consumption is perhaps the least thing to be considered in summing up the value of the service given to the Church by our paper. No cause undertakes to win its way without an organ, and if the Advocate is not maintained every interest of the Church in this section must suffer an appreciable loss. Help us, brethren, and DO IT NOW!

EVERY INCH A HERO.

The following from the Youth's Companion is so admirable that we desire to pass it on:

"A grocer in southern Ohio, who had taken an active part against the sale of liquor to boys, was recently visited by a delegation of saloonkeepers. After listening patiently to their threats to destroy his business unless he ceased interfering with theirs, he replied: 'You mistake my wares, gentlemen: I sell groceries, not principles.' This answer transformed an humble trader into a moral hero."

Our contemporary is quite right. It is true heroism for a man to stand uncompromisingly by his principles when to do so may mean a temporary loss, and possibly disaster. There are too few such men. But it is gratifying to know that there are some such characters in all the honorable walks of life from the highest to the lowest.

THE STAGE NOT HELPFUL.

Ever and anon we hear of some educator taking the position that college theatricals are necessary in order to give students an intelligent appreciation of Shakespeare and other famous writers of dramas, and some even go so far as to undertake to justify upon the same ground attendance upon the public theater. More than once we have had occasion to combat this notion, and in doing so have pointed out the fact that the men who have given the world the best interpretations of the productions of the great Bard of Avon have not been actors. As confirmatory of this view we take pleasure in reproducing the following extract from an editorial which appeared in the New York Christian Advocate some weeks ago:

"Making full account of the moral value to be derived from the study of Shakespeare, are we to conclude that the theater is the medium by which we may best appreciate his genius? In response we give the opinions of two men widely separated in vocation and circumstance, but practically agreed in sentiment. Years ago Cardinal Gibbons wrote: 'They who have never witnessed Shakespeare's plays performed on the stage are better qualified to judge of the genius of the author and the literary merit of his productions than they who witness the plays amid the environments of stage scenery.' In Charles Lamb's essay on The Tragedies of Shakespeare Considered with Reference to their Fitness for Stage Representation we have an elaborate exposure of the theory that to know the soul of the author we must see his creations acted, from which we extract a few words to indicate the tenor of the whole: 'Lear is essentially impossible to be represented on a stage. But how many dramatic personages are there in Shakespeare, which though more tractable and feasible, if I may so speak, than Lear, yet from some circumstance, some adjunct to their character, are improper to be shown to our bodily eye. Othello for instance. * * * What we see upon a stage is body and bodily action; what we are conscious of in reading is almost exclusively the mind and its movements; and this I think may sufficiently account for the very different sort of delight with which the same play so often affects us in the reading and the seeing.'"

SUGGESTIVE.

The Presbyterian (Philadelphia), which is one of the soundest and most ably edited religious journals in the United States, in a recent issue thus referred to the indiscriminate mixing up of people of supposedly conflicting religious views in Chicago:

"The Chicago atmosphere seems to be especially favorable to dulling the religious senses and creating a disposition of languor and indifference concerning religious malaria. We called attention last week to the mixing of Unitarians and Evangelicals in the 'Educational Congress' in Chicago. We are now informed that in Oak Park, Chicago, a 'Community Training School of Religious Education' has been organized, to give opportunity to parents and teachers for the study of methods in religious instruction and moral training. The members and workers in the school are made up of representatives from the "Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, Baptist and Universalist churches of Oak Park," and from the Chicago University and the Religious Education Association, the Y. M. C. A., Christian Endeavor, etc. Here again is the old mixture of the deniers of Christ and believers in him. What does this mean for Chicago? The liberals must surely find the outside world very cold, for they seem continually trying to get under the Evangelical wing. The Evangelicals had better beware. The poor wet bird may prove to be a weasel."

Some of the so-called Christians of this day are so broad that they seem to be ready to affiliate their work with almost any kind of faith or ism. And some Bible instruction is worse than none, because it tends to poison the mind and to strike at the very fundamentals of Christianity. Our Lord needs, to extend his kingdom on earth, men and women who believe in the revelation that he has given and who stand firmly for the great truths therein unfolded. A compromising Christianity has never been a conquering Christianity, and never will be. A fitting slogan for this age of shifting lines and new alignments is—

"Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death."

MRS. T. H. LIPSCOMB DEAD.

We were greatly shocked last Saturday night when we received a telephone message announcing the death of Sister Lipscomb, the wife of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our pastor at Starkville, Miss. She had been ill for about a week, but we had been informed that she was doing well. Sister Lipscomb was Miss Lutie Scott, of Hollandale, Miss. She and Brother Lipscomb were married about ten years ago. She was gifted, accomplished, and very attractive in every way. We first learned to know her at Friar's Point, Miss., when Brother Lipscomb was our pastor there, after she had been married about a year. She was then beginning to adapt herself splendidly to the difficult position of a Methodist minister's wife, and at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, at Starkville, Miss., when we were her guest, we could not but be impressed with her obvious religious development. But little did we then think that she would so soon go from us to her home in the skies. Sister Lipscomb left five children, one of them being an infant only a few days old. We have no words to express our sympathy for the stricken young husband and the orphaned little ones. We are their fellow-sufferer, and all that we can do is to pray that God may comfort them and have them in his tender keeping. We hope to print in the Advocate at an early day a befitting memoir of the deceased.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. W. Thomas is pleased with the way his work has opened at Summit, Miss. He further adds: "We have just closed a very successful County Sunday School Convention at Fernwood."

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, of West Point, Miss., gave us an additional list of subscriptions from that progressive city last week. The work of the Church is in a good condition in that excellent charge.

Rev. H. R. McKee, of Rose Hill, Miss., reports that he was given a cordial reception in his new charge and that his work is progressing favorably. His people gave his a delightful "pounding" a short time since.

Rev. R. T. Pickett states that the work has begun auspiciously and promises well in the Escatawpa (Miss.) charge. He is preparing to do some campaigning to place the Advocate in the homes of his people.

Our esteemed friend, Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., has brought us under obligations to him for 1 new and 7 renewal subscriptions, which were forwarded on the 13th inst. Brother Howell is one of the best known Methodists in Central Mississippi.

We take off our hat and make our politest bow to Brother F. E. Otts, of Homer, La., who sent us on the 11th inst. 17 subscriptions to the Advocate with a check to correspond. This, if we mistake not, is the largest club of subscribers that we have received since the beginning of the new year.

In a business note to our office, Dr. J. M. Henry, of Ruston, La., says: "We are having great congregations. Our Sunday school also is great. We feel that we have the best place in the Louisiana Conference—the best people, the best presiding elder, the best time, and the best of everything."

Rev. J. H. Grice, of Glancy, Miss., has 55 subscribers to the Advocate in his charge and he is making a faithful effort to secure the renewals of all of them. He ordered the paper to continue to come to 9 of them for another year last week. We appreciate his energetic efforts in behalf of the Conference organ.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sunday School Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, writes as follows: "I have been going day and night this week and could not write the usual news notes. Something is taking place up this way." We are pleased to know that success is attending Brother Gladney's labors.

The interesting article on "The Progress of Methodism in Cuba," which we copied from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate last week, was from the pen of Bishop W. A. Candler. There ought to be some Methodists in our territory to give financial assistance to the needy enterprises described by the Bishop. Read his article again and send him a check.

Rev. J. T. Cunningham, our popular pastor at Greenwood, Miss., has our hearty thanks for 4 new and 5 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate from his progressive charge. Brother Cunningham believes in taking care of all the interests of the Church in the field over which he has supervision.

We are bringing out this issue of the Advocate amid the many interruptions incident to the Mardi Gras season—the bete noire of busy and serious-minded men in the Crescent City.

Among those who have been lending the Advocate a helping hand is Rev. J. B. King, of Vaughan, Miss., who is given to abounding in good works. We appreciate his kindly and efficient assistance.

Rev. W. J. Porter, of Bienville, La., among his many duties, does not forget to press the claims of the Advocate, and as our mailing files will attest, he has success in doing so. His whole heart is in the Master's work.

Fannie J. Crosby, the well-known blind hymn writer, died at her home at Bridgeport, Conn., on Feb. 12, at 95 years of age. She was a Methodist, and is said to have been the most prolific composer of sacred hymns since the time of Charles Wesley and Isaac Watts.

The Annual of the Louisiana Conference for 1914 is on our table. It was edited by Rev. J. F. Foster, of Amite City, La., and was printed in the Advocate office. It deserves to rank with the very best of such publications both in point of arrangement and neatness of appearance.

The Portales Valley News (New Mexico) of Feb. 4 contained a somewhat extended account of a great meeting that had just been held at that place by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss. It was stated that large crowds had attended and that much good had been accomplished.

Rev. W. W Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, occupied the pulpit of the Parker Memorial Church, this city, last Sunday morning. Considering the inclemency of the weather, the congregation was a good one, and the sermon was up to Brother Holmes' usual high standard.

Rev. J. C. Chambers, of Sumrall, Miss., writes as follows: "The District Parsonage Committee has about solved the problem that it has had on hand, by contracting for a most beautiful and desirable piece of property. I am hoping that this action will relieve the Hattiesburg District of the district parsonage debt in the near future."

Miss Belle Bennett and Mrs. R. W. MacDonell have lately spent several days in Louisiana in the interest of our mission work. They visited Houma the latter part of last week and returned to New Orleans to spend the Sabbath. They both delivered addresses at a public meeting held at the First Methodist Church in the afternoon of last Sunday.

Brother and Sister J. R. Abels, of Ponchatoula, La., were in New Orleans on Tuesday, Feb. 9, and paid our office an appreciated call. Brother Abels, who is one of the Advocate's good friends, brought along with him some subscriptions. We were especially pleased to note that Sister Abels' health appeared to be considerably better than it was some months ago.

A charter has been taken out for the establishment of an Old Men's Home at Jackson, Miss., and an organization has been effected to raise the funds necessary for the consummation of this enterprise. Mr. W. G. Francis has been made secretary of this organization and will undertake to raise $50,000 to make possible this contemplated charity. We trust that he will succeed in this work.

Rev. C. P. Moss, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but who recently was transferred to Florida, in a note written on the 15th inst., says: "My appointment has again been changed, and I have had the good fortune to be placed at Green Cave Springs, Fla. Bishop Morrison gave me my assignment yesterday. It is a much more desirable appointment than the one I had in Jacksonville."

A pleasant caller at the Advocate office on Thursday, Feb. 11, was Mrs. R. F. Harrell, of Centerville, Miss. She had been attending the Woman's Annual Meeting of the Mississippi Conference and was passing through New Orleans en route home. She has given us in this issue of the Advocate an exceedingly interesting account of the gathering referred to, which met in Columbia, Miss.

Brother A. J. Green, of Centerville, Miss., in a business note renewing his subscription, adds the following: "I cannot understand why so many of our people refuse to take and read the Advocate and spend Sunday afternoons reading trashy story papers and 25-cent novels. We were very much pleased to have Rev. R. F. Harrell returned as our pastor for another year. He is doing a good work and seems never to tire at it."

The Carrollton Avenue congregation of this city last Friday evening, Feb. 12, gave a reception at the church complimentary to their new pastor, Rev. W. W. Drake, and to the new presiding elder of the New Orleans District, Rev. W. W. Holmes. Addresses of welcome were made by Dr. S. H. Werlein and Mr. C. O. Chalmers. Brothers Drake and Holmes were quite happy in their responses. Mr. J. H. Carter acted as master of ceremonies. The occasion was a most enjoyable one.

Rev. J. H. Felts, of Corinth, Miss., requests us to state that his articles in reply to those which have recently appeared in the Advocate from the pen of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb were written before he knew of Brother Lipscomb's great sorrow. While he believes in the justice of his cause and utterances, he deeply sympathizes with Brother Lipscomb in this hour of grief and regrets that a controversy with him should have occurred at such a time. Brother Felts' second article will appear next week.

We regret to chronicle the death of Mrs. Elnora Caldwell, which occurred at Starkville, Miss., the latter part of last week. Sister Caldwell was one of the older members of our Church in that city and was a woman of most superior character. The Editor numbered her among his most appreciated friends, and feels that her decease is a personal loss. Sister Caldwell left one son, Mr. Joe Caldwell, of Starkville, Miss., whose high character is a worthy monument to his ascended mother. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain him in his great bereavement!

A letter from Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Sherman, Miss., written on February 8, brought us 6 subscriptions from his charge. Referring to his work, Brother Bowlin said: "I am well pleased with the outlook here. My congregations have been good and are growing. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, was with us on Feb. 6 and 7, giving us two most superior sermons and looking well after the business interests of the Church. A liberal assessment was made for ministerial support. I hope to send more subscriptions to the Advocate soon. I feel that I cannot get along without my assistant pastor."

In forwarding a new subscription from his charge, Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Bolton, Miss., appends the following note: "This is my 25th annual appointment in the Mississippi Conference, and the 9th charge to which I have been assigned. This is the first time that my field of work has been west of the Pearl River. This territory is, in a general way, new to me. We were given a very cordial reception on the night of December 22, when we arrived here. These people know how to treat a Methodist preacher and his family. Many good things have been sent to the parsonage, including a Christmas turkey, baked and ready to serve along with the other good things that went to make up our fine Christmas dinner. We are planning for the work and are confidently expecting a good year."

Dr. J. T. Sawyer conducted the funeral of Frank Vincent, aged 16 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Vincent, in Harvey, Jefferson Parish, last Sunday at 11 o'clock a.m. Young Vincent had been accidentally killed by an officer in charge of some prisoners, who, upon being attacked by some wild young men, fired at them and hit the deceased who was passing by at the time. The attendance upon the obsequies at the Vincent home was very large, as Frank was a boy of fine character, very popular, and respected and loved by all who knew him. He was a youth of much promise and his untimely death is a heavy affliction to the members of his family. Twenty-two years ago his parents were married by Dr. Sawyer and he also baptized Frank. The body of the deceased was interred in the Gretna Cemetery.

A BRIEF TRIBUTE.

A dark shadow has fallen across our hearthstone, and under this shadow I write. Our hearts are crushed and bleeding; in sorrow and deep grief we sit, for the Angel Reaper has come and gathered out of our home our precious daughter, Nannie May, and borne her to the home prepared for her by our dear Lord. She left us at 9:50 o'clock on January 10, 1915. She was born on January 23, 1873, the year I joined the itineracy. Had she have lived until the 23d of January, she would have reached her 42d birthday. Her going away is a great loss to us, but we know that it is her eternal gain. We are poorer, but she is richer. We depended so much upon her; she has been our comfort and help all these years. We miss her so much.

There never was a more self-sacrificing daughter than she. Her thought was for others. She gave her life to caring for her parents, and it was a loving service to her. She was a devoted daughter, sister and friend. She carried sunshine wherever she went. None knew her but to love her.

She joined the M. E. Church, South, when but a young girl; she was converted and lived a consistent religious life. She was a bright and happy Christian—so cheerful. No matter where we were sent, she adapted herself to the surroundings, and always enjoyed life.

Nan was a great help to me in my work as a minister. Home is lonely without her. She desired to live as long as we lived, to care for us; but was willing for God to have his way in all things. Her sweet voice is hushed on earth; we shall never again hear her sing beautiful songs here; but by and by we shall see her, and hear her again, for I am sure she has joined the heavenly choir. She heard the heavenly music as she neared the eternal shore. Pointing upward she said, "Mamma don't you hear the beautiful music? do you hear the beautiful winds?"

Heaven is dearer and nearer to us, since she is there. I am sure she will be waiting and watching for us. Our hope is in Christ. I know he doeth all things well. All is for our good; we bow in submission and say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Her father,

T. S. RANDLE.

"THE WILES OF THE DEVIL."

There is a legend of a Sultan who over-slept himself and did not wake in time for his usual prayer-hour. The devil came and wakened him and told him to get up and pray. The Sultan asked who he was. He replied that it did not matter: who he was, and asked whether his action was not a good one. "Yes," said the Sultan, "but I think you are Satan. I know your face, and you must have some bad motive." "But," said the other, "I am not so bad as I am painted. I am a pretty good fellow after all. I was an angel once, and I still keep some of my original goodness." "That's all very well," said the Sultan, "but you are the tempter; that's your business, and I wish to know why you wish me to get up and pray?" "Well," said the devil, impatiently, "if you must know, I will tell you. If you had slept and forgotten your prayers you would have been very sorry for it afterward, and penitent; but if you go on as now, and do not neglect a single prayer for ten years, you will be satisfied with yourself, and it will be worse for you than if you had missed one sometimes and repented of it. God loves your fault mixed with penitence more than your virtue seasoned with pride."—Christian Guardian.

HAS MANY AGENCIES.

Pastor Russell is a man of wonderful resource. The following are some of the names under which he has been, or is now, carrying on his propaganda: The International Bible Students' Association, The Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, Bible and Tract Society, Bible Study Club, People's Pulpit Association, Laymen's Home Missionary Movement, Millennial Dawn, Zion's Watch Tower. How carefully the name "Russell" is kept out of the list! The "pastor" knows only too well that somehow his name is a very poor recommendation to a multitude of people who have taken the trouble to find out who and what the "pastor" really is.—Christian Guardian.

Freckle-Face
Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.
Do you know how easy it is to remove those ugly spots so that no one will call you freckle-face?
Simply get an ounce of othine, double strength, from your druggist, and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of freckles and get a beautiful complexion. The sun and winds of February and March have a strong tendency to bring out freckles, and as a result more othine is sold in these months. Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove the freckles.

On January 17, 1915, in the Sim's Cemetery, near Pulaski, Scott County, Miss., was laid to rest the body of little LEON BUTLER CHESTNUT, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Chestnut. May God's richest blessings abide in and comfort this home, and may this dispensation of Providence be another reminder to us all that God, in his wisdom, does all things well, and that to die as a little child in Christ, even though we should be old, is only to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." J. W. EVANS, Pastor.

SHELBY ALEXANDER WAITES, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Waites, of Sumrall, Miss., died very suddenly on the morning of Jan. 29. He was born on Sept. 29, 1914. He was a most winsome child. He stayed long enough to grip the hearts of loved ones and friends and then God took him. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor in the Methodist Church, which was tastefully arranged for the occasion and thronged with loving friends of the family. He was laid to rest in the city cemetery to await the coming of his Lord and those who loved him. May God tenderly minister to the bereaved ones!
J. C. CHAMBERS.

LYDIA SIBLEY was born on Dec. 22, 1913, and died on Feb. 2, 1915. She was the infant daughter of Mr. C. E. Sibley and Mrs. Cora Sibley. The little body was tenderly laid to rest in the Amite Cemetery, four miles north of Denham Springs, La. The little jewel was only spared to brighten the home a little over a year. Though here only a short while, she left impressions on the minds of loved ones that will never fade away. It was hard to part with her, but Jesus had need of the little gem to add to the many precious jewels he is gathering for his crown and kingdom. Father and mother, do not weep, for we know that she is safe in the arms of the One who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."
W. A. MANGUM.

RAYMOND H. FAIRBANKS was born at Waupun, Fon du Lac County, Wis., on Oct. 17, 1896. He moved to Plainfield, Wis., with his parents in 1902, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when he was 10 years old. He came to Sumrall, Miss., last August, joining the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by letter. His parents, one brother and two sisters, besides numerous other relatives and friends, mourn his death. He died Saturday afternoon, February 6. All that could be done, was done; but God in his divine Providence came for him. He was a most excellent young man. He possessed the religion that could be transplanted and when he came among us he brought it with him and he was loved and appreciated by all. We will miss him in the Sunday school and church services. And the young men who knew him will miss him in their social life. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor; and the host of sorrowing friends attending and the magnificent floral offerings attested the love and esteem in which he was held. May God's richest blessings be with the bereaved ones! J. C. CHAMBERS.

Miss MATTIE CASTLES, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Castles, was born on March 16, 1891, and died on Jan. 19, 1915. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the age of 14. Miss Mattie possessed great strength of character. She loved the Church and was always ready to assist in its work. She was a great lover of music, and had considerable talent for it. She was a teacher in the public schools, taking great interest in the spiritual training of her pupils. She was sick only a few days but suffered greatly, yet was never heard to murmur or complain during the time. She had no fear of death. When they told her that she could not get well, she prayed a fervent prayer for her loved ones and friends, calling many of them by name, and asked the Lord to save all her pupils. Then she sang verses of "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound," "O how I love Jesus," "I'm going home to die no more;" then looking up, she exclaimed, "Glory be to God," and her spirit went home to be with him. She was buried at Fletcher's Chapel, the funeral service being conducted by the writer in the presence of a host of sorrowing friends. We know where we shall find her. Her pastor, J. B. KING.

JOHN WALTER SLOCUM was born on Dec. 4, 1888, and died on Jan. 11, 1915, aged 26 years 1 month and 7 days. He was married to Miss Emma Lee. At the time of his death he was residing with his father-in-law, at Oakdale, La. His remains were buried by the side of his father in Amite Cemetery, four miles north of Denham Springs, La., in Livingston Parish. He joined the Methodist Church, at Black Water Church, while quite young. He held family prayer, and was very much devoted to the Church. Just before he died he called his loved ones to his bedside, and said, "Do not worry about me; all is well. The gates of heaven are wide open for me." He told his loved ones good-by, with the sweet assurance that he had a glorious entrance awaiting him in God's City. This young man made history, which, though it may not be read by many here in this world, will forever endure in heaven. He leaves a wife and one little son, a mother, five brothers, four sisters, four little half brothers and a step-father, to mourn his departure. Their loss is his gain. Loved ones, do not weep, for he is waiting at the gate for you. His mother, formerly Mrs. Chas. Slocum, is now Mrs. A. H. Odom.
W. A. MANGUM.

Mrs. SARAH ISABELLE MOORE WATKINS was born in Kemper County, Miss., on Dec. 18, 1850, and died at her home in Neshoba County on Jan. 28, 1915, aged 64 years 1 month and 10 days. At twelve years of age, she united with the Baptist Church and continued to be a devoted member of that Church until about twenty-three years ago, when she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at North Bend. On October 31, 1867, she was happily married to James M. Watkins. There were born to them three children, one of whom preceded her to the heavenly land. She leaves a devoted husband, two daughters, both of whom are married, and a goodly number of other relatives and friends to mourn her departure. What a blessed thought that we shall meet her again in heaven, where there is no pain nor sorrow, and where there shall be no more parting!

"Let us who are sad take heart again;
We are not alone in our hours of pain.
Our Father stoops from his throne above
To soothe and quiet us with his love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high
And we have safety, for he is nigh.
Can it be trouble which he doeth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord does care."

Sorrowing ones, be of good cheer; it may not be long before you too shall enter in at the crystal gates, to be forever with the loved ones who have gone on before. Remember the words of Job: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be name of the Lord." After the funeral service conducted by the writer, the body was laid to rest in the North Bend Cemetery.
W. D. BARRETT, Pastor.

From the Field.

Eden, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: I reached my work on Jan. 2 and have made my first round of appointments. Notwithstanding the sleet and rain, I preached twice on the fifth Sunday. I have now started on my second round, and find that I have some very fine people to labor with. I am very glad to learn that they desire me to pray in their homes, and in nearly all the homes I have visited they have handed me the Bible without being asked to do so. When I brought my wife and children here, the ladies had prepared a hot supper, a good fire and gave us a liberal pounding; and the good things are yet continuing to come. For all these kindnesses we are very grateful. We are expecting a great spiritual harvest this year. Pray for us.—Aigie Oliver.

Prairie Charge, North Mississippi.

We have been moving on nicely since Conference. No man ever served a people more loyal to their pastor. We are not as much given to "write-ups" as some others, and yet we might often say something with propriety. This is our third year and we know whereof we speak. Our people—church and community—sent to Conference a strong paper urging our return. We have a splendid parsonage home at Strongs, and never know what it means to stand in need of anything our people have. No use itemizing. We have one other church on our charge, Prairie, and if any man ever served a truer people than we have there he has failed to make it clear. For quite a while we have been shut in on account of the weather and road conditions, but just as soon as we can get out it is our purpose to work for an Advocate in every home.—R. M. Evans.

AMORY AND AMORY METHODISM.

Dear Dr. Meek: It has been four and twenty years since I moved to what was then the little village of Amory, Miss. I think at that time it was the most unpromising looking place I ever saw. There were probably 500 or 600 people there. The Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham R. R. Co. had built a round house on the margin of a pond of water which covered a large tract of land. The lake must have been two or three feet deep in some places. The foundations of some of the first business houses were laid in water two feet deep. The first sidewalk I ever saw in Amory was constructed of loose planks, pine poles, and fence rails. In some places when you reached the end of one you had to jump to the end of another and if you missed it you were in water to your ankles. I have seen the time when it would have taken a good team of mules to draw an empty wagon in any of the streets.

At the time of which I am writing Brother J. A. Whitehurst was the preacher in charge of the Southville Circuit. He occasioally came to Amory and preached to a small congregation of Methodist people in the public schoolhouse. It was my privilege to assist in putting up the first Methodist church erected in Amory. I also assisted in building the parsonage.

At our last Conference I was appointed to Buena Vista circuit, about thirty miles west of Amory; and I took the first opportunity offered me to visit my old home town, which has grown into one of the most beautiful little cities in North Mississippi. It now has a population of about 4000, and it has one of the finest electric light and water plants in the State, one of the finest public school buildings in the South, and one of the finest city hall buildings to be found anywhere, while the stores and other business houses are not to be excelled. Its sidewalks of brick and concrete are the best that labor and skill can produce. Its city park, lighted by electricity, is a place of real beauty. Amory's sons and daughters are among the purest and best of Adam's race. The late Sam Jones said that when any set of faithful men and women said a thing must be done, it is going to be did. The town of Amory is a fulfillment of that statement. From its earliest history it has had a class of people who cannot be excelled for faithfulness and determination.

Last, but not least, permit me to say something about the new Methodist church building in this little city, upon which Brother W. M. Young and his faithful flock are just putting the finishing touches. It is one of the most beautiful structures I have ever seen anywhere. If there is a thing a building needs that it does not have I failed to see it. From its basement to its dome, it is as near perfection as anything I ever saw. Brother Young is now serving his fourth year there. He has taken into the Church more than 100, and now has upon the church roll over 365 names. He has always been one of the most untiring workers that I have ever known, often too much so for his physical strength. He seems to remember that the Master's business requires haste. May the lines in future fall to him in pleasant places! I will say that no man could have done a greater work than he has accomplished in Amory. If I were a prophet, or the son of a prophet, I would not hesitate to say that the day of small things in Amory Methodism has gone to return no more. It will soon become one of the the first and strongest appointments in our Conference. I predict that its history will grow brighter and brighter with each succeeding year. There is no such word in the vocabulary of her people as retrench. This has been written without the knowledge or consent of Brother Young or any of his worthy flock. I hope they will pardon me for the liberty I have taken. W. R. WILLIAMS.

Buena Vista, Miss.

A NEW CHURCH AT CLARKSBURG.

It is with pleasure that we can say to the brethren in this issue of the Christian Advocate, that we have begun building a church at Clarksburg, Miss., the foundation of which is being laid. The work is progressing nicely, considering the fact that we are using mostly old material. We will come to the point in a few days, where we will have to buy new material, such as siding, ceiling, shingles, nails, windows, etc. Not being able to raise money enough at this time to meet all our needs, without going in debt, and realizing the need of the Church in this community, we are appealing to the brethren, both preachers and laymen, in fact to all who can and will, to contribute something to the cause of the Master in this community by helping us to erect our house of worship. Any amount from $1 to $5, or over, would be received with pleasure and thankfulness.—J. W. Evans, P. C.

The Sunday School.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL; ADVANTAGES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

Below will be found an article taken from the Youth's Companion. From the reading of this article it is very evident that the school referred to is both graded and uses an adapted literature, both of which have been under discussion for the past few weeks. The article is reproduced principally because it comes from a secular periodical and is therefore a stronger endorsement of modern Sunday school methods than had it been found in a religious journal. We naturally expect religious papers to endorse modern methods in church work, though they may differ widely in adapting those methods to individual churches. But when a secular periodical comes out in strong endorsement, being an impartial critic, we can not but be impressed.

For His Son's Sake.

The greatest surprise of my life, said a certain clergyman, came the day I revisited my first city church and found Geoffry Ransom teaching a Bible Class for young men. I had known him as a brilliant man and a scholar, but a scoffer. He was the leading lawyer in that city and he had hardly recognized my existence during the five years I worked among his clients.

I have sometimes wished I could tell you about it, Geoffry Ransom told me when I spoke to him after Sunday school. One afternoon two years ago my nine-year old son rushed into the library with the question, "Father, what happened at Elim?" I shook my head and continued to read.

"Never mind, father," replied the boy, as he left the room. "I'll ask Tommy Riggs. He'll know."

Ask Tommy Riggs! Did Tommy Riggs, the son of the sexton, know something of which I and my son were ignorant? Where was Elim, any way? I took up a Bible, and when my boy came back I told him that the Israielites once encamped at Elim, and found there twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees.

The expression of delight on that child's face was a study. "Oh, I am so glad!" he cried. "Wasn't God good to lead them to a place like that? Tommy won't get ahead of me on that. He knows a lot, for his mother helps him every Sunday afternoon."

That was too much for me. My son trying to keep pace with Tommy Riggs and his mother! Five minutes later the child was encamped by my side with Bible, lesson paper, scissors, and even a tube of library paste for there were pictures to be pasted in that cherished paper of his. We worked for an hour that afternoon—and we've been studying together ever since.

Less than a year ago Mr. Morton, your successor, called at the house, and my son gave him a glowing account of his "Sunday afternoons with father." Mr. Morton called at my office and told me that my presence was needed at all the services of the Church. Without giving me time to find any excuse, he repeated my son's flattering description of his father. We both laughed, but he had won his point. For the sake of my son I went regularly to Church and Sunday school, and six months later I joined the Church. When the teacher of the Bible class left the city I was chosen to take his place because of my rather extensive knowledge of the Bible My son was a thorough instructor.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Field Secretary is now working in the Seashore District. At this writing we are at Picayune, Miss. I first held an institute at Hub with Bro. S. E. Flurry, and I also went to East Columbia on last Sunday and organized a Sunday school with 34 pupils, including a class of old people. We had great success with the work in the Hub charge.

The next place visited was Carrier, and we had a splendid institute there for two days and nights. From there I went to Nicholson and Picayune, success attending our efforts at each place. To-day finds me on my way to Logtown.

The Field Secretary would be very glad to get in touch with every pastor serving churches without Sunday schools. We want a Sunday school in every church in the Conference, and we can have it if we will only try. Let me help you. Did you ever think of the great number of children in homes where God's Word is never mentioned and his name used only to profane. If these boys and girls are not taught, touched, and led to Jesus by way of the Sunday school will they ever learn of our Lord Jesus? What can we do about it? Why not organize a Sunday school and get them on the right road?

Teachers, as you talk to your pupils about God, be sure to talk to God about your pupils—not as a class, but as individual boys and girls. Never be satisfied until every one in your class has accepted Jesus. That is your work. If you do not see this as your AIM, ask Jesus to open your eyes that you may see clearly.

My dear teacher, really how much of the Bible do you teach your pupils? Do you teach them the Bible or the Quarterly? Do you study with them your Bible or the Quarterly? If you take the Quarterly instead of the Bible as the text, why, you are just giving them Bible knowledge in broken doses, and as a result they will quit Sunday school when they reach the teens. "Think on these things."

IF EACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS.

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

India, with one possible exception, is the hardest mission field in the world, but even India is becoming, slowly, but surely, Christian. The government census tells the tale. During the last ten years, while the population increased 21 per cent, Protestant native Christians increased more than 62½ per cent.

MY WINTER REPORT.

Dear Advocate: I have attempted at different times to send a few notes for your columns, but from different causes have failed to do so. I am much more hale at this season than in warm weather, yet owing to rapid changes from wet to cold and from cold to wet, I have been almost a "shut-in." I have attended two of Brother H. B. Perritt's services, at Standard, about two miles distant, and was delightfully entertained. He does not "hem and haw," nor trip, nor stumble, but like a circular saw in a pine log, he goes through with a vim, and he says something as he goes. Selma, however, called for all of his time, and he and his better half left us and are back at Selma. Brother E. G. Wood is here in his place. I have not seen much of him yet, and cannot say what kind of "wood" he is, but feel safe in concluding that he is not green wood.

I have preached none since December, yet at our Sunday night prayer meetings I take part in the voluntary discussions, when I am there, and enjoy them very much. Some of my ministerial neighbors have me to fill appointments for them, except in the winter. I am casting about now for at least two regular appointments.

To-day, Feb. 11, the sky looks soft and the birds sing feebly, and the frogs croak doubtfully. We have talked about our hens behind their backs, and to-day wife came in and said that "old spec" came from under the woodpile cackling, and on examination she found a heap of eggs. We have had no eggs nor vegetables to sell through the whole fall and winter; neither have I sold a half-dozen books in months past. "No money is the cry;" yes, the financial pressure is felt generally. Our Advocate, some of our pastors, the superannuates, and many families are in great straits. My source of comfort is that God is rich and I am his child. Bless his holy Name.

FINE REVIVAL AT SUMRALL, MISS.

A remarkably successful revival, under the direction of Rev. J. C. Chambers, the pastor, and Rev. Dan E. Kelly, one of the Conference Evangelists of the Mississippi Conference has lately been held at Sumrall. Miss. Referring to this meeting while it was going on, The Sumrall Progress among other things, said:

"There has never been more interest shown in the saving of souls in this community than is now being manifested. A daily prayer service is held at the Sumrall Bank, and these services are being well attended by our business men and men of affairs. It seems that the power of the Holy Spirit has visited this town and made business only a secondary issue. Stores are being closed up that the men may attend the prayer service [illegible] and the afternoon service at the church. But it is at the night services that the greatest interest is manifested. People who cannot attend in the day time are going out to the night services by the hundreds. The great evangelist has made a wonderful impression upon the people of Sumrall. * * * Dan E. Kelly is a man among men not loving the honors of this world, nor its glories, but preferring to be only an humble worker of the Lord in the harvesting of souls. Quite a number have declared that they will live a better life. Every night men and women are standing up and pledging allegiance to the crucified Son of God and promising to live closer to him. Cold winds, and rain and sleet have not checked the revival. * * * When Dan Kelly goes to meet his next engagement at Newport, Tenn., he will be followed by the prayers of all the Christians in Sumrall, who hope that he will live for many long years filled with the same fiery zeal that now permeates his being."

In a note to the Editor, Brother Chambers gave the results of the meeting, as follows: "80 persons united with the Church—49 coming to us and the Baptist Church receiving 11. A free-will offering amounting to $195 was presented to Brother Kelly. This was his third meeting here, and we want him again."

NOTICE OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will he held at Corinth, March 25-29. Itta Bena concurs in the selection of another meeting place, as they found it impossible to entertain us before June. They had no delegate at Aberdeen last June, consequently when their invitation was extended and accepted they did not know of the decision to hold meetings early in the spring in the future.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference met for its fourth annual session in the Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., Feb. 5-9, 1915.

The selection of this little city as the place of meeting was a most fitting one, Columbia being a progressive and attractive town, and its people noted for their abounding hospitality. It was a pleasure to meet in their beautiful new church, the interior of which is finished with exquisite taste; and the splendid music which had been prepared, the lovely flowers that were brought from time to time for our enjoyment, testified to the loving thoughts and plans of these people for making this meeting one redolent with charming and lasting memories.

On Friday afternoon the Workers' Conference presided over by Mrs. Hnme R. Steele, our Educational Secretary from Nashville, was one of the most helpful and inspiring meetings held. At night a prayer and praise service was held, and Rev. M. B. Sharbrough delivered the annual sermon from the text, "She Hath Done What She Could." Mark 14:8. It was a strong, earnest message.

Saturday morning a praise and testimony service was conducted by the president, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, which was followed by the communion service. After this holy and sacred service, the women felt prepared to enter upon the business part of the Master's work. The Saturday afternoon session was given over to the children's work, and to the presentation of Social Service by Mrs. J. L. Green, of the Children's Home Society of Jackson. Mrs. T. B. Clifford, who has had charge of the children for many years, conducted the devotional service, after which an enjoyable and instructive program was rendered by the children of Columbia. It showed that much thought and careful preparation had been given to the numbers selected.

The Saturday evening service was one long to be remembered. After the devotional exercises, and some very sweet music rendered by the choir, the two visiting deaconesses, Miss Tinsley, of Meridian and Miss Hasler, of Biloxi, presented their work. Miss Tinsley we had heard before and knew something of what was in store for us. Miss Hasler is a new worker, having graduated last spring. Miss Tinsley gave a brief resume of the work at Meridian, and Miss Hasler told in a very attractive, animated manner of her experiences with the children at the Biloxi Wesley House and with the mothers working in the shrimp and oyster camps in the vicinity. These women spoke in such an earnest way of the beautiful work being done that they caused their hearers to realize the great importance of the work, and the gracious manner in which God deals with these children of his who are carrying the gospel of light and love into the hearts and homes of those who know him not.

The Sunday morning service was one of peculiar beauty and solemnity. Mrs. Hume Steele gave a strong, earnest address, presenting briefly the problems of the immigrant and of our large cities; then taking up our work in the foreign fields, she dwelt upon our great responsibility to these, our brothers, and urged us to be true to our trust. It was a masterly address, and carried a powerful incentive to higher service in this branch of the Master's work.

The children's service on Sunday afternoon was truly inspiring. Misses Tinsley and Hasler, and Miss Hallie Buie, of Korea, spoke of their work among the children in their respective fields of labor. It was a treat to the children to hear Miss Buie as she described some of the customs and manners of the Korean children. She had curios and costumes from her adopted land, all of which added to the enjoyment of the hour.

Sunday night Miss Buie spoke to a crowded house. Her address was replete with personal experiences and vivid portrayals of many characteristic customs of the country. One custom among the Korean Christians sent a ripple of mirth over the entire audience. When a Korean Christian marries, our missionaries try to introduce some of our customs, as the wedding march, etc., but the Korean loves to sing, and frequently insists upon one of our hymns being sung—their favorite on such occasions being "Onward Christian Soldier Marching as to War." Miss Buie also told much about the personal work of the Korean Christians, the young as well as old, never losing an opportunity to tell others of the "Jesus religion." It made us feel like hiding our heads in shame. Many lessons could be learned from these consecrated Koreans, but the greatest, perhaps, is to always and everywhere "stand up for Jesus."

Monday was devoted to reports from the home and foreign department treasurers and secretaries. The work done by corresponding secretaries showed some growth. The reports of the two treasurers were good, but neither pledge was paid in full. In the home department, $1456 had been paid on the pledge of $1500; and in the foreign department $3030 had been paid on the pledge of $3500.

Before the election of officers the following resolution was presented and carried:

Whereas, In our Church we emphasize the itinerant system, and whereas in our work one of our largest opportunities is the development of our women, therefore be it resolved:

That all officers shall be elected for one year and that no woman shall be elected for more than four consecutive years. This resolution to take effect with the elections of the 1915 session.

The following officers were elected for the year:

President, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Gulfport; First Vice President, Mrs. H. O. Middleton, Mendenhall; Second Vice President, Miss Irma Weems, Shubuta; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Crystal Springs; Treasurer, Mrs. John T. Sharp, Canton; Superintendent Mission Study and Publicity, Mrs. J. F. Neill, Laurel; Superintendent Social Service, Mrs. W. W. Moore, Pascagoula; Recording Secretary, Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, Hazlehurst; Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. K. T. Moore, Hattiesburg.

District Secretaries.

Brookhaven District, Mrs. W. H. LaPrade, Hazlehurst; Hattiesburg District, Mrs. W. R. Rawls, Silver Creek; Jackson District, Mrs. Sam Ewing, Jackson; Meridian District, Mrs. C. R. McQueen, Meridian; Newton District, Mrs. J. C. Clark, Laurel; Port Gibson District, Mrs. Otis Wilson, Natchez; Sea Shore District, Mrs. Tom Ford, Columbia.

The delegates instructed their Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, to pledge to the Council $5500 for the extension of the work during the present year.

The place of meeting was left to the Executive Committee.

The closing session was held Tuesday night, and the special feature of this session was the presentation, through Mrs. La Prade, of half a dozen iced-tea spoons as a token of love and appreciation to Mrs. T. B. Clifford who has labored faithfully for so many years in our midst, but who has recently moved to another Conference. The following resolutions were also passed:

Whereas our sister, Mrs. T. B. Clifford, in removing from our State gives up her work in our Missionary Society, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we thoroughly appreciate her splendid work in the department of the Children's Work.

2. That we express the earnest wish that it may not be many months before she will come back to our Conference, and meanwhile we pledge her our love and uninterrupted interest in everything that concerns her.

3. That we commend her and her faithful work to the Missionary Society in every place where she may live.

Signed: Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Mrs. W. H. La Prade, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, Mrs. J. K. Dunn, Mrs. T. B. Holloman, Mrs. C. R. McQueen.

CALOMEL DYNAMITES YOUR LIVER! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and You Don't Lose a Day's Work

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working; headache and dizziness gone; stomach will be sweet and bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and can not salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of Calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sister Elizabeth Robinson was born on Nov. 13, 1836, and departed this life on Jan. 31, 1915. She was the daughter of John and Nancy Stephens. She was born in Prentiss County, eight miles east of Booneville, Miss. She was married first to Washington Pinkney Young, on Sept. 9, 1854. Of this union were born four children—three sons and one daughter. One child died while young; the others, are Rev. W. M. Young of the North Mississippi Conference, and J. W. Young, and Mrs. Annie Robinson of Decatur, Tex. Her second marriage was to Mr. B. F. Robinson in the year 1865, in Tishomingo County, Miss. Of this union were born five children—two sons and three daughters. Only two daughters of her second marriage are yet living—Mrs. C. W. White and Mrs. Lev Timbs. She leaves five children and twenty-seven grandchildren to mourn their loss. It has been my good fortune to be the pastor of Sister Robinson twice: first in 1897-98 and again in 1914-1915. I can conscientiously say I never came in touch with a purer character than Sister Robinson. She was as gentle as a lamb—so kind and true that no one could come in touch with the life of this good woman without being made better. When God wants a great work done he prepares a great woman to rear a great man. Sister Robinson's children are all great; our own dear Brother W. M. Young is a sample. I witnessed the conversion of some of her grandchildren last summer and received some of them into our Church. Sister Robinson passed away as peacefully as any one ever passed away. She just simply fell asleep in Jesus. She called all the children one by one, and talked to them, and requested that they meet her in heaven. I will close by saying that home is not home without her care and heaven—we know she will be there. Then let us while we love each other remember, children, and be kind to mother. That God may bless her children and grandchildren, is my prayer.

We laid her body to rest to await the resurrection morn in the New Lebanon Cemetery in the northeast corner of Prentiss County, Miss., in the presence of a host of friends. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, Brother W. M. Young, two of his sisters and a number of grandchildren being present.

ISAAC M. APPLEWHITE.

On July 14, 1912, the town of Bassfield, Miss., together with a host of people elsewhere, was shocked to learn of the death at his residence in Bassfield of Brother ISAAC M. APPLEWHITE. Just a little over two years later, on October 29, 1911, Sister Servntha Applewhite, his beloved companion for nearly fifty-eight years before his death, passed away in Bassfield. Brother Applewhite was born in Carroll County, Miss., on July 26, 1833. Sister Applewhite was born in Covington County, Miss., Dec. 13, 1838. They were married in Covington County near old Santee Church in the home of her father, Mr. Loflin, a prominent man of that county. One child was born to them, Dr. W. W. Applewhite, a prominent physician of Bassfield, who was a great comfort to them. Both were life-long members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and spent the most of that time as members of old Santee Church. Brother Applewhite held office as a steward or trustee in the Methodist Church practically all his mature life, probably fifty or sixty years. Brother and Sister Applewhite were noted far and wide for their unswerving loyalty to the Methodist Church and its doctrines, as well as its preachers and other representatives. No preacher found more cordial welcome in any home than in theirs. No person, whether preacher or layman, ever went out of their home without being blessed with a realization that he had been in a home where Christ dwelt. No preacher was ever allowed to leave the home without first having prayer with the family. Many preachers can attest to the splendid liberality of these two saints, and can also testify to the fact that they paid to the cause rather than to the individual. Everybody who knew them had the utmost faith in their Christianity. No two purer people ever lived. They belonged to the shouting class of Methodists, of whom there are unhappily so few to-day. Uncle Ike's voice has often been heard shouting aloud the praises of God in old Santee Church. The writer had the privilege of being their pastor for eight years, having served two quadrenniums on that circuit, and he numbered them with his very best friends and most loyal and liberal supporters. By the passing of Brother and Sister Applewhite, the Methodist Church at Bassfield has suffered a great loss, but theirs has been the gain. They left a son and daughter-in-law and grandchildren who, we feel sure, will never allow their father and mother's Church to be forsaken. And we firmly believe that the home of the son, Dr. Will Applewhite, will be the home of the Methodist preacher, as was the case for a half century with his father. We cannot close this memoir without asking God's blessings upon this son, and his wife, Sister Lou Applewhite, who is so closely connected with Methodism, and who is so loyal to her Church, and upon their children, trusting that they all some day will be an unbroken family in heaven.

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule contain a large quantity of plain syrup. A pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes, gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

COMB SAGE TEA IN LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look young! Common garden Sage and Sulphur darkens so naturally nobody can tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

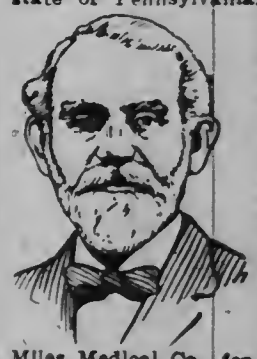
Business Man Praises Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

Successful Merchant After Investigation Found a Remedy That Restored His Health.



"This is Thanksgiving day in the state of Pennsylvania, and I want to devote a part of it in writing a letter to you. On the 26th day of November, '10, I was stricken with heart trouble. My family physician called it Angina Pectoris. I had from one to five attacks in 24 hours, in the latter part of December, 1910. I wrote to the Miles Medical Co., for information concerning my case, and in reply I received a very kind and instructive letter, which I handed to my family doctor, and he told me to use your Remedies in connection with the medicine he gave me, so I did. I used five bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and seven bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I was confined to the house for about four months. The action of my heart is now, and has been normal for the last six months. I can truly recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine and Heart Remedy to do what they are intended for, if used according to directions. I thank you kindly for your advice in answer to my monthly reports. I am now sixty-seven years of age, have been in the mercantile business for thirty-five years and lived retired for the last thirteen years."

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

Preachers' and Lay-leaders' Conference.

The Preachers' and Lay-leaders' Conference of the Brookhaven District met in the auditorium of the Brookhaven Methodist Church, on Thursday, Jan. 26, 1915, Rev. Robt. Selby presiding.

The Conference opened with prayer by Dr. I. L. Peeples. Other devotional services were conducted by Brother Selby.

All the preachers but three and many laymen of the District were present, and each one heartily entered into the day's work. Presiding Elder Selby called the special attention of the Conference to the fact that we were there to discuss the problems and needs of the district and to find some solution of these.

The program that had been previously arranged for the Conference was then taken up.

Rev. B. F. Lewis addressed the body on, "What the Sunday School Ought To Do and Can Do." The speaker stressed organized, systematic Sunday school work.

Brother P. H. Enochs, of Fernwood, spoke on "Financing the Church." He emphasized the every-member canvass and the importance of tithing. Brother Enochs stated that he had always regarded tithing as a law of God and that he did not think God would prosper those who withheld that which was his. The speaker pleaded for getting each church in the district to endeavor to pay at least its assessment, calling attention to the great need in the home and foreign mission fields, and to the fact that contributions from Europe will be small this year, and that the distress of those whom we may help ought to stir us to do our best. The very practical words of this consecrated layman were appreciated by all.

Rev. G. H. Galloway addressed the Conference on, "Missions," in which address he insisted on a missionary revival in every charge.

The Conference was then addressed by Rev. Robt. Selby on, "District Evangelism." The speaker made a strong appeal for a thorough revival in the Lord's work and an awakening of the Church to the importance of its doctrines. He emphasized the necessity of being loyal to the Church, and made a forceful argument in favor of pastoral evangelism.

Besides these addresses, many instructive and helpful talks were made by other brethren.

The chair appointed the following committees: District Evangelism—Rev. J. M. Morse, B. F. Lewis, W. H. Saunders, G. H. Galloway, and J. A. Moore. Finance—P. H. Enochs, V. B. Youngblood, J. B. Alford, J. H. Grice, and W. D. Davis. These committees made reports to the Conference, which were unanimously accepted.

The Conference, led by Rev. W. H. Saunders, prayed the Heavenly Father to aid the Brookhaven District in doing its whole duty during the year 1915.

The things to be striven for this year were presented by Brother Selby and adopted, viz.:

1. Full collections on all assessments.
2. Special in every church.
3. Insist upon early collections.
4. Every-member canvass.
5. Great emphasis on comprehensive policy in Sunday school.
6. Definite and aggressive plan of evangelism.

A note of optimism rang through the whole day's work and the Conference adjourned, looking forward to greater success and victory, through the power of Him whom we serve.

W. N. THOMAS, Sec'y.

NOTE FROM RALEIGH, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our good Bishop read us out for Raleigh this time, a place where we had rather be than any place this side of heaven, because our loving heavenly Father has sent us here. Our little daughter, Minnie Lee, was taken very ill with pneumonia the week that our Conference closed, which delayed our moving for several weeks. We have a fine people on the Raleigh charge, as some of my brother pastors know. The good ladies had everything in readiness at the parsonage before my family came, and the day that I was bringing my family over they prepared a nice dinner for us and filled our pantry besides. But, on account of our daughter being wearied by her trip from Star to Mize, we stopped, for dinner, with Brother Clark at Mize. The ladies, however, remained at the parsonage until our arrival, which was about 4 p. m. Of course, we were too late for dinner at the parsonage that day, but what they had fixed was fine for supper, and then we ate of it for breakfast and dinner and supper the next day, and so on for most a week. Then Brother Daniel Kelly drove up with a wagon load of corn, and fodder shocked on top of that. Next came a nice lot of sweet potatoes from Brother J. M. Martin; and butter and milk continues to come in from the different homes, and our hearts go up to the blessed Lord with thanksgiving for such a noble people, and our prayer is that each of them may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our blessed Lord. The prayer meeting at Raleigh is growing in size and interest at every service. The house was nearly full last Wednesday night. Since we came our Baptist people have organized a Sunday school, and prayer meeting, too—something that they had not had for quite a while. We are in urgent need of a great revival over the entire charge, and we must have it. I want every one who may chance to read these lines to offer up an earnest prayer to God for this. May God bless you and the dear old Advocate.

THE FORGOTTEN WATERPOT.

Nearly four thousand years ago Jacob dug a well in the valley of Shechem. Two thousand years later Jesus came through the same valley, and, being wearied with his journey, sat on the ancient well. And there, after the custom of the east, a woman came to draw. And there she had a wonderful conversation with the stranger. And when the conversation was ended, "The woman then left her waterpot and went her way into the city."

But the forgotten waterpot should be remembered, its dry throat should be given a tongue, and it should be made to speak.

It tells us first that Jesus seeks men in their everyday life. He sought the woman of Samaria as she went about her daily tasks. He seeks men now in their homes, in the marts of trade, and in the halls of State.

So should his followers seek men. For men will listen to the gospel, not only in the soft light of stained glass windows, but also in the glare of the sun, where they toil six days in the week. You find fault with the servant in your home and sometimes laugh at her ignorance. But do you ever really try to help her? That man who works by your side—have you ever talked with him about One who once worked in a carpentry shop? That young man who is employed in your office—have you ever tried to put something into him, as you try to get all you can out of him during his working hours? That friend of yours who never goes to church—do you ever ask him to go? Have you visited the stranger who has moved into your neighborhood and asked him to worship with you? How many people do you suppose you could bring to church with you on Sunday if you would really do some work during the week? And could you not bring some one to Christ if you would really try?

And the waterpot tells us that Jesus does not seek men in the everyday life to call them away from it; for the waterpot is a good and useful thing. In the round of her daily duties, the woman of Samaria came to the well to draw. So men and women go about their various tasks today. The housekeeper still comes, as it were, to the well to draw—still goes about her domestic cares. The lawyer goes to his office, the merchant to the store, the farmer to the field, the engineer to the cab, the watchman to the crossing. This is right. God expects us to be diligent and successful in our business. But we are not to place it above anything else. We are not to seek its rewards first.

There is nothing wrong with the waterpot. Though a vessel of clay, it is fashioned to hold the crystal waters "that flow from the wells of God, or spring from cedared hills." It is good when rightly used. But we must not make it, a thing of clay, to be an idol. We must seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. We must get an idea of relative value in life. Success, prosperity in earthly things, daily bread—these things are to be desired. But they should not be our chief concern.

How many stewards succeed in their own business, and fail miserably in the business of the church. It is because they are so engrossed in their own business that they are not willing to give sufficient time to the work of the kingdom. Neither do they bring to the problems of the Church the same business judgment and practical methods which have brought them success in their own affairs.

How many men have lost their own souls because they have become so engrossed in legitimate temporal things that they have forgotten eternal things?

How many have lost their own souls because they engaged in legitimate things with no right motive? How many labor to gratify their own selfishness, not for God and their fellows? To them a thing of clay is an idol. The world thinks it has had its last say about a minister of the gospel, when it can say, "He is preaching for money," that he is in a high ministry with no high mission. If he is preaching for money, he is unworthy. He is also very foolish, for he could make more than the average salary of a minister in this country, as a hod carrier. But suppose he is preaching for money. is he any worse than you, if you are teaching for money, if you are buying and selling for money, if you are pleading before the bar of justice for money, if you are living for self alone?

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness." For, after all, the water-pot is only a vessel of clay. It will perish with the using. Some day it will crumble and mix again with the unfashioned clay of the earth. It may be formed to hold the purest water that ever came from a sparkling spring to cool the dry lips of a thirsty potter in the clay. But that water is only oxygen and hydrogen, represented by the chemical symbols, H^2O. Pass an electric current through a double tube containing water and the water will be resolved into its elements. The two parts of hydrogen will take possession of one part of the tube, and the one part of oxygen the other. It is of the earth, earthy; unstable as Reuben, it is a passing thing. Whosoever drinketh of it shall thirst again. But whosoever drinketh of the living water shall never thirst nor come to the well of Jacob to draw.

When the woman of Samaria came to believe on Jesus as the long-promised Messiah, "she left her waterpot and went her way into the city." And it stood there, alone, empty, unfilled, mute evidence of the power of One, sitting near, to cast out selfishness and uncharity, to give men the right estimate of a thing of clay.

"The woman then left her waterpot and went her way into the city." But that did not mean that it was to be left there forever. It was to be taken up again and filled with water. But it did mean that the woman of Samaria had learned to give a vessel of clay its proper place. Henceforth she was to seek first the Kingdom of God. and his righteousness. The woman did not cast the waterpot down as a thing of evil. She did not fling it from her as a fiery serpent. Though a vessel of clay, it had its proper place. She put it down because she had learned the proper place for a vessel of clay. She put it down empty, because at that time she had something more important to do than drawing water from Jacob's well. She put it down that she might tell others of Christ. She became at once a flaming evangel of the gospel, and in her simple way and in her simple speech she brought many to the Master before that day's sun had set.

Learn to give a vessel of clay its proper and useful place. Require not the ant for your correction and instruction. But never be selfish and unwise in your business, in earthly things. Knowing that this is only a vessel of clay which you bring to the wells along the road of life, and knowing that this is only a tabernacle of clay in which you dwell for a season, live first for the immortal spirit, seek first the kingdom of God.

NOT ALL ACROSS THE SEAS.

A fellow-editor indulges in the following lamentation: "It is said that there are millions of people in the Russian Empire who have no knowledge of the New Testament." Our confrere need not go across the seas to find such persons; there are not a few of them beneath our own starry flag. As an illustration of this, we will relate an incident that occurred some months ago in a courtroom in a college town not a thousand miles from New Orleans. A distinguished lawyer, who is a steward and Sunday school superintendent in the Methodist Church, in arguing a case inadvertently referred to Peter as having "betrayed" Christ; when the opposing counsel took up the case, he arraigned him terrifically for his ignorance of the Bible, and finally reached a climax in the following impassioned outburst of eloquence: "The idea of a man living in this enlightened twentieth century and being a member of the Methodist Church, and a steward, and a Sunday school superintendent, and not knowing that Christ was betrayed by SAUL OF TARSUS." Hard as it may be to believe, this was an actual occurrence.

SHOULD BE A FORCE.

The Church should not be a pastor's field, but his force. His field should be the unsaved portion of the community in which he lives. But, strange to say, there are some church members who think that a minister ought to spend all his time nursing them.

INNOVATIONS NOT NEEDED.

Follow our order of service. There is no need for you to stand and pray when collectors come to the front with the plates. It is not in the order of service. I saw a preacher a while back stand and pray five minutes over baskets that contained sixteen pennies. It is no part of our service.—Bishop McCoy, at West Texas Conference.

OUR MARCHING ORDERS.

"Go ye into all the world," the Savior said
"And teach all nations." Years have rolled away
Since first that word went forth, yet slow the tread
Of the ambassadors of Christ. We pray,
"Thy kingdom come," but pray in words, not deeds,
And still the waiting world its Savior needs.

"Go into all the world." The field is great.
In which no seed of truth has yet been sown;
God's people sit at ease and idly wait,
Heedless of those who in their anguish groan,
And, groping, lose their way in heathen night,
Because we do not send the gospel light.

"Go into all the world." Lord grant that we May hear thy voice and, hastening to obey,
May spread the truth that makes thy people free,
And bring the coming of that glorious day
When all the world shall gather at thy feet,
And with glad songs the world's Redeemer greet."

EFFICIENCY IN PRAYER.

Our prayer output often may be doubled without increasing the time given to prayer. A missionary whose practice of prayer is a continual inspiration and incentive to his friends recently prayed for greater efficiency in prayer. "Not efficiency that is measured by the hours spent in prayer," he said, "nor by the number of objects of prayer, but by real prayer-efficiency that gets into the very presence of God and lays hold on him for the things that he would have us pray for." There are few Christians, probably who could not well add many minutes to their regular daily prayer periods. But in this day when elimination is made such a factor in business efficiency it is well to remember that elimination may help in prayer, and that, whatever the prayer time, its output may be increased. For God can tell us—and he will—what things to leave out of our prayers and what things to claim from him in prayer with the assurance of an answer.—Sunday School Times.

THE OLD "HOME CHURCH."

By Frederick W. Ritzman.

The old "home church," with its charm of recollections associated with childhood, youth and young manhood and womanhood! You remember the very pews of the dear old friends, neighbors and relatives, their favorite and accustomed attitudes of attention and worship, their little characteristics of speech and song; their likes and dislikes in church matters. You can not forget the singing, the preaching, the midweek and young folks' meetings, the social activities, the choir and its manifold difficulties and its occasional defeats—all these things remain with you because they associate themselves in your memory with the old "home church" of your youth where your life received some of its religious impetus, where much of the best that is in you had its birth, where you heard and answered the call to the consecration of your life, the old "home church" that you occasionally are and always will be just a little "home-sick" for.

But how about the "home church" of your boy and girl? Are you so ordering your family affairs that you are providing for your children an opportunity to become acquainted with and benefited by a "home church?" You would not part with your memories for anything. Do you not feel that some such memories ought to remain living in your children's minds when they are grown?

Parents, unless you begin now to cultivate the religious side of life in your family circle; unless you take your children by the hand and come with them into the Church's circle of activities; unless you join your young men and women to the social activities of church life now—the hour of this opportunity will swiftly depart to return no more. You will miss the chance of enriching these young lives which mean so much to you in exactly that measure in which you fail to join with them in some church life just as the "dear old folks" once joined with you.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

CENTENARY AND OUR BOYS.

By Dr. John T. Sawyer.

Some years ago I was delighted to find in my morning paper a most interesting account of Centenary College, in which honorable mention was made of a number of men who were once students there and who in after years had risen to distinction and eminence in State and Church, adding bright laurels to the fame of their Alma Mater and standing forth as examples to all who might seek at our time-honored institution of learning a thorough preparation for useful and noble living. Among the names found upon the long roll of Centenary students there was once the name of Jefferson Davis, the first and only President of our Southern Republic—a man of commanding abilities, the highest character, the loftiest patriotism, of unswerving fidelity, and a spotless record; the name of Judah P. Benjamin, United States Senator and afterwards in the Cabinet of Davis, a man the strength and fibre of whose intellect put him easily in the forefront, a master of civil and common laws, none being his superior at the bar of Louisiana or at the English bar; the name of the silver-tongued E. John Ellis, who whether on the hustings or in the courts or in the National Legislative halls, was ever the eloquent and persuasive orator, whose flowing periods entranced his fellow men; and so with these, many others who have in the pulpit or elsewhere made themselves felt for the public weal and for the good of the race are numbered among the former students of Centenary College.

We should also mention, as among the worthy sons of Centenary, Judge Charles Parlange, that knightly Creole gentleman who was known as the very soul of honor and ever stood above reproach; Dr. Charles G. Andrews, long the President, esteemed and loved; and Dr. Charles W. Carter, who ranked among the first pulpit orators of his Church. Those gone into the great beyond and those still living in this day of time, all are proof to our boys that, if they will, they, too, may, preparing themselves largely at old Centenary, make themselves felt in those fields of human activity and honorable achievement that await their coming. In due time, going forth into real life and beginning their struggle for a place and a name among men, they will find opportunity after opportunity meeting them; and, capable of embracing them as they come, their course will be upward, always upward to solid and splendid success.

Very much is said about luck and fortune and fate. We hear it declared of a man that "Everything he touches turns to gold," or of another, "He's the lucklest fellow in the world," or of some other, "The fates are against him and it just seems impossible for him to get on at all." Some men are styled the "favorites of fortune," and an "evil star" is said to follow others. I imagine that men sometimes quote Shakespeare's "tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood leads on to fortune," or omitted, etc., brings ruin; and, so quoting, charge to fate that which should be attributed to their own blundering or laziness. In spite of all the theories men may spin as to misfortunes and want of success, the fact is that, whether or not there is any such thing as luck, there is beyond doubt such things as pluck, grit and backbone. The average man banks much on work, patience and force of character; and generally in the long run it is believed that success is quite likely to crown industry and perseverance. A favorite question for debating societies has been: "Do circumstances make the man, or does man make the circumstances?" Certainly there are facts and events occurring in the history of men and nations that make it seem as though they were the sport of circumstances. There are days, hours, and even moments in which individual or national history is unexpectedly determined. There are crises, critical moments, on which hang great decisions, days above the level of common days in that human destinies seem then and there to be irrevocably fixed. The Fourth of July, 1776, was just such a day—so was the day of Marathon, and the day of Waterloo also, when the star of Bonaparte went down never to rise. At Rivoli the Austrians fought with splendid bravery and desperation, but Napoleon said that they failed because they did not understand the value of minutes. It is said that the current of John Fletcher's life was turned by the spilling of a cup of coffee. The law of gravitation was suggested by a slight occurrence, as was also the power of steam. Old Ben Franklin raised his kite and since then wonderful things have been gotten out of electricity.

"'Twas Franklin's hand that caught the horse,
'Twas harnessed by Professor Morse."

Others followed Morse, and to so many uses is electricity put to-day that we may almost ask, "What can it not do?"

There are many crises which are simply signal opportunities and we may determine results for ourselves. The young surgeon is summoned to his first critical operation, the lawyer to his first important case, the merchant to his first great venture. Two things are certain—one, that some circumstances absolutely control men, and the other, that some circumstances are absolutely controlled by men. Here is another certain fact, that the great mass of events with which we have to do are simply opportunities which may be either used or neglected. Unexpectedly we come to a fork in the road; to the right is the unfrequented way to the mountain peaks of distinction; to the left, the dead level of obscurity and the morass of failure. The one who takes the lonely, rugged mountain path succeeds and men say that he is "in luck." To refer, however, the inequalities of human condition to blind fate or mere chance is to go against every form of religious belief; and to say it is due to a partial providence is to fly in the face of the emphatic and repeated revelation that "God is no respecter of persons." The truth is that what a man is already determines his use or neglect of a great opportunity. William Pitt, when scarcely more than a boy in years, in making his first speech in the House of Commons, made such good use of his opportunity and acquitted himself so well that he drew from Burke a splendid encomium. Such success is not an accident but the result of laborious and thorough preparation. One writer puts it this way: "A legislative debate, a diplomatic crisis, a battle, or an occasion far less conspicuous may, in a single and unexpected hour, tax to the utmost and crown with imperishable glory the preparation of a life-time. There is no view of life at once so solemn and so inspiring as that which contemplates it as a constant preparation for important, unforseen emergencies. It matters little what sea a ship is to sail: its keel must be securely laid, its masts firmly set, its rigging of the toughest fibre, in order to sail any sea in safety. The tempest will test the timbers of the oak and the perfection of its make-up.

Our boys and other youth should realize that in some work, and in whatever work may come to be theirs, they will have need of the completest possible discipline of all their powers and use for the largest attainable acquirements. When the storm bursts upon them there will be no time to set the mast or hang the rudder. Of immense importance is it to all that life, be it long or short, should be made a constant culture of all the elements of a noble character. Opportunities are sure to come to each of us and our actual use of them will depend not on what we may wish, but on what we are. A short while after I was graduated from Tulane Law School and admitted to the bar in New Orleans, I was returning from court one day up Chartres Street in company with a distinguished laywer who remarked to me that he had waited for several years when he began the practice of law before he got business sufficient, as he expressed it, "to make the pot boil." He added, however, that during that time he was not idle, but that he made up possible cases involving the principles of law and conducted them, pro and con, preparing with the greatest care all necessary papers, pleading, etc., as in actual practice, arguing for plaintiff and answering for defendant, searching for precedents, and indeed going through all proceedings such as might have been the case if his supposed suits were real ones. In that way, when business came to him and clients entered his office and engaged his services in the courts he was already quite familiar with the general principles and the modus operandi of practice. Thus preparing for the opportunities he was ready when they came and so soon found himself with a large clientele and on the road to distinction and fortune.

Human life has been compared to a loom. God furnishes the warp of circumstances and privilege and talent. Thoroughly doing daily duty is the shuttle which, flying in its course back and forth, weaves the web of character and worthy achievement. Now, no loom will weave anything unless there be something in the shuttle. The thread that is woven into the web is in the shuttle. So then, in order to make character and attain success we must put forth personal effort, without which the most favorable circumstances can produce no results. Chief Justice Chase once stopped at a little railway station in Virginia and was told that it was the birthplace of Patrick Henry. He went on to the platform and, admiring the magnificent scene which met his gaze, exclaimed: "What an atmosphere! What a view! What glorious mountains! No wonder that Patrick Henry grew here!" "Oh, yes, sir," said a native standing near, "that is very true. Yet, so far as I have heard, that landscape and those mountains have always been here, but we haven't seen any more Patrick Henrys."

Had I the ear and attention of all the Methodist boys and other youths of Louisiana and neighboring States I would say: Set your aim high; get ready for all opportunities awaiting you, embrace them as they come; use them for your development on all lines that make for solid manhood and for the good of your fellow men and the advancement of the age in which you live—and then, though you may not be a Patrick Henry, a Clay, a Webster, a Calhoun, or any other great one, still you will live to some purpose, succeed in making up the material in you and approximate the possibilities of your being. Centenary can mightily help you if you will embrace the opportunity she holds out to you. The attendance at Centenary should increase to five times and more the present number. With Dr. Wynn at its head and a faculty of able professors with him, all that is needed now is at least a half-million dollars to properly equip it for the glorious work to be done. We are encouraged to believe that the $200,000 modestly asked for will be easily and soon raised by the Methodists of Louisiana and their friends.

ABIDING FAITH IN THE BIBLE.

By Earle William Gage.

A hundred and fifty years ago Voltaire said: "It took twelve men to found Christianity. I will show the world how one man can pull it to pieces. One hundred years from now the Bible will be an obsolete book, relegated to the dusty shelves of the antiquarian."

The time of Voltaire's boast has long since expired. Yet no book or set of books begins to compare with the Bible in selling value. Everywhere it is rated as the "best seller." Nothing in all literature presents an analogy to the unprecedented grip of the Bible on Anglo-Saxon civilization. It is a fact of life which must be met and explained. The unique survival of this Book surely points to unique survival value. When technical criticism has said its last word, still the fact remains that the unfailing instincts of the average man draw an unmistakable line of demarcation between this book and every other. Undoubtedly popular feeling has changed concerning the Book in the last generation. The hard, mechanical, rigid conception of its inspiration and interpretation have given way to vital, dynamic and flexible conceptions. The inspiration is that of life, and life means progress, variety, infinite adaptation. Nor can this vital inspiration be understood through microscopes, dissecting knives, and mathematical analyses. The true study is in the vital reaction of the book upon daily life. Its true test is not in the scholar's study, but "in the fierce light of the public square." And however our conceptions of form may change, the conviction deepens and intensifies that it is the abiding Word, because in a definite and unique sense it is the Word of the living God.

Consider, for one thing, how this book has anticipated the modern spiritual view of the world. We are at last pretty well emerged from the old hopeless materialism of some early evolutionists. John Fiske summed the whole situation up when he said that whatever evolution was, it could not work itself. Both science and philosophy are swinging more and more to non-mechanical and spiritual ideas of the real power at work in the progress of the world. Lord Tennyson once said that his notion of future punishment was to hear Huxley and Aubrey De Vere eternally discussing the non-existence of a God. Fortunately, the type of evolution which "bowed God from the frontiers of the universe as no longer necessary" has itself been bowed from the frontiers of reputable science.

As both science and philosophy work their way out toward a spiritual interpretation of the world, they find this old book, written in a non-scientific age, serenely announcing a spiritual origin, spiritual meaning, and spiritual outcome to all. How long has the old book been waiting for human thought to "catch up?"

The Bible has also anticipated the modern mind in its method of seeking truth. We have at last learned to give up the attempt for absolute demonstrations. Even the most rigid scientific and mathematical "proofs" must ever rest on assumptions unproved and unprovable. When the student in the mathematics class said: "I have proved the theorem," the professor rightly replied: "'Prove' is a very strong word; you have rendered it provable."

Life is larger than logic, and we are to-day learning that certainty about life is not gained by learning but by living. Truth that is worth while will not seize one by the intellectual throat and bludgeon him unto belief willy nilly. The pragmatic is the modern test of truth. "Will it work?" is the crucial question of the hour. "I can call spirits from the vast deep," but the modern pragmatic spirit replies with Hotspur: "Why, so can I, and so can any man, but do they come when you do call for them?"

Here, again, the Bible has very exactly anticipated the modern mind. Its appeal is strictly pragmatic—"taste and see." It wastes no time with proofs, explanations, harmonizations. "If any man will do his will, he shall know." And the vital fact is that most critics of the Bible have been compelled to admit that if it were blotted out of the actual demands of life, something must be substituted, almost exactly, to take its place. As Browning puts it in his "Christmas Eve:"

"When the critic has done his best,
And the pearl of price at reason's test
Lay dust and ashes levigable,
On the professor's lecture table—
When we looked for the inference and monition,
That our faith reduced to such condition
Be swept forthwith to its natural dust-hole,
He bids us when we least expect it,
Take back our faith—if it be not just whole.
Go home and venerate the myth
I thus have experimented with—
This Man, continue to adore him
Rather than all who went before him,
Or all who ever follow after."

Add to these facts the Bible's marvelous grasp of the complexities and paradoxes of life; its message of rest and peace to the world weariness and restlessness of this age; its gospel of victory over the pessimism and sadness of the pagan world ancient and modern; its splendid central vision of a Redeemer; and then we begin to understand how through all changes of form and shiftings of interpretation the old book stands. "The Word of the Lord abideth forever!"—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

EVENING MEDITATION.

By Myra Coleman.

The glow of the skies as the sun sinks into its golden cup, the twinkle of the stars, as one by one, they appear in the blue above, and the moon making her majestic journey across the heavens, all tend to lift my thoughts to "higher ground," creating within me an earnest desire to reach that perfection in life, that is portrayed in God's handiwork. The beauty and solemnity of the hour is upon me, as these thoughts come on the breezes of the silent night.

If the Golden gates for me should open,
A gentle voice say, "Come;"
And I, entering the Holy City, should hear
The Master say, "Well done;"
Oh, what a joy would thrill my heart,
As robed in spotless white,
I should with the redeemed through endless ages sing,
"Glory to the King of Kings."

As I think on these things, I thank God for creating me with an eye for the beautiful, teaching me to love this hour, when the combined forces of sun, moon, and stars, demonstrate to me the power and glory of the omnipotent Son of God.

CHURCH EXTENSION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Editor: Please announce in your next issue of the paper, that the Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Annual Conference will meet in Brookhaven, Miss., Mar. 10, at 2 o'clock p. m., in the parlor of Whitworth College.

THE HOLMES STORE
OF NEW ORLEANS

is one of America's truly great department stores.

It has perfected a buying organization that reaches into every producing market of the world, maintaining offices in Berlin, London, Paris and Florence, as well as New York.

It never presents any merchandise that is not of good quality and equitably priced.

Its very efficient service to patrons in the city is supplemented by the largest and best-equipped mail order department of any store in the South. Ninety-eight per cent of all orders received are filled on date of receipt.

The aim of the store is to merit fully the confidence that has been manifested by the public during its seventy-two years of merchandising history.

D. H. HOLMES CO., Ltd.

A HYMN.

Rom. 14:17-18-19.

O thou gracious God of glory,
Hear the prayers we lift to-day:
Take thy word, thine own sweet story
Sanctify it as we pray:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee.

Prince of Peace, the Son of Glory,
Intercede for us just now:
Prove thy word, thine own sweet story,
By thy presence as we bow:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee.

Holy Spirit, God's Revealer,
Shine upon thy truth we plead:
Help thy Son, the world's Redeemer:
Bring the good, our souls most need:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee;
Holy Spirit, lead us as we foHow thee.

Lord to-day, thy hand extendeth,
Filled with blessings as with seed;
Sanctify them, as thou sendeth
To thy glory, and our need:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee;
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee.

Righteousness, and peace, and praises,
Spring from hearts aflame with love:
Open now the fount of mercies;
Lift our longing hearts above:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee;
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee.

Lord we hear thy sweet, sweet story.
And we follow on to serve,
Until others see thy glory,
And give praise without reserve:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee:
Holy Spirit, lead us as we follow thee.

Tune: Zion, No. 91 Methodist Standard Hymnal.

Composed by Rev. R. Manson S. Evans, Strongs, Miss., Jan. 26, 1915, and dedicated to his numerous friends and loved ones.

LOOKING ON THE HEART.

By Rev. Felix R. Hill, D.D.

That was indeed a grave and most important mission that brought Samuel, when directed by God, to anoint a king as a successor to the rejected Saul. And it must have been a solemn and dramatic scene when seven of the sons of Jesse were made to pass, one by one, before the eyes of the prophet. But not one of these had God chosen to be king. There remained yet the youngest—the youth who kept the sheep; and it was of him, David, that Samuel said unto Jesse, "Send and fetch him; for we will not sit down until he come hither."

It was when the noble and manly looking Eliab was presented to God's messenger that the words were impulsively spoken: "Surely the Lord's anointed is before him;" and it was then that the Lord said unto Samuel, "Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him; for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

How wonderful is the heart! How marvelous and indispensable that central physical organ which, by its rhythmical action, keeps up the circulation of the blood and perpetuates life! But even more wonderful is the heart which we consider as the seat of moral life and character—of the affections and sensibilities. As the heart of flesh is the source of life and motion in our physical being, so this heart of affection, feeling and character, is the chief and vital portion of our moral life. It is to this that we should look, more than all things else. It is a great and fatal mistake to forget that God demands truth in the inward parts. We move through life trying too much to please ourselves and others by mere appearances. We look to the outside, and our judgments of men and things are determined by that which is pleasing to the senses, and popular in the world. We are attracted by the glamor and the glitter, by the fine speech, by the comely appearance, by the patronage and plaudits of those who may be seeking favor and promotion, and we are more or less influenced in our judgment or estimate of them, and are in danger of imitating them.

"The Lord seeth not as man seeth." There are thousands who every day are rising in the estimation of the world, yet are all the time getting lower in the estimation of God. Often, a man is elevated to a high place of trust and honor—he is the chosen one—the idol of the neighborhood, the city, or the commonwealth; but concerning that same man the just and righteous God has already pronounced judgment and said, "I refused him!" While men are moved by the mere outward seeming, God is not mistaken or deceived; he has a thorough understanding of every man's motive, character, and life.

It is well, indeed, to give heed to the words of the wise man: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." Every man has need to offer most earnestly the prayer, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts. And see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." The character of our thoughts—what a bearing has this upon our lives! "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Our inmost thoughts and our habitudes of thinking have everything to do with what we really are—the way we take, our influence in the world for good or evil, our attainment to the best and highest ideals, or our utter failure and miserable loss of everything that makes life worth living.

It is only "the pure in heart" who can be truly useful and happy in this life—who can "see God," here and hereafter. Rightness of heart is man's greatest blessedness for time and eternity.

It is related of Sir Walter Raleigh that while he was standing on the scaffold he was asked by the executioner, "Sir, how do you prefer to lay your head on the block?" and that Sir Walter answered, "It matters not where or how my head be laid, if my heart be right." O that our hearts may be right; for the "Lord looketh on the heart."

"SUNDRY THINGS—WEIGHED."

II.

Mr. Editor: Brother Lipscomb is still shooting at that squirrel. This time it is a "straw squirrel." If he did not take himself so seriously it would be altogether amusing.

"We do not believe, however, as we pointed out in our first article, that private correspondence schools should be established, in view of the organized provision of the Church." Nor do I. I am a member of the Examining Committee of the Second Year. The Conference makes it my business to examine these brethren. I am giving a written examination. What says the Discipline? Page 29, Par. 62: "Let every Annual Conference at the beginning of each quadrennium appoint committees of examination for the course of study prescribed by the Bishops for candidates for admission and for Conference undergraduates. The committees shall hold office for four years, and shall discharge faithfully their duties in accordance with the regulations," etc. What are those regulations? First, the presiding elder is "charged," page 54, Par. 120. Then comes a general statement, page 237, Par. 731: "All ministerial candidates are strongly urged before entering the traveling connection to secure, if possible, a thorough collegiate and theological training. A certificate of graduation from a secondary school of good standing may be accepted by the Examining Committee in lieu of the English branches," etc. * * * And "the course for undergraduates may be taken with the correspondence school, or at a preachers' Institute having the Conference courses of study as part of its work, and in each case an official statement testifying to that fact shall be Presented to the Conference Examining Committee; on presentation of such statement, the Examining Committee shall test the applicant's knowledge of the course of study and shall report on the same to the Annual Conference; provided, that a certificate from a standard college of our Church, or from other than Methodist colleges of equal grade, may be accepted," and goes on to say that such a certificate from a "theological seminary, or from the Biblical Department of a standard college may be accepted." "When practicable, the work of the committee may be done in connection with the Preachers' Institute or mid-year meetings." In other words, it is for the Committee to pass on the kind of work done, and the Committee must be satisfied before the undergraduate can pass. I am satisfying myself these days as a member of the Committee of the Second Year. Other committeemen are so doing, or will so do in due season. "Private Correspondence schools established," forsooth! See Minutes of our last Conference, page 37: "As a possible solution of the vexed problem of harmonizing the demands of the new Discipline with the activities of that institution (Correspondence School, Atlanta) without duplicating the examinations of those taking courses therein, we would suggest to the Committee on Ministerial Supply and Training of the General Board that the papers of the young men be referred, as received throughout the year, to the several committees of the several Conferences for examination and grading; thus keeping the young men in closer touch with their instructors, and obviating the necessity of the inquiry which will otherwise be demanded preceding the Conference session." Who wrote that? T. H. Lipscomb. He dares suggest a better plan to the correspondence school, and dares suggest that the committees grade the correspondence school papers during the year, yet he fires about six columns at me for making a suggestion about the reports of the Boards, and offering to examine the papers of the undergraduates during the year. Does his logic limp? No, it can't even crawl. Is his loyalty above suspicion? No. Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde have appeared again. (In reality I do not question his loyalty any more than I do my own. His "balance" needs adjusting). But what caused this six column efflorescence? Loyalty? As my old Wofford College friend was wont to say, "Not if the court knows herself, and she think she do."

Bishops' Decision and the General Conference.

Page 226, Par. 539: "An Annual Conference Committee of Examination may accept from an undergraduate the certificate of an approved college for any part of the course of study that he has completed—provided the Committee is satisfied that the work was properly done."

This whole matter was threshed out at the General Conference. Some of them tried to substitute shall for may throughout. Dr. T. D. Ellis, of Georgia, I think it was, defeated it; while Dr. James Cannon favored it. He said: "We do not believe we ought to relax that part of our time honored Disciplinary regulation, but that every man ought to be examined by his own brethren." Dr. J. W. Perry stood for may on the ground that many of our men "of pluck and application" did not have the money to take the course (Daily Advocate, May 25). I am the brother of the men of the Second Year, I am trying to do a brother's part by them, and within the law.

But why multiply words, decisions, rules, regulations, General Conference speeches, disciplinary provisions? Brother Lipscomb stands on both sides of the question, and woe unto him that takes either.

"The Nigger in the Woodpile."

I grant that Brother Lipscomb is an expert at making a man say what he neither believes nor ever dreamed of saying. "The Board of Education singled out," and "very significantly." By whom? I certainly did no such thing. Fortunately, my article may still speak for itself. I thought Brother Lipscomb had gone to school long enough to read simple English. It seems that I am mistaken. He just went long enough to want to "spute," and every time he imagines he sees or hears something he "unlimbers." Surely he was in the "nursery" telling "Boo-Bear Stories" when he first saw "Sundry Things." Suddenly be lmagined that "Sundry Things" was a modern Job, full of sores, covered with boils, dangerous. At once he became Elibu. "Then was kindled his wrath," he said, "I also will show mine opinion. For I am full of matter," "Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent; it is ready to burst like new bottles. I will speak that I may be refreshed: I will open my lips and answer."

Well, so long as he confines himself to the "record" I am willing. When he passes to suspicions, unfounded inferences, unwarrantable conclusions, and shoots it all through a "blow-gun," I confess, I wince. It isn't so bad to be shot to pieces by logic, overwhelmed by fact, or swept off one's feet by argument; but to stand in range of a modern gas-shooting cannon, please excuse me if I "duck."

Here is the whole of my contention; transact no important business "under the stress of an Appointment Hour." It is not a question of confidence or lack of confidence. The creator has a right to review the work of the creature. The Conference is entitled to time to transact all the business coming before it. My suggestion was no appeal to "oi polloi." Letters and cards commending my little article keep coming, and they range from pastors of our weakest charges to the presiding eldership.

"The critic is always abroad in the land. His job is easy." Evidently Brother Lipscomb speaks out of "a full heart of experience" here. See his articles.

"Does Brother Felts think that some features of this report (the Board of Education) were not duly considered," etc. I voted for it. I liked it then. I still like it, even though it presumed to suggest a better plan to the parent board.

"Suggestive of distrust and provocative of discord." If a member of an examining committee can't give an examination in a way that accommodates itself to the purse and convenience of undergraduates; if a member of an Annual Conference can't suggest, insist, that we avo'd the congestion of "Appointment Hour" by remaining in session another day, or having all important reports in not later than Saturday's session, without being shot at with a gun loaded with "suspicion," "half-baked stuff," "lack of confidence," "cyclopedic censors of all boards," "watched," "seeds of distrust in the minds of the brethren," "snap judgment," "hurry up and tell us what you think, then we will tell you what we think," it is time to call a halt sure enough. "All Boards, too, will doubtless welcome brotherly suggestions and advice; and as in the past, so in the future, freely submit their conclusions for the further consideration of the Conference."

If that welcome is to be of the kind and quality, and quantity, that Brother Lipscomb grants me, I prefer to be cussed, cuffed and kicked. Fortunately for the Boards, the Conference and the Church, a far more democratic spirit prevails and pervades.

In the meantime, some of the "boys" are taking the Correspondence School Course, some are pegging away till Conference, hoping to pass there, some are taking the examination in the way I suggested—to those who could not or would not take the Correspondance Course.

Also, in the meantime, members of the Conference discuss "Appointment Hour" under stress to "catch that train," the passage of important reports without due consideration on the part of the Conference. Also, it seems, in the meantime, Brother Lipscomb goes "after another box of cartridges, by gum." JAMES H. FELTS.

HOW MOSES WROTE THE WORLD'S EARLY HISTORY.

Some have wondered bow Moses received a record of events about Creation, and from that time on down to his day as written in the Book of Genesis.

Adam lived nine hundred thirty years, or almost one-sixth of the period of the world's history. Adam saw his children's children to the eighth generation. Noah's father was born and lived fifty-six years with Adam. The lives of Adam and Noah together covered almost one-third of the entire world's history. Abraham was born and lived fifty-eight years before Noah died; so the story of Eden could easily have been transferred from Adam to Abraham and passed through but very few hands. Abraham was the father of the Israelite nation, and thus those early traditions were easily handed down and preserved in a verbal manner. But, aside from this, Moses was called up into the mountain, and was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights, and neither ate bread nor drank water." It is said that when he came down he wrote "all the words of the Lord." Is it at all unlikely that God gave to him directly the things that are contained in the Book of Genesis? Peter in his Second Epistle, speaking of the Scriptures of his day, which included the books of Moses, declared that "the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as moved by the Holy Ghost."

When we consider that through more than one-third of the world's history the people served God without a Bible, without a written revealed revelation and law, we certainly ought to thank God to-day that we live in an age and dispensation of time when we have the written Word of God in all its completeness; and not only so, but that we have the Holy Spirit to lead us and guide us into its blessed truth. This makes our responsibility all the greater, for "unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." (Luke 12: 48).—The Gospel Trumpet.

MRS. MARY OSTEEN WATKINS.

At noon on December 30, 1914, we laid to rest in the graveyard at Cane Ridge Church in Jefferson County, Mrs. Mary Watkins, widow of the late Rev. Calvin C. Watkins of the Mississippi Conference. Rev. W. H. Lewis conducted the service in the presence of a large congregation of people, who followed her with grief to the grave. On pages 295-296 in his History of Methodism in Mississippi, Rev. John G. Jones gives a graphic account of the conversion of Mrs. Elizabeth Osteen at Centre Camp Ground in Jefferson County. It is a very choice bit of early Methodist history. Mrs. Osteen, like Deborah of old, in her shouts and exhortations stirred the hearts of Israel.

Our Aunt Mary Watkins was the daughter of Elizabeth Osteen, the saintly prophetess of our early days, and the shout she carried with her through life was inspired by the same spirit that had touched the lips of her victorious mother. Her father was "the less demonstrative, but none the less pious," Thomas Osteen referred to on the same pages. Aunt Mary was born on February 26, 1828, near Harriston, Miss.

On page 157 of the same volume, Brother Jones gives an interesting account of the conversion of Dr. B. W. M. Minter and the bringing into the Methodist Church of the family of Mr. Asa Watkins, the writer's great-grandfather, who gave to the Mississippi Conference two sons, Rev. W. H. Watkins, father of Rev. A. F. Watkins, and Rev. Calvin C. Watkins. Our Aunt Mary, on January 12, 1843, became the wife of the latter who, though less conspicuous in the ministry than his brother, died in 1877, leaving the aroma of an uncommonly good life. Thus did our now sainted Aunt unite in herself two very interesting streams of typical Methodist history and life.

Her own conversion came at the age of nine, at the same Centre Camp Ground, mentioned above, while, as she often related, a Mrs. Irvine led the prayer at the altar. She had two years previously joined the Church, after a sermon preached by the Rev. John G. Jones.

Truly, we have seen few so beautiful lives. The piety and testimony and shout and prayer and song of the old times she retained to the end and poured it all freely into the somewhat more formal religious life of her own day. She watched every new movement of the Church not only with intelligent interest, but with a hope and a faith that were never bedimmed as the changes of a new day came. She was at once one of the very best representatives of the old type of Methodists, and one of the most enthusiastic advocates of any new movements that meant the betterment of the kingdom of God. She retained the "old-time religion" and believed it to be the only dynamics that would make the new machinery go.

I thank God that I knew her and heard from her lips both the old-time testimony, which she gave us as a precious heritage, and her faith in the future victory of the Church. Many remember the past and its glory only to weep in the present and to despair of the future. It was not so with her. The Gospel of Christ as preached by her pastor, whoever he was, was still the power of God unto salvation. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. Notley Hanson and Mrs. Olive Watkins, to grieve deeply for her, themselves growing old. Dear ones, blessed have you been with this life-long motherhood. Rare indeed the legacy of this rich and beautiful life! Short will be the separation.

Her death was as beautiful as her life. For months she expected the messenger, not of death, but of life. "I shall not be with you in the morning," was her expectant attitude a few days before her departure. Two nights before her going she attempted to hold the family worship, but her words faltered and her mind wandered. Two mornings later she saw Him "face to face." The end was peace.

"We thought her dying when she slept, and sleeping when she died." Sleep on, Dear One. Eighty-seven years are enough of labor. It is time to give his beloved sleep.

We hope to see her shining face when, with ears and lips touched by the angel's hand, she first listens to and then with all her heart joins in "the song of the redeemed."

H. B. WATKINS.

LIFE'S BITTERNESS.

By J. W. Lipscomb, M.D.

Oh, the bitterness of life,
If at home there is strife,
When you turn at the close of the day
Where you long to be met
By those who will let
Your cares and your sorrows melt away.

You have toiled and you've struggled,
With mad business you've juggled
'Till your hair at the temples turns gray;
You have worked like a trojan,
Success was your slogan;
What a price, what a price, must you pay!

If in spite of achievement,
You've naught but bereavement
To meet you, as the evening's untold
Don't your heart bleed with sorrow,
Don't you dread the to-morrow,
When you struggle again for the gold?

Oh, quit it, sad pilgrim,
And return unto Him
For thy Savior's love may grow cold;
The prize is not worth it—
While for heaven you are unfit
When your mind's so engrossed with the gold.

Let thy thoughts turn to Him above
Who is all peace and love.
Who cares not for riches untold,
Who'd rather see love abide
There by your fireside,
Than treasures of Ophir tenfold.

SHREVEPORT AS A COLLEGE LOCATION.

In a previous article I have considered the need of a well-located Methodist College in Louisiana on the ground that neither Church nor State can afford to maintain educational dependence on institutions across the line. I now wish to argue in favor of Shreveport as a college location.

The General Education Board of New York, which has made a scientific study of college locations, reports as follows:

"Our college planning in so far as it endeavors to develop institutions that have not yet attained full power, must give great weight to the consideration that the modern university thrives and is most useful in close association with population, industry and wealth. * * * It is by no means clear that a rural location has any substantial advantage at all over an urban location."

Shreveport is one of the progressive cities of the southwest and has a great future. It is the commercial center of a large area and contact with its business life is a great asset to a student.

Better than its material progress is the constant improvement in its moral and religious tone. Religion is a commanding force in Shreveport. The leading churches are thronged with influential citizens on each Lord's Day. The location of the First Methodist Church is one of the best in the South, and a student attending its services cannot but be impressed with the fact that the Church is the most vital factor in modern life. This church has also a recently organized men's class under Mr. O. A. Wright as teacher, which already has an attendance of nearly one hundred. Shreveport has also a number of other Methodist churches which are doing splendid work. The Noel Memorial Church, which is nearer Centenary than any other, is a monument of good taste and architecture and is destined to become a great community church.

Prohibition prevails in Shreveport and will stay there. The recent effort to hold a city election in defiance of law seems to be doomed to failure. Our city Vice Commission is just about to make a report of their conclusions which will result before long in a crusade against the social evil.

In the matter of urban advantages Shreveport has the advantage of every other city in the State except New Orleans, which for other reasons could not have been considered as a location for Centenary.

I quote again from the New York Board:

"The importance of an institution, the need for its development can, other things being equal, be gauged by the possibilities of its immediate environment."

Into the territory surrounding Shreveport railroads go in every direction like spokes from a hub into a population almost entirely Protestant and which contains untold wealth in oil, gas, timber and farm products.

It has been demonstrated that the circle from which a college obtains the large majority of its students has a radius of from fifty to a hundred miles. My inference from this is that, other things being favorable, the location of a college at a distance of one hundred miles or more from any other college would be advantageous. Shreveport is 189 miles from Dallas and 132 miles from Pineville. There is no male college north of the center of the State except Centenary, neither Ruston nor Natchitoches conferring degrees. It would have become increasingly difficult to maintain Centenary in Jackson on account of its close proximity to the State University, as well as for other reasons.

When the question of a location for Centenary was being discussed some years ago, Dr. C. W. Carter drew the diagram of a circle with Shreveport as a center, showing that here would be a clear field for a college.

Louisiana Methodism can do nothing better at this critical stage in our work of religious education than to do what is being done by practically all the other Conferences, namely establish its schools upon a stable foundation.

THE MONROE DISTRICT PLAN.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, the vigorous and resourceful commissioner for the Monroe District is writing personal letters to each pastor in that district in reference to the Centenary Special, and has fixed Sunday, March 14, in the stations, and the entire month of March for the circuits, in which to raise the special. He is being seconded by the presiding elder, Rev. Wm. Schuhle, in his efforts, and no doubt the Monroe District will make a creditable showing when the returns are in.

THE CHARGE AGAINST PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Does our public school system really give our boys and girls that kind of training and instruction which will send them out into the world with a good start toward their development into moral and efficient citizens? This question is being asked by practical men and women in all walks of life—not in a spirit of adverse criticism, but in an honest belief that, under modern school conditions, instruction in the principles of sound and vital ethics is being subordinated to more material things. Discussing this subject Congressman Samuel W. McCall of Massachusetts, in an interview reported by Alleyne Ireland in the New York World, says:

"The most serious criticism which I would make of our school system is that it does not pay sufficient attention to character training, that it neglects to instill into the youth of the nation, as effectively as it might fairly be expected to do, the broad moral principles upon which alone reliance can be placed for a sane and healthy conduct of life.

"If I had to compress this criticism into a single concrete phrase, I would say that our children are taught a great deal about their rights and relatively little about their duties, that the general tendency of our school instruction is to make American youth very much alive to the opportunities of wrestling something from its environment and not so sensible to the claims of gentle and generous living.

"Native and foreign observers have told us again and again that in respect for authority and in regard for the rights of others, our people fall behind the standard set by countries whose general level of civilization is, in our opinion, much lower than our own.

"There is a type of mind which translates contempt for authority into a noble independence of spirit and which interprets indifference to the rights of others as a wholesome symptom of sturdy self-reliance, but it is not by means of such pleasant paraphrases that we can blink the fact that we too often hold laws, rules and regulations in contempt, and that we too commonly regard the power to do something as an all-sufficient justification for doing it.

"These faults of character, to whatever extent they exist, are, in some degree at least, traceable to the failure of our schools to meet the responsibility which rests upon them to give a human guidance to our children during their most impressionable years.

"I have found matter for adverse comment in the educational ideal which places too much emphasis upon the acquirement of knowledge and too little upon the teaching of sound principles of ethics and conduct. It remains to consider the other side of the question, that is to say, whether the object of American education being to develop the sense of individual rights and to equip our boys and girls with the means of securing a successful start in life, the results indicate success or failure to attain these objects."—The Commoner.

CHURCH EXTENSION, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Louisiana Conference is hereby called to meet at the First Methodist Church of Alexandria, March 16, to transact such business as may come before the committee. Let all applications to go before the general Board for aid be in the hands of the secretary, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Crowley, La., in time for the committee to have them in hand for that meeting. The Executive Committee is composed of the president, secretary, and treasurer of the Conference Board.

Upon a little face,
And yet for a long while
It brightened all the place.

Performed in "His dear name;"
Yet it supplied the need,

South Mansfield, La.

"HE SAYS HE WILL."

Maud Manson had just returned from her mother's funeral. The clods, as they fell on the coffin of her earthly friend, seemed still sounding in her ears.

A thoughtless neighbor said to her: "What will you do now, Maud, without a mother to whom you can tell your troubles?" She simply said, "I'll go to Jesus and tell him my troubles. He was mother's best Friend, he'll be mine, too."

"But Jesus is so far away, and has all these great worlds to attend to. How can he find time to listen to such a child as you are?"

"Well, I only know he says he will, and that's enough for me," said the dear child.

Wasn't that a beautiful answer?

Can't we all trust him when he says he will?—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

WRONG SIDE UP.

Jack was cross; nothing pleased him. His mother gave him the choicest morsels for his breakfast and the nicest toys, but he did nothing but fret and complain. At last his mother said: "Jack, I want you to go right up to your room, and put on your clothes wrong side out."

Jack started. He thought his mother must be out of her wits.

"I mean it, Jack," she repeated, looking earnestly at him.

Jack had to obey. He had to turn his stockings wrong side out, and put on his coat and trousers and his collar wrong side out. When his mother came up to him, there he stood—a forlorn, funny-looking boy, all linings and seams and ravelings—before the glass, wondering what his mother meant; but he was not quite clear in his conscience.

Then his mother, turning him around, said: "This is what you have been doing all day, making the worst of everything. You have been turning everything wrong side out. Do you really like your things this way so much, Jack?"

"No, mamma," answered Jack, shamefacedly. "Can't I turn them right?"

"Yes, you may, if you will try to speak what is pleasant. You must do with your temper and manners as you prefer to do with your clothes—wear them right side out. Do not be so foolish any more, little man, as to persist in turning them wrong side out."—Ohio Work.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

During the South African War, a battle had raged all day, and firing was still taking place. Far away in the distance "Long Tom" was booming at intervals. For some time it had gone on thus, and still there was no relaxation of its deadly purpose! * * * Seven miles away, a group of men had stopped to bivouac, and amongst them was Scripture Reader A., who midst shot and shell, had kept with the men, ready to help where he might be needed.

Not far off, one of the soldiers, Private B——, who had just taken his rations from the cart, was stooping down to tie them up in his handkerchief, and as he did so, a second shot from the ninety-six-pounder burst just over him; a shrapnel bullet struck him in the back, and, entering at the side of the spine, passed right through his body. The reader and some of the men went to his assistance at once, but the poor fellow was terribly wounded. Having procured a stretcher, they placed him on it and carried him where he could receive medical aid. As Reader A. walked beside him, he put out his hand and placed it in that of the reader, evidently feeling that he had a friend, although he had not known him before.

The doctor had finished doing what he could for the relief of the sufferer, but the case was far too serious for any remedy, and he only wondered that the man was alive. He told the reader he might go into the tent to see him if he liked, adding: "He ought to be dead, humanly speaking, and cannot possibly live more than two hours at the most."

Reader A. went in, and spoke kindly to the man, asking if he could do anything for him. "Yes," he replied, "my feet are very cold; can I have another blanket?" Having procured one for him (though he already had seven), he felt he could not leave him thus, and an intense desire for the poor soldier's salvation came over him.

"Are you ready to die?" he asked. "No," was the reply, and then followed the story of a wasted life. Being weak, he became tired, and Reader A. left him awhile and went outside the tent, only to pray most earnestly for him.

On his return he asked him: "Do you know you're dying?"

"Yes," was the answer.

"Do you want to go to heaven?"

"Indeed, I do!" Then seeing how earnest the poor fellow was, Reader A. said: "Are you sorry for your sins?"

"Yes," he answered, "God knows I am. Is it not too late now?"

The reader gave the answer: "The blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse from all sin." Then kneeling down, he prayed for him, and repeated the words of life-giving power, adding: "If you are really in earnest about your salvation, will you say these words after me as a prayer to God?

"'Just as I am without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bids't me come to thee,
O, Lamb of God, I come!'"

In a feeble voice he repeated the words of this grand old hymn, "Oh, Lamb of God, I Come!" and added, "Oh, I see now—He died for me." And then, a radiantly bright look overspread his countenance.

He asked Reader A to come back again, but he had to visit other men that night; and when he returned early next morning, he found that Private B—— had passed away.

The general, the doctor and the reader were present at his funeral, and the latter put a plain-cut wooden cross over his grave, with his name written on it in blacking.

On coming away from the grave, the reader asked the doctor if he could account for the man living as long as he did.

"No," was the reply; "it was nothing short of a miracle. Can you?"

"No, I cannot," replied the reader, "unless he had a praying mother, or some praying friends at home, and God may have held back the hand of death, to give him a chance of salvation in answer to prayer."

Six years after, our reader was holding some mission services at a training-camp on Sailsbury Plain. One day he was standing amongst a group of men, when one of them (who was with him in South Africa), came up and asked if he remembered Private B——, "Because," he added pointing to a sergeant a little way off, "that's his brother." Following the direction in which he pointed, Reader A. went up to the sergeant, and putting his arm in his, said, "Just come with me a minute, will you? I want to ask you something. Did you have a brother in the war in South Africa?"

"Yes, I did," he replied, "and we heard from the war office that he was killed on a certain day, but we never knew any details, whatever."

"Then," said the reader, "I want to ask you another question—you must not mind my doing so—have you a praying mother?"

"Yes," was the answer; "my old mother has been an invalid for eight years, and she used to spend days in prayer for my brother, when he was in South Africa, that he might be ready to die if he were called into eternity."

Then the reader told him the whole story, and asked for his mother's address. He wrote to her, telling of the answer to her prayer.

Thus she prevailed in heaven, and, through heaven, on earth, and death's dark angel was arrested until another soul had stepped out of Satan's kingdom into the kingdom of Christ, and he was able, through that message of salvation which he accepted, to "read his title clear to mansions in the sky."

Thus after many days—nay, years—of trusting her loved Savior, the answer came; and she to whom faith had been the substance of things not seen, received here and now the reward of her faith, and rejoiced in the faithfulness of a loving God, who had heard and answered her prayer.—E. Christian Cleeve, published by Scripture Reading Society.

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

SHADOW AND REALITY.

Alexander the Great rode a famous horse named Bucephalus. He was famous for two things—he was the steed which bore the conqueror of the world, and he was afraid of his shadow. He confused a shadow with reality.

A symbol is only a shadow of a reality, and there is danger of confusing the two, of depending upon the symbol, and of losing the truth.

More than once we have heard the expression, "That is all Greek to me." In the language of Plato and Aristotle immortal names were enshrined, the fate of proud Troy and the deeds of heroes were sung, tragedies were written and philosophies wrought. And to the scholar the curious characters of the ancient alphabet are the open sesame to stately halls of thought and beauty. But Greek is a dead language to the busy man in the street. Fifty million men converse freely in a language they have known from childhood. But the discourse of their philosophers might seem like the jabberings of a monkey to one who speaks another tongue. And it would mean nothing to him to repeat, like a parrot when he is taught, strange words in an unknown tongue. But some people engage in the equivalent of reciting strange words in an known tongue. In the forms of religion they forget or do not know the meaning, and somehow believe that virtue will come into their souls. Some may go into the sanctuary as a mere form in which they trust. Some may go with no desire to worship, and depart with no added truth. Some may kneel in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a mere form which, they believe, transmits some kind of mystic virtue. They have never had but a vague idea of its meaning, and perhaps no one has explained it to them. How many sermons have you heard on the subject? Some depend upon the form of baptism and forget its meaning. So with any religious act done in a mechanical way.

It is folly to depend upon anything as a mere form, and it is sad to miss the truth it is intended to convey. For there is no symbolism apart from truth. When a symbol ceases to convey a truth, it ceases to be a symbol, it remains what it was at the first—only a material object, representing nothing beyond itself. Every symbol and every form represents some truth. There is no shadow apart from reality. In the turbulent days "when the judges ruled" a bloody old warrior looked from his city gate in alarm. And he was assured that he saw only the shadow of the mountains. But soon from those ominous shadows came an army with banners. Every symbol, every form, had its origin in a truth. It is impossible for a man to draw a picture of nothing, to depict something which has no relation nor likeness to anything else in the material universe. The Koran forbids the Mohammedan to represent the forms of men and animals. But in their carved work the Moorish architects resorted to a beautiful combination of geometric devices, fruit and floral forms, known as arabesque. They could not chisel figures of nothing. In the oriental rug on your floor you may not discover any figure that correctly represents anything you know. But you may find many devices that suggest the material objects from which the figures were taken.

From the dim ages of the past form and symbolism have been employed in the aid of religion. And every act of worship, every symbol had its origin in a truth, though it may pass in time into a mere form, its meaning forgotten, and its virtue lost, by the multitude.

The whole creation is one vast and sublime symbol of the Creator. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

And man himself, God's noblest work, is a living symbol. He walks erect. His brain surmounts his body. That is a symbol. Mind is greater than matter. The soul is infinitely above the tabernacle of clay in which it dwells for a season.

So there is a value in symbolism and form. The contemplative man is led to investigation. He is stirred to know and to do, to learn the meaning, and to apply it to his own life.

And the truth gained through a symbol will scarcely be forgotten. By the association of ideas, it will never be lost. As long as the symbol is seen or remembered, the truth it conveys will not be lost, but will be the lasting possession of the mind, and the good impulse of the heart.

Then let us never confuse shadow with reality, and find a shallow satisfaction in mere form. Let us never be satisfied with mere lip service. But let us know full well that every shadow is cast by some reality; every form of religion, every act of worship, represents a truth. Let us look from the shadow to the reality; let us seek the truth conveyed, and apply it to our daily living.

A CASE IN POINT.

At their recent sessions the two Mississippi Conferences took action expressing disapproval of the extent to which loose and un-Methodistic theology is permitted to be set forth uncombated in the Methodist Review Quarterly. There are some who regard such fears as groundless and such words of warning as these Conferences uttered as merely the expressions of narrow fanatics and panicky alarmists. But that the danger to which they sought to direct attention is a real and not a fancied one is evident from the following letter, which we received a few days since from a comparatively young minister serving a prominent church in the patronizing territory of the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

Dear Brother Meek: In the first paragraph of a review, by Mr. Will W. Alexander, of Nashville, Tenn., of a volume, entitled, "The Influence of the Bible on Civilization," written by Dr. Earnest Von Dobschutz, in the Methodist Review of October, 1914, page 801, he says: "It is a book worth reading, worth buying with one's last dollar in order to read, e. g., if one is a young preacher, or Sunday school teacher, or any one else charged with the teaching of the Bible and possessed with a feeling that they are not fully adequate for the task." Again, in the last paragraph of his notice, Mr. Alexander says: "Finally, brethren, buy the book and read it. Put it into the hands of those in your church charged with the teaching of the Bible." Upon this recommendation, I bought the book and enjoyed the first seven chapters, but when I got to the eighth I balked. I hardly think it is wise to assure "young preachers and Sunday school teachers" that the story of creation and the deluge of Genesis were likely copied from Babylonian mythology; that the miracles of the Divine Revelation are only legends; that the "Bible nowadays is one book among a thousand others;" that it is "no more the text-book of theology;" that "it has proved impossible to deduce from the Bible, even from the teachings of Jesus, rules for modern life;" that "The books of the Bible are like other books; they are not to be treated as divine scriptures, but as human writings; and that "St. Paul had not one doctrine of the atonement, but half a dozen theories about it." Since these are expressions of the principles that are being taught in the universities of Germany, we need not be surprised at the audacity of such books as "Germany and the Next War," which is reviewed at length by Dr. Gross Alexander in the January (1915) Review. The simple law of cause and effect is here clearly seen. Yet the Editor of the Methodist Review condemns the latter volume and permits the former to be recommended to the young preachers and Sunday school teachers of our Church as being of sufficient merit to have them spend their last dollar to purchase it.

It is a strong case which our correspondent here makes out against the present management of the Methodist Review, and a reference to the book notice by Mr. W. W. Alexander and the volume in question will show that he does not overstate the facts in a single particular. In order to demonstrate this conclusively to the Methodist public, most of whom will not have access either to the October Methodist Review or to Dr. Von Dubschutz' book, we will give at somewhat greater length some of the objectionable passages that have been referred to:

Page 174: "Of course, there are miracles; the healings of Jesus we may accept as historical without any hesitation, but the standing still of the sun in Josh. 10:12 is nothing but a poetic form of speech, and the floating ax-head is as legendary in the story of Elisha (11 Kings 6:6) as it would be in any other legend."

Page 176: "The accounts given in the Babylonian archives and the Egyptian inscriptions are to be compared with the Biblical account, and some may feel that the comparison is not always in favor of the latter. Even the social and religious positions of the prophets is nowadays compared with contemporaneous facts in Greece, Persia, and India. The life of Jesus and the Acts of the Apostles have changed their aspect with the possibility of literary comparison. It is not so much the literary criticism of the Gospels and the Acts by themselves as it is this facility of comparison which shakes the authority of the Bible. We find the same miracles told of Jesus and the Emperor Vespatian; some sayings of Jesus can be compared with utterances of Caesar and Pompey."

Page 179: "By recent discoveries it is proved that the creation story in Gen. 1 is by no means a unique and original one; there is something similar in Babylonian mythology; it may have been taken from there. The same holds true regarding the story of the deluge and others. So there is no reason for claiming for these stories the authority of revealed science; the Biblical author simply shares the idea of his time."

Pages 181, 182, and 183: "Strange as it may seem, it is a fact that the Bible is no more the text-book of theology. Theology, of course, can never do without the Bible, but here also the Bible is the source of historical information, not the authoritative proof for doctrine, * * * * The use of the Bible for settling modern social problems has brought upon many Christian minds a pitiful confusion. It has proved impossible to deduce from the Bible, even from the teachings of Jesus, rules for modern life. Times have changed and the conditions have altered."

Page 184: "The books of the Bible are like other books; they are not to be treated as divine Scriptures but as human writings." Page 188: "The doctrine of the Church never can be, and never has been, identical with the doctrine of the Bible, because it is impossible to stop the development of history; besides there are as many doctrines in the Bible as the men who wrote the several books of the Bible, or even more. Saint Paul had not one doctrine of the atonement, but half a dozen theories about it."

Now, is this not a beautiful lot of stuff to find in a work enthusiastically and unqualifiedly recommended to our young preachers and the teachers in our Sunday schools who are to instruct the children and youth of the Church? And let it be noted that this recommendation emanated from Mr. Will W. Alexander who is conducting the Boys' Department in the Graded Lessons Edition of our Sunday School Magazine, and that it appeared in one of the official organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Did Dr. Gross Alexander know the character of Dr. Von Dobschutz' book? If so, why did he, without a word of warning, allow its circulation to be urged in the Methodist Review and the influential name of that periodical used to assist in placing it in the hands of our people? And if he did not know what the contents of this book were, is not his negligence in not ascertaining, censurable? There might be some excuse for an editor of a religious weekly being slipped up on and taken unawares, as his paper is made up hurriedly; but the Methodist Review is a quarterly and its book notices are one of its boasted specialties. Dr. Alexander has the right to select the reviewer of every volume noticed in the great journal issued under his care, and if he cannot examine such publications sufficiently to be sure of their nature, it would seem that he could at least have them discussed by persons who are sound in the faith and whose judgment could be trusted.

Evidently the Mississippi Conferences did not speak too soon or too strongly. It is high time that the Church was waking up on this subject and making it definitely and emphatically understood that the doctrinal integrity of Southern Methodism must and shall be preserved. Unless something is done to turn back the tide of unbelief that is flowing in upon us through various channels, it is not unlikely that ere we are aware of it the faith of our people in the authority of the Holy Scriptures and in the essential truths of Christianity will be undermined, and that some way will be found to make nugatory our Twenty-five Articles of Belief, or to send them openly to the scrap heap.

On Page 16 of the Methodist Handbook for 1915, occurs the following significant statement from the pen of its editor, Dr. T. N. Ivey: "The Southern Review, the property of Dr. A. T. Bledsoe, was adopted by the General Conference on the condition that it would be free from politics, that in its theological department only Methodist theology would be taught, and that the General Conference should be free from all financial responsibility. The Southern Review ran under this regime for two quadrenniums." (Italics ours.)

If the Church in that day exacted of a publication that was not hers, before she would consent to use it and commend it to her people, that only "Methodist theology" should be taught in it, can she now afford to demand less than that of a similar perlodical which she owns, maintains, and fully controls? We scarcely think so. At any rate, ought not our Review, at this time when the poisonous and subtle teachings of unbelievers who call themselves Christians are so widespread in the world, to be more watchful and careful in safeguarding the interests of Southern Methodism from their pernicious influence, than the case which our correspondent has brought to our attention would seem to indicate? This question, in our judgment, is one which merits serious consideration at the hands of Dr. Alexander and other leaders in the Church.

A PERSONAL STATEMENT.

We are printing this week a statement from the Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South, which met in Memphis, Tenn., February 19-20, showing its final action in the Vanderbilt controversy and setting forth the reasons therefor. It devolved upon that body to interpret the meaning of the instructions given it by the General Conference, which created it; this it has done, and for the power which it has exercised, it is responsible to the Church and the next General Conference.

The Editor of the Advocate, who served as Commissioner for the North Mississippi Conference, desires, however, to have it distinctly understood that he was in no sense whatever a party to this action. He stated in the first session of the Educational Commission that his conception of the instructions of the General Conference was such that it was morally impossible for him to concur in any disposition of the Church's claims in Vanderbilt University, whether real or imaginary, which stopped short of their final transfer to the eight original patronizing Conferences, that they might pass upon them. We make this statement without intending to reflect upon the members of the Educational Commission, who took quite a different view from what we did of the meaning of the action taken by the last General Conference. More than this we do not care to say at present; but we stand ready to defend and maintain our position before the Methodist public, if it should become necessary for us to do so. We think, however, that there is little use in Southern Methodists wrangling over the question of how it was best to throw away what, figuratively speaking, there is every reason to believe was but a scraped and worthless bone.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. D. McCullough is in place at Iuka, Miss., his new charge, and has been given a cordial reception.

Rev. F. Mattbie, a local preacher of our Church who lives at Waldheim, La., is reported to be very sick at the Charity Hospital in this city.

Rev. E. G. Wood has been moved from the Pollock (La.) charge to Standard, La. He is pleased with his new field, and finds the work in it in a good condition.

At a meeting of the New Orleans preachers, which was held last Monday, it was announced that 134 members had been taken into the several churches of this city since the last Annual Conference.

Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Griffin celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary at their home, near Gulfport, Miss., on February 25. We wish them many happy returns of the anniversary of their marriage.

Among those who sent us appreciated lists of subscribers last week was Rev. W. N. Duncan, our brilliant young pastor at Holly Springs, Miss. The work of the Church is progressing favorably in that historic charge.

In a letter bringing us 6 subscriptions, Rev. T. L. Porter, pastor of the Eureka (Miss.) charge, says: "We are praying for a good year, and the outlook generally is encouraging. If we will do our part, the Lord is always certain to give us some measure of success."

Rev. A. J. Coburn, of Farmerville, La., says: "Our work is progressing nicely, and we are expecting the best year in the history of this charge." Brother Coburn is among those who are faithfully endeavoring to circulate the Conference organ among his parishioners.

In a personal note to the Editor, Rev. M. M. Black, of Canton, Miss., says: "I am glad to state that my work here is moving on encouragingly. I am having fine congregations and the attendance upon our weekly prayer meetings averages over forty. Twenty members have been received up to the present date."

We have on our table the Bulletin of the First M. E. Church, South, of Baton Rouge, La., for Sunday, February 21. Rev. C. A. Battle, the pastor, preached at 11 a. m. on "A Christian Man's Example." The splendid congregation which Brother Battle is serving is commendably active along all worthy lines of church work.

Rev. R. I. Collins, of Courtland, Miss., in a note to our office, states that Sister Collins has been quite ill for a month, but that she is now improving. Brother Collins has been considerably hindered in his work by her sickness, but notwithstanding this fact he is getting the affairs of his charge well in hand. We are grateful to him for remembering the interests of the Advocate among his many other duties.

Rev. H. M. Young, of Gunnison, Miss., gave us 6 subscriptions from his charge on February 15, and in his letter appended the following note: "I feel that the coming of the Conference organ to our charge will prove a blessing and inspiration. I love its face and always feel profited by its weekly messages. Our prospects in the Gunnison charge continue to grow brighter. The people are still delighting us with their generous gifts."

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, have sent us two or more subscriptions to the Advocate within the past few days: Rev. Geo. P. McKeown, Richton, Miss., 2; Rev. V. C. Curtis, Lexington, Miss., 5; Rev. G. W. Gordon, Chester, Miss., 7; Rev. A. W. Langley, Houlka, Miss., 6; Rev. M. M. Black, Canton, Miss., 6; Rev. J. B. Randolph, Kosclusko, Miss., 11; Rev. J. D. Simpson, Pickens, Miss., 5; Rev. E. M. Shaw, Benoit, Miss., 5.

The Editor of the Advocate was unavoidably absent from his office from Wednesday, February 17, until noon Tuesday, February 23, having been called to Memphis, Tenn., to attend a meeting of the Annual Conference Vanderbilt Commissioners and the General Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South. This will explain why there is not the usual amount of editorial matter from his pen in this issue of the Advocate.

Rev. H. S. Spragins, Rev. L. P. Wasson, and Rev. E. M. Shaw sent to our office last week notices of the death of Dr. H. L. Sutherland, of Benoit, Miss., which occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. R. B. Johnson, at Cleveland, Miss., on February 19, the cause of his decease being paralysis. Dr. Sutherland was the health officer of Bolivar County and one of the best known and best equipped physicians in Mississippi. He was a high-minded Christian gentleman and an irreproachable and widely useful citizen.

President H. G. Hawkins sends us the following note: "The Commencement Sermon of the Memphis Conference Female Institute will be preached on Sunday, May 9, by Rev. J. H. Felts of Corinth, Miss. The baccalaureate address at this institution will this year be delivered by Dr. J. E. Winston, Professor of History at the University of Mississippi. There are 16 candidates this session for diplomas in the literary department, 4 candidates for diplomas in the special departments of piano, expression, and voice, and one candidate for a certificate in art."

Writing under date of February 17, from Los Angeles, Calif., Bishop Waterhouse says: "I was struck by a piece of wood in splitting some kindling on January 21. I did not realize that there was any hurt of consequence until about three hours afterwood, but it put me on crutches and disqualified me for preaching at the time. I have been hard at work in my study, however, and am so much improved as to believe that I will be all right in a few days." We greatly regret to be informed of the Bishop's accident, but are happy to know that he is recovering from it. Bisbop Waterhouse expects to come East about the middle of March and will spend considerable time looking after the interests of the Church in North Mississippi during the weeks immediately following.

"Do the best you know, that you may know better."

The greatest soul is the one which, whatever it feels of pain from the slings and arrows of a spiteful world, spends no time or strength in avenging its wrongs, but goes on its way of usefulness and kindness, ever returning good for evil, and disarming cruelty by service, neglect by benediction.—Rev. T. W. Lund.

Christ went out of sight with an unfinished benediction upon his lips, "like the song of an ascending bird singing itself out of sight." The incomplete farewell indicates the certainty of his coming back. You have heard one-half of the sentence now—the other half you shall hear presently. "Even so come, Lord Jesus."—Dr. G. W. Bull.

As it was with the head, so it must be and has ever been with each of the living and abiding members: first, humiliation and suffering for love's sake; then blessedness and glory, still all of love: only in Christ our Head, these were all perfect and infinite; in each one of us His members, according to our measure of holiness and grace from him.—Keble.

Another saint has gone home. At the home of her son-in-law, Hon. R. B. Dawkins, at Ruston, La., on Jan. 31, 1915, Mrs. MARY BRUTON CARGILL, wife of J. C. Cargill passed to her reward. The deceased was a daughter of Rev. R. P. Bruton, and was from childhood a consistent Christian and a member of the M. E. Church, South. She was one of the most faithful workers that it has ever been the privilege of the writer to know. She was in the 70th year of her age, yet was active to the last and truly followed the example of her Lord, going about doing good. She leaves one sister, Miss Lou Bruton, one daughter, Mrs. R. B. Dawkins, two grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Although born in Mississippi, most of her life was spent in Farmerville, La., where she will be missed by all. She was laid to rest in the family plat, at Farmerville, La., to await the resurrection of the just. Her pastor,

A. J. COBURN.

On Dec. 22, 1914, the death angel removed from this life Sister MARY ELLA BOYKIN, who was born on Jan. 8, 1857, and in early life gave her heart to God and united with the Lutheran Church. She was married on Feb. 24, 1876, and the following summer removed her membership to the Methodist Church, of which she continued to be a consistent member till her death. She was the mother of 7 children, all living, who keenly feel the loss of their loving mother. Her husband preceded her to the better world. With a few words we may chronicle the mere facts of her life, but we could never hope to record her many acts of kindness and helpful deeds for others. It was her lot to suffer much during the last months of her life, but she bore it all with Christian fortitude and died in the full assurance of a glorious immortality. Her body was laid to rest in the New Prospect Cemetery, the writer conducting the funeral service, assisted by Rev. D. J. Miley. May her God be the God of her children, and his grace in their hearts sweeten every trial in their lives, while they look forward to a happy meeting by and by. Her pastor,

T. B. WINSTEAD.

On the morning of Jan. 23, 1915, the spirit of VIVIAN PEARCE GREEN, aged 21 years and 10 months, daughter of J. M. Green and S. Rose Pearce, left this earth for heaven. Everything that kind and loving hands could do, was done to prolong her life, but the Lord claimed her for his own. Early in life she joined the Epworth M. E. Church, South, and was ever ready to serve her Master, Church and friends in anyway she could. Miss Vivian was a young lady of sunny, lovable disposition, pure and sweet. As Sunday school and church organist her place was hard to fill, when, through her last illness, she was forced to retire from active work. For many months Miss Vivian was a patient sufferer, but during her long hours of suffering, her Bible and hymnal were a great comfort to her. While the end was not unexpected, it proved a shock to her many friends when the sad news was whispered around. Dressed in white, she looked the emblem of purity which her immortal spirit had that day assumed. She leaves to mourn her going a mother, father, two brothers and a sister. May the love of our God and his comfort be round about them in this time of their great trial.

Oh, heaven is a holy place,
And holy thou must be
If thou would'st enter there and dwell
Through all eternity.

For "blessed are the pure in heart,"
'Tis they their God shall see.
And walk with him in raiment white,
In blood-bought victory.

Would angels then tune loud their harps?
And Jesus say, 'Well done.'
Thou faithful servent enter in.
The eternal victory's won?"

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

SOLOMON TRAVIS GARRAWAY was born at Augusta, Perry County, Miss., on Dec. 10, 1857, and died at Richton, Perry County, Miss., on Jan. 28, 1915. The subject of this sketch was for many years a member of the Legislature from Perry County and served honorably and conscientiously the people who had elected him to office. But, we must not look to him only as a servant of the State, but as a servant of the Church as well. He was regularly a member of the District Conference, and a delegate to the session of the Mississippi Annual Conference which met at Columbia last December. As a man, a citizen, a Christian, he was known by his daily walk in honesty, truthfulness and integrity rather than by a vocal proclamation of these virtues. There was in him that innate dignity, manliness and reserve characteristic of the truly noble. His faith in God was evidenced by a correct life and faithfulness to duty; and when the summons came, suddenly though it was, there was evidence that he felt no fear in going to his reward. He was married in 1881 to Miss Emma Stevens at Augusta, Miss., who with three sons and one daughter survives him. To you, loved ones, is bequeathed an honored name, the legacy of a faithful and consecrated life. May you follow the God of your father. GEO. P. McKEOWN.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR
Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.
Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.
Now-a-days we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You must dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

From the Field.

Fayette, Miss.

Dear Doctor Meek: You have often heard the expression "I've been too busy to write," haven't you? Well, that fits me exactly. I thought that I had much to do while I was in college, but I didn't know what work really was until I came to Fayette. Scarcely have I had time to take a deep breath and the load gets heavier instead of lighter. It seems that no time is my own and the refrain of it all is work, work, work. Only an eye-witness could appreciate the reception we received on our arrival at this place and I shall not endeavor to describe it in the set, formal, language used by a preacher in speaking of his arrival at his new home. Suffice it to say that our reception was warm, hearty, and sincere—all that one could ask for. The opening weeks of this Conference year have been filled with promise, and I trust the Lord will bless us throughout the year as he has so graciously done in its beginning. The best results have been seen in our midweek prayer service. The first night we had 35 out. Last Wednesday night we had 70. I am pretty confident that not every church twice as large as ours in membership had as many. The people are talking it up and working for a greater interest in this important service. Pray for us. Then, too, I want to tell you about the "eat shop" the ladies of the church have been running for nine days during the session of court here last week and this. It was suggested as a plan to raise funds for reducing the indebtedness on the parsonage. It worked admirably and we cleared nearly $150. With what was already in hand and a private subscription to be raised by the men, we are confident of reducing the debt $300. Last, but not least by a long way, I have about two-thirds of my Conference Collections promised. That is not so bad for a beginner, now is it? This is my first regular work and I want to put in a full year's work for the Lord and follow it up every year that I am permitted to labor in his vineyard. I am planning to go to Conference with a clean sheet and get on the honor roll—everything in full. That is our motto over here and we've started out after the fleece. I will have some new subscriptions to send in next week.—M. F. Adams, P. C.

Pickens, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are beginning this, our fourth, year well. The people are showing their appreciation in many ways; and we are expecting this to be a great year with us. Our Sabbath schools are starting out better than usual, and we have two fine prayer meetings with a good attendance. At some of these services we have present as many as fifty or sixty. We lost by death at Pickens last year two of our strongest and best men; and it seemed to us that the power of the church would be paralyzed and we did not know how to proceed without them. But in the goodness of God one of our older leaders was spared to us, some of the young men are taking upon themselves a share in the work of the church, and others are feeling more than ever before their responsibility, so, while we feel that perhaps our loss has been greater than that of any other church in the Conference, we believe that the work of our church will still go on. We closed our work last year much better than we had expected, paying all claims in full with a small excess on Salary. Let me say right here that the minutes show us short six dollars on Education, but our assessment was $51, instead of $57, as shown in the minutes, and it was paid in full. These are a noble people who love God and the Church, and while they love all Christian people and Churches, they are true Methodists. We are praying that this our last year here may be the best. Bishop Shipman is beginning the new year well. He knows how to handle men, and has a way of doing things by love and gentleness that makes both preachers and people love him. Our success at this place is largely due to our band of noble women who are doing work that will abide. The Advocate is held in high esteem. We like the way it protects the Church.—J. D. Simpson, P. C.

TO PARENTS AND PASTORS.

I take pleasure in recommending to you a recent publication, "The Duty of Parents; or, The Training of Children, by Rev. I. L. Peebles, Wesson, Miss.; published by Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn. Price, 10 cents postpaid. Reader, if you are a father or mother, you will do well to send a dime at once to either the author or the publishers and get this book. You will find it a helpful agency in "bringing up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Get with it also "The Christian Home," a sermon, by Rev. George R. Stuart. The price is 10 cents. And pastors, you will render a much needed and great service by seeing that your people are supplied with these books and other kindred literature. You will find this work an effective agency in fulfilling the divine injunction to "feed my lambs," to "take heed to all the flock" (which includes the children), and your promise "to diligently instruct the children in every place." Let us all, who have charge of the children of to-day, be studious and prayerful that we may learn and be able to discharge our obligations.

HEALTH OF WOMEN WRECKED BY IGNORANCE

Avoid a Life of Misery and Ill Health By Using a Celebrated Physician's Favorite Prescription.

For every disease or ailment of a womanly character, no matter how recent or long-standing, the one sure, reliable remedy of proved merit is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Women should never experiment with unknown preparations; the risk is too great. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is prepared from nature's roots and herbs and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic.

Women are earnestly advised to take it for irregular or painful periods, backache, headache, displacement, catarrhal condition, hot flashes, sallow complexion and nervousness.

For girls about to enter womanhood, women about to become mothers and for the changing days of middle age Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription should always be on hand.

It's a temperance remedy that is extracted from roots with pure glycerine and its ingredients are published on wrapper.

Any medicine dealer can supply it in either liquid or tablet form. The cost is modest, the restorative benefits truly remarkable. Write Dr. Pierce, Invalid's Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for free confidential medical advice.—Adv.

A RADIANT DAY FOR HER.

We have just heen reading of a young girl of sixteen years, living in the country at a distance from the church, which made attendance irregular, who read on a Sahhath the memoir of a Christian woman. On closing the volume she said to herself: "That was a heautiful life." And after a little thought she added: "And I should like to live such a life." A few minutes later she kneit down and said: "Lord, I will try from this time." The decision was made. She went on steadily and is still a useful and influential Christian woman, honored and beloved and widely known for her beautiful and devout character.—Author unknown.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

The Sunday School.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, our pastor in the University City of Oxford, reports a Teacher-training class doing solid work.

Sardis is leading the good stations with a Teacher-training class of 21 members. Dr. H. G. Henderson is teacher, Miss May Belle Taylor, president, Mrs. James Henderson, secretary, and Miss Evelyn Carlton, treasurer. The class meets on Friday afternoons in the pastor's study.

Holly Springs is in line with the other progressive schools. The few points they lack in coming up to the standard of efficiency will soon be made. Mrs. L. G. Fant has one of the hest Primary Departments to he found anywhere. Mrs. W. N. Duncan, Mrs. R. A. Tucker, Miss Ethel Butt, and Miss Ione Mansker, each have organized classes that are reaching out after others. Mrs. Ed. Mosby has promised to help to organize a Homc Department, and thus the good work goes on.

Corinth has long heen headquarters for high class Sunday school work. This school lacks one point of coming up to the standard of efficiency, and by the time this is in print this fine school will possibly be at the top.

Saltillo is proud of her new hrick church, of her fine choir, and of her excellent preacher. This church has not long heen having her own school, but they are making progress against healthy competition. We will watch Saltillo with keen interest.

Verona is another church where they have a live superintendent. Here is what he says: "Give us a little more time and we will take our stand along with the best schools in the Aberdeen District." Amen.

We all know it is no new thing for Tupelo to be doing the best class of work, but even Tupelo lacks one point of heing a standard school. With the gifted Park in the lead, and the model superintendent, J. H. Ledyard a close second, this truly fine school will soon throw out her standard banner for others to follow.

Some may ask the question, "How do you start a Home Department?" The first thing to do is to study the helps thoroughly. All the cards, envelopes, huttons and the paraphanalia of this department should he used. Advertise, and then advertise some more; keep the work before the public. "But after you have organized, how do you keep it going?" Here are the three rules: Pray it up, pray it on, pray it through. God is to win the world through people that will let him.

THE COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The determining factor in the future welfare of our great government is the country Sunday school. This statement, strong as it may seem, is not made without mature thought, and to it the attention of every pastor and Sunday school superintendent is most earnestly directed, especially those who are in the rural sections. Three facts will he mentioned in as brief a manner as is possible emphasizing the above assertion:

1. It is too well known to call for more than the mere statement that the vice, squalor, and ignorance of our land is largely in our cities. There are to he found our criminal classes of every degree, and our houses of ill fame with all their baneful influences. Here the wily, unscrupulous politician gets in his work, and not only jeopardizes hut too frequently blocks or circumvents the enforcement of laws. These facts are too well known to call for more at this time.

2. The young people of our land are trooping into our cities hy the thousands and hundreds of thousands. They are going into our cities as they think they are, not as they really are. Attracted by the glitter and gloss, the hlare of trumpets and uniformed parades, they step into the maelstrom of iniquity all unprepared. Thousands of them go down never to rise again. Who make up the criminals of this country? Seventy-five per cent of them are young men. Who make up the tramps of this country? A policeman a few years ago who had had large experience with this roving class of humanity when asked this question answered laconically "Young men—all of them." Who make up the inmates of our houses of ill fame? Ask Miss Jane Addams of Hull House fame, and she will tell you "Young women—all of them." Where do these hordes of young criminals come from? Thousands and tens of thousands of them from our rural sections, swept off their feet by the rush of city life to which they are strangers.

It is nothing uncommon for city pastors to receive from their hrethren in the rural sections and from parents letters asking them to look after a boy or girl who has gone from the quiet, country home into the rush of city life. In every instance the city pastor attempts to comply with the request. Sometimes he can get in touch with the young person, sometimes he cannot. It has heen noted that in almost every instance where he has heen ahle to render help, it has been to those who have come from a Sunday school or from a home where there was a family altar. Is not this suggestive?

3. The third point to which attention is respectfully called is that Dr. Josiah Strong, the author of "The Challenge of the City," "Our Country," etc., states that in 1800 there were only 8 cities in the United States having 8000 inhahitants or over, while in 1900 there were 545. In 1800 less than 4 per cent of our population lived in our cities, while in 1900 33 per cent of our population was urban. He then says, "If the rate of the movement of population from country to city hetween 1890 and 1900 continues until 1940, there will he then in the United States 21,000,000 more people in our cities than outside of them. * * * The cities will then no longer accept limitations from the State, but when they become fully conscious of their power, will take into their hands not only their own affairs but also those of the State and nation." Accepting Dr. Strong's conclusions, we have only one generation in which to send into our cities forty millions of young people who have had training in our rural Sunday schools, thus enahling our over burdened and oftentimes overworked conscientious city pastors to conserve them to the Church and so give to the population of our cities a Christian conscience.

Is there one who is prepared to say, That is pessimism? Well, let it be remembered it is not pessimism to look facts in the face and prepare for emergencies which are possible, though the prohability be remote. Utterances from such an authority as Dr. Strong are worthy of careful consideration hefore being discarded. Here is the strongest possihle plea which can be made for a Sunday school in every country church even though it he small. Let us have them by all means. Again quoting Dr. Strong on this same suhject, "Burying one's head in the sand never yet averted danger."

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. TO THE MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

From its organization it has been the policy of the Educational Commission to take the Church into its entire confidence and to acquaint it with all its proceedings, and, in this spirit it has, at its previous meetings, issued communications or addresses, detailing its actions and progress. The meeting called at Memphis for the 19th and 20th of February was largely for the purpose of conference with the Commissioners appointed by the original patronizing Conferences of the Vanderbilt University, with the view of complying with the instructions contained in the resolutions of the General Conference creating this body. All the commissioners from said several Conferences except one, were present, and an all-day joint meeting with them was held on the 19th, at which the instructions given and the duties imposed on the respective bodies by the General Conferences were freely discussed. With a view to determining what, if any, right or title, or control over, or interest in, Vanderbilt University, the General Conference has heretofore had, and what rights it could authorize this Commission to transfer or assign in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, and subsequent events, the Commission had procured the opinions hereinafter referred to.

By Article Second of the action taken by the General Conference respecting Vanderbilt University, this Commission was given full power and authority and was directed to transfer and reconvey unto the patronizing Conferences, namely, the Tennessee, Memphis, North Mississippi, Little Rock, Arkansas, White River, North Alabama and Louisville, all right, title, interest and authority over and control in said University, that the General Conference, as such, has or may have by virtue of the resolutions of conveyance to it adopted by the Annual Conferences in and to the property, rights of supervision and control or confirmation of the members of the Board of Trust of said University. And by Article Seventh it was provided that in case it be found impossible to effect this transfer then this Commission was authorized and instructed to take such steps as, in its opinion, might be necessary to preserve and defend the interests and honor of the Church.

For the guidance and advice of the Commission in the exercise of its power and authority in the performance of its duties in the premises two disinterested and learned attorneys, Hon. Andrew J. Cobb of Georgia, and Hon. Amistead Brown of Alabama, were engaged to investigate the subject and examine the questions and to render the Commission their opinions whether, under the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the Vanderbilt case, there remained any possibility of bringing a successful action in the Federal Courts, or any other court, to establish any right, title, claim or interest in the Church or in the patronizing Conferences to the ownership and control of the University. Each of these distinguished lawyers, acting independently of the other, furnished a written opinion to the Commission in which both came to the conclusion:

First—That the General Conference was virtually a party to and was, in effect, before the Court in the Vanderbilt Case.

Second—That a final judgment pronounced by a competent court estops and concludes parties and privies.

Third—That such a judgment concludes all rights, questions and claims which were directly in issue, as well as all matters following by necessary inference, from the judgment.

Fourth—That the patronizing Conferences are in privity with the General Conference, and, as assignee, could have no greater rights than the General Conference itself.

Fifth—That on all the issues involved in the Vanderbilt case there is a final decree; and all the parties to the suit, and those in privity with them, or represented by them, are estopped and concluded from reopening the controversy in any court anywhere.

Sixth—That neither at the instance of the General Conference, nor the patronizing Conferences, could a Federal Court entertain jurisdiction, because (a) for the reasons aforesaid, (b) for the reason that there would be no diverse citizenship of parties, and (c) for the reason that there would be no question arising under either the Constitution or the laws of the United States.

Seventh—That even if diverse citizenship and a Federal question were involved, the controversy could not be reopened, because the decree rendered by the Supreme Court of Tennessee is (a) a final adjudication, and (b) it is a construction of a charter and of certain statutory laws of Tennessee, and, in such cases, the Federal courts are bound by, and follow, that construction and application which are given to State laws by the highest Court of the State.

Eighth—That the entire Vanderbilt controversy revolving around and being dependent upon certain laws of the State of Tennessee and certain contracts made on the faith of these laws, a Federal Court would follow the decision of the Tennessee Court.

Ninth—That the Supreme Court of Tennessee adjudicated practically every question which was, or could be, with good reason, raised in regard to the controversy; and, as these findings are made the basis of the decree, they cannot now be successfully reopened.

And it inevitably follows from these opinions—

Tenth—That there is no right, title or interest which this Commission can transfer to the patronizing Conferences, and that the execution and delivery of any instrument of transfer would be ineffective to pass anything.

In the light of these decisions thus epitomized, and in view of the fact that the only relation between the Church and Vanderbilt University recognized by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, was the qualified right to confirm new Trustees, which qualified right that Court expressly held arose out of contract only with the General Conference, after the transfers to it by the original patronizing Conferences, and in view of the further fact that since the last General Conference the Trustees of Vanderbilt University, acting under the advice of counsel, expressly refused to recognize further any contractual relations that may have theretofore existed under the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, the Commission determined that it was powerless to transfer anything whatever to the original patronizing Conferences. The decision of the Supreme Court was to the effect that no right ever existed other than the qualified right of confirmation of Trustees, vested in the General Conference by contract with the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, which was conditioned on continued co-operation by the Church, and which the General Conference was without power to convey, or authorized to be conveyed to the patronizing Conferences, or to any one else except with the consent of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust.

In the conference with the Commissioners from the patronizing Conferences all these difficulties were discussed and fully recognized by such Commissioners, who, for the most part, if not unanimously, agreed with the Educational Commission that nothing of value could be probably transferred to them, but expressed a willingness to take whatever transfer might be tendered them by the Educational Commission. This Commission could have gone through with the mere physical execution of a form of transfer, but no possible title to property, and no possible right or thing of value would or could have been transferred; yet the mere execution of a transfer might have created in the minds of some of the members of the patronizing Conferences not familiar with the facts that valuable rights were passed to such patronizing Conferences, and this right might have led to further agitation and even litigation, calculated to bring the Church into disrepute. The Commission, therefore, having unanimously concluded that they were powerless to convey anything whatever to the patronizing Conferences, and recognizing that the responsibility rested upon them, and that it should be borne by them rather than shifted to the Commissioners from the patronizing Conferences, decided that it did not comport with the honor or dignity of the Church to do a vain thing, and, therefore, passed the following resolution:

"Whereas, by action of the General Conference this Commission was instructed to re-transfer to the original patronizing Conferences all the rights heretofore vested in and held by the General Conference in and to Vanderbilt University, which transfer was to be effected through Commissioners from said several patronizing Conferences, said instruction being limited only by paragraph seven of the resolution creating this Commission, to the effect that if this body should find it impossible to accomplish the transfer, then it should take 'such steps as in their opinion may be necessary to preserve and defend the interests and the honor of the Church'; and

"Whereas the said several original patronizing Conferences have appointed Commissioners to act in co-operation with this Commission, and such Conference Commissioners have met with this body in joint session; and

"Whereas it appears from the instructions given by a majority of said patronizing Conferences to their respective commissions that said majority of said patronizing Conferences are unwilling to assume or maintain any relation to Vanderbilt University except that of ownership and control, and

"Whereas this body has obtained opinions from two distinguished and disinterested attorneys, that the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee is conclusive against any character of ownership of Vanderbilt University by the Church, or said patronizing Conferences, and to the effect that none of the matters heretofore in controversy, and covered by the decision of said Supreme Court of Tennessee, can be again put in issue either in Federal or State Courts, which opinions so interpreting the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee are concurred in by all of the members of this Commission; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this Commission finds itself wholly without power to convey or transfer anything whatever to said original patronizing Conferences, as instructed, but finds that it is "impossible to effect this transfer," in the meaning of paragraph seven above mentioned; and, so believing, the Commission is unwilling to stultify itself by the execution of a useless form of transfer, and is further unwilling to authorize the institution of any further suit or suits by the patronizing Conferences, or any of them, or the expenditure of any money in futile litigation, believing that by such course 'it will best preserve and defend the interest and honor of the Church,' and put an end to all further controversy of every character pertaining to Vanderbilt University; but, in so doing, the Commission desires to voice a final protest against the manipulations by which Vanderbilt University has been lost to the Church."

The Commission feels that the adoption of this resolution forever puts an end to its connection with the "Vanderbilt controversy," and believes that the membership of the Church at large will fully indorse this action when understood, and will rejoice that the efforts of the Church will now be unitedly directed toward the building of the two great Universities at Atlanta and Dallas, to be forever owned and controlled by the Church. The success of these institutions, promised and attained, shows what an aroused Methodism is capable of doing, and leads us almost to believe that the Vanderbilt case, which at first seemed to involve injury to the Church, now, under Providence, promises to redound to its benefit. Fraternally,

NOTICE TO DELEGATES TO CORINTH IN MARCH.

The names of all delegates to the Annual Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, which meets at Corinth, Miss., March 25-29, must be sent at as early a date as possible to Mrs. S. F. Riley, Corinth, Miss.

An Executive Session of the Conference is called for Thursday morning, March 25, and a meeting of the District Secretaries for the Monday after the adjournment of the Conference.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE,
President.

A LETTER TO THE WOMEN OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Co-Laborers: At our annual meeting held at Aberdeen last June, the time for the annual session of 1915 was fixed for early spring. (The reason for this action can be found by referring to our annual report.) Itta Bena had no delegate at this meeting, and consequently did uot know about this change, when her invitation was extended and accepted. She found it impossible to entertain us before June, consequently we had to find another meeting place, and Corinth most graciously consented to entertain us. Official notice has already been given out that we will meet there March 25-29.

We are planning to make of this meeting a great inspirational occasion as well as a practical working Conference. An executive session is called for 9 o'clock a. m. March 25, and then at 2:30 p. m. we will go into the formal organization of the Conference. A meeting of District Secretaries is called to follow immediately after the adjournment of the annual session on Monday the 29th, consequently it is important for delegates to be on time for the opening service and remain until the close. THE REPORTS FROM DELEGATES WILL BE CALLED FOR, and Friday morning has been set apart for this feature of the program. We hope that every auxiliary in the Confereuce will send TWO delegates, and recommend that auxiliary presidents he sent as delegates where possible.

Never was it more imperative that every auxiliary be represented in the annual meeting than at this time. Our women do not fuliy understand the administration of our work under the new order, and our Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary are oppressed with a burden of work too heavy for them to carry, therefore it is imperative that our women come together in this annual meeting before the close of the first quarter of 1915, learn all about the new order of things, and relieve this congestion of work in the office of the Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary, which is caused by the fact that our women do not understand how to report their work correctly, and also by a failure to report it at ali.

We realize that we are in the midst of a great financial depression, hut we are blessed above aii nations of the earth to-day, and it is the real testing time of the Church of God. Our missionaries at home and abroad will suffer unless they are amply provided for, therefore let us deny ourselves of every luxury and measure up to the obiigations resting upon us. In no way can funds be hetter invested NOW than by sending deiegates to this annual meeting. We realize that the distance is great and that the trip will he an expensive one for delegates from the Southern part of our Conference; but a better investment could not be made of the money required to send delegates to this meeting. We regret the conditions which caused us to change our piace of meeting from the delta, and now ask for the privilege of meeting in some delta town in 1916.

Send names of delegates to Mrs. S. F. Riley, Chairman of Entertainment Committee, Corinth, Miss., at as early a date as possible. Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will address the Conference on the first evening. Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Educational Secretary of the General Board of Missions, will deliver the annual sermon and administer the Sacrament on Sunday; Mrs. R. W. McDonnell, Home Department Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Council, will deliver an address on Saturday evening, and then another one on Sunday evening. Miss Ethel Goiding, at present principai of the school in the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, Miss., will attend this meeting as an applicant for the foreign scholarship owned by our Conference in the Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, Missouri. The delegates will have the opportunity of visiting the Co-operative Boarding Home, established in Corinth hy our deaconess, Miss Mary Daniel, for the working giris of the town. If you have had a member to die since June last, please send name and date of death to Mrs. M. C. Guerry, Artesia, Miss.

It gives me pleasure to send this, my first direct communication to the auxiliaries.

Pray for a gracious outpouring of God's Hoiy Spirit upon our meeting.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE,
President.

Tupelo, Miss., Feh. 15, 1915.

SIX MILLION UNEVANGELIZED WOMEN.

Of the thirty-four graduates of the Lambuth Memoriai Bible Woman's Training School, Kobe, Japan, twenty-two are now working as evangelists, five are wives of preachers, five are married to Christian laymen, one is studying in the Woman's University at Tokyo, and one is at home with her mother. Social conditions are such in Japan that the sending of these young women out after graduation without missionary women to supervise them is attended with the very gravest dangers. The efficiency of these women would be more than trebied by the wise leadership of godly woman missionaries. Is it possibie that we look to our Church in America in vain for such women? is it really known and has it sunk down into our consciousness that there are 6,600,000 unevangelized women in the ten provinces in which the Japan Mission of the M. E. Church, South, works? Surely this is not known or eise it has not taken hoid of our Church, for we believe there would be a quick and hearty response to so great a need. We have now only two single woman evangeiistic missionaries for this great task.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Saiiow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid iiver and ciogged boweis, which cause your stomach to become fiiled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swiii barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foui gases, bad breath, yeliow skin, mentai fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night wiii give your constipated boweis a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

CALOMEL IS MERCURY! IT SICKENS! ACTS ON LIVER LIKE DYNAMITE

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and Doesn't Salivate or Make You Sick.

Listen to me! Take no more sickening, salivating calomel when bilious or constipated. Don't lose a day's work!

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and boweis constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful tonight and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT.

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

URIC ACID SOLVENT

For Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble

50 Cent Bottle (32 Doses) FREE

Just because you start the day worried and tired, stiff legs and arms and muscles, an aching head, burning and bearing down pains in the back—worn out before the day begins, do not think you have to stay in that condition.

Those sufferers who are in and out of bed half a dozen times at night will appreciate the rest, comfort and strength this treatment gives. For any form of bladder trouble or weakness, its action is really wonderful.

Be strong, well and vigorous, with no more pains from stiff joints, sore muscles, rheumatic suffering, aching back, or kidney or bladder troubles.

To prove The Williams Treatment conquers kidney and bladder diseases, rheumatism and all uric acid troubles, no matter how chronic or stubborn, if you have never used The Williams Treatment, we will give one 50c bottle (32 doses) free if you will cut out this notice and send it with your name and address, with 10c to help pay distribution expenses, to The Dr. D. A. Williams Company, Dept. 650, New P. O. Building, East Hampton, Conn. Send at once and you will receive by parcel post a regular 50c bottle (32 doses), without charge and without incurring any obligations. One bottle only to a family or address.

If we could live more in sight of heaven, we should care less for the turmoil of earth.—John Richard Green.

Whole Family Benefited By Wonderful Remedy

There are many little things to annoy us, under present conditions of life. The hurry, hard work, noise and strain all tell on us and tend to provoke nervousness and irritability. We are frequently so worn out we can neither eat, sleep nor work with any comfort. We are out of line with ourselves and others as well.

A good thing to do under such circumstances is to take something like to relieve the strain on the nerves. Mrs. J. B. Hartsfield, 82 Plum St., Atlanta Ga., writes:

"I have on several occasions been vastly relieved by the use of your medicines, especially the Anti-Pain Pills, which I keep constantly on hand for the use of myself, husband and two sons. Nothing in the world equals them as a headache remedy. Often I am enabled by the use of one or two of the Pills to continue my housework when otherwise I would be in bed. My husband joins me in my praise of the Anti-Pain Pills and Nervine."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

are relied upon to relieve pain, nervousness and irritability in thousands of households. Of proven merit after twenty years' use, you can have no reason for being longer without them.

At all Druggists, 25 doses 25 cents.

ORPHANAGE DAY.

To Louisiana Methodists.

We wish to remind you that by the action of the recent session of the Louisiana Annual Conference held in Shreveport, the assessment for the Orphanage was taken off the Conference. Easter Sunday was by unanimous consent made "Orphanage Day," and this, with a "Work Day" in the fall, will be the only opportunity given our people to contribute to our Orphanage work, except as the Superintendent can visit a few of the charges of the Conference and make public appeals for help. It is therefore of vital importance to our Orphanage that every church and Sunday school in the Conference begin now to plan to make a strong, united effort for the Orphanage on April 4—Easter Sunday.

We now have 99 children in the Orphanage. This has been a long, cold winter and our expenses have been unusually heavy. But little money has come in since Conference, and our funds are distressingly low. It will take at least $5000 to enable us to meet our obligations and carry us through the dull summer months. Easter Sunday is our only chance to raise this money. It is imperative, therefore, that our people be given the opportunity to help our cause at this appointed time.

While we have had a severe winter, the health of our children has been remarkably good. Except for one severe case of inflamatory rheumatism and one operation for appendicitis, we have had no sickness to speak of. The children have made fine records in school and are making steady progress in their education and development.

The most distressing fact that faces us is the almost daily appeals that come by mail, over the telephone and in almost every way for us to take more children. It seems that the cry for help was never more pitiful or distressing. We are struggling to help every case possible—but when all our room is occupied and we are already crowded, when we have no funds in sight to care for these we already have, what are we to do?

Again I plead for the united effort of all our people. Let every preacher, every Sunday school superintendent and Christian worker in our great Church begin to talk and plan for a great effort on Easter Sunday and secure the needed funds, so that our children and our cause will not suffer.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,

LAID TO REST.

The following is from the Commercial Appeal of Feb. 14:

"The people of Starkville, Miss., and community, regardless of denominational beliefs, assembled this afternoon at the First Methodist Church to pay a last and sad tribute to the memory of Mrs. Lutie Lipscomb, wife of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, pastor of the M. E. Church, South. Her death occurred on Saturday evening after a very short illness and was a sad shock to the numerous friends, who had learned to so deeply love her noble and womanly beauties of character. Such sadness and sympathy never before prevailed in this city. The service was conducted by Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. S. Harrison, two of the oldest members of the North Mississippi Methodist Conference, assisted by Rev. E. G. Mohler, of Artesia, and Revs. Brown of the Presbyterian Church and Jordan of the Baptist Church. It was solemn and deeply touching and of the vast assembly but few eyes were dry of tears. Miss Jerome Sage presided at the organ. The floral tributes constituted an immense embankment of beautiful and fragrant flowers, emblematic of the sweet life that had been wafted from earthly cares into an Eternal Father's mansion. Two weeks ago Mrs. Lipscomb, in talking to one of her children, told him that when she died she desired that the hymn, "He Knows It All," be sung at the funeral, little dreaming that her end was so near. According to her request the choir rendered it in a sweet and low melody.

The funeral cortege procceded to the Union Depot, from where, accompanied by friends and the family, the remains were carried to Columbus, where on to-morrow the interment will occur. The deceased leaves a husband and five little children."

A note from Brother Lipscomb states that Mrs. Scott, of Hollandale, Miss., the mother of Sister Lipscomb and the grandmother of his children, will live with him and that his family will be kept together.

NOTICE.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, Louisiana Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will hold its annual meeting on March 3, 4, and 5 at First Church, New Orleans. Miss Bennett, Council President, will be with us at that time, and her addresses are always helpful and inspiring.

Those interested in the work of the Missionary Society should attend these meetings, and to those who may not be interested in the work of the Society they would have a special value.

The ladies of our churches are urged to be present and to invite their friends, both for the personal benefit to be derived and to help make the annual meeting the success that it may and should be.

Editorial

"With thoughts of Christ and things divine, Fill up this foolish heart of mine."

* * *

It is highly culpable for one to remain silent when duty demands that one should speak out. Many a worthy cause and deserving person have been shamefully betrayed by sealed lips that should have spoken.

* * *

The Holy Spirit is our greatest teacher, and the inspired Scriptures are his text-book. He does not come to make new and different revelations of truth, but to take the things of Christ and show them unto us.

* * *

The surrendered life is the fruitful life. It is when we belong wholly to Jesus that we can accomplish the most for him. The reason of this is because it is into the emptied vessel that "the power from above," by which spiritual achievements are wrought, can be most largely poured. Vehicles through whom this might of God can operate are the crying need of the Church.

* * *

There is little value in the Church ownership of schools unless it is exercised in a way to make them fit places for the training of our youth. There is nothing in a mere name or relation. We shall fall far short of our duty if we fail to make our institutions of learning pronouncedly religious. Higher criticism, smokers, theatricals, etc., are no better in a Church college than they are in a private or State school.

* * *

Every Christian, no matter how obscure his sphere, has an opportunity to do a work that will outlive the stars. To save a soul is to achieve a result that will produce joy among the angels on high, and which may endure throughout eternity. And to upbuild one's own character, or that of a fellow-disciple, is to rear a structure that will last when the earth itself shall have crumbled into ruins. In the face of such inspiring possibilities, why should any follower of Jesus stand idle, or waste his time upon the things that soon must perish?

* * *

It is stated that Miss Helen Keller who was born blind, deaf and dumb, but who has learned to talk and who now delivers lectures, is having her voice systematically trained and that she yet hopes to be able to sing. A finer illustration of what may be done by an unconquerable will and persistent effort can scarcely be found in the world's history than that furnished by the achievements of this remarkable young woman. What she has accomplished ought to be both a rebuke and an encouragement to persons who, because of comparatively light afflictions, are disposed to give up to despair and act upon the theory that they can do nothing in life. As a matter of fact, from among the unfortunate and suffering ones on earth have come many of the choicest spirits and largest contributors to the upbuilding of society that the race has produced.

FANNIE J. CROSBY.

The death of Fannie J. Crosby, the sweet singer of American Methodism, which, as has already been stated in the Advocate, occurred in her home at Bridgeport, Ct., on February 12, 1915, has been widely noticed by the press of the Nation, both religious and secular. She was born at South East, Putman County, New York, March 24, 1820; so it will be seen that she lacked but little of being ninety-five years of age. She became blind when about six weeks old. She evinced poetic talent when very young, writing her first poem at the age of eight years. She was educated at the Institution for the Blind in New York City, and in 1844 published a volume, entitled "The Blind Girl and Other Poems," and another, "Monterey and other Poems," in 1849. In 1851 she was happily converted, and joined the old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York City. In 1858 she was married to Mr. Alexander Van Alstyne, an accomplished musician who, like herself, was blind. The same year her third volume of poems, "A Wreath of Columbia's Flowers," was issued.

As a hymn writer, Miss Crosby was the most prolific that the world has had since the time of Charles Wesley and Isaac Watts, if indeed in this respect she did not surpass even those great sons of song. She had for several years a contract with Biglow and Main to write three hymns every week, and it is estimated that the total number of her hymns was more than eight thousand. Among the best known of these, are "Saved by Grace," "Blessed Assurance, Jesus Is Mine," "Rescue the Perishing," "I am Thine, O Lord," "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross," "I Shall See Him Face to Face," and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus." The latter is said to have been Miss Crosby's favorite. In 1898 from the same fertile pen another book, "Bells at Evening and Other Poems," was brought forth from the press, and still another, "Memories of Eighty Years," was given to the public in 1906.

The life of Miss Crosby was certainly a beautiful and useful one. Though she did not begin to write sacred songs until she was past forty years of age, she sang her way into an earthly immortality, and her tomb will be a Mecca for Methodists and other religious pilgrims from all over the world, as long as time shall last. And who can measure the tremendous reach of her influence on earth, or conceive of the richness of her reward in heaven? Nor can any one tell how much her severe affliction contributed to the making of her noble character, or to the development of her holy and blessed ministry to millions of human hearts. The blinded eyes, which here could not see, have now doubtless looked upon the King in his beauty, and the glories of the Beulah land which she so often glimpsed by faith and of which she so sweetly sang, are now no doubt to her enrapturing realities.

The following beautiful testimony from her own lips, now forever closed to human ears on earth, furnished the key to the contentment and serenity of soul which were so characteristic of this stricken saint:

"As for my age, it doesn't seem to me that I am in the nineties, and I attribute my good health and long life to the fact that I never let anything trouble me, and to my implicit faith, my implicit trust, in my Heavenly Father's goodness. If I didn't get the thing I wanted to-day, well, I'd get it to-morrow. If not then, I realized that it wasn't good for me have it. * * *

"In the case of my own loss of sight, I can see how the Lord permitted it. He didn't order it; he permitted it. You know, it happened when I was about six weeks old. I caught a cold in my eyes, and in the absence of our family physician my mother took me to another near my home who, as it afterward turned out, had no right to be practicing. He ordered poulticing, his instructions were followed, and my sight was totally destroyed. Now the Lord didn't order that. The man broke a law of nature. Instead of regarding it as an affliction, I have always thought of it as one of the greatest blessings ever conferred on me, for it carried out God's plan."

SITE OF THE NEW UNIVERSITY.

We take the following from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate (Atlanta) of February 26:

"The exact location of the Emory University has been announced. It is at Clifton Street and the North Decatur road—just beyond the Druid Hills tract of land. The site contains seventy-five acres and is near enough to the water and sewer pipes in Druid Hills to make the cost of extending them to the University buildings very small. The campus is just beyond the terminus of the street car line, but the tracks will be extended to the grounds by the street railway authorities. This extension will bring the campus of the university within a few minutes' ride to the center of Atlanta. The site is an admirable one."

This is gratifying news. Now that it is definitely settled that the Church is to have no official relation, either real or nominal, with Vanderbilt University, it behooves Southern Methodists everywhere to address themselves energetically to the task of building up the two new institutions that have been projected in Atlanta and Dallas. We are pleased to note in the Wesleyan Advocate that the construction of the buildings of the former will likely begin in the spring. The work of getting the Dallas institution ready to open its doors next fall is being energetically pushed, and there seems to be little doubt that success will crown these efforts. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has no notion of allowing herself to be driven from the field of higher education.

OUR GREATEST CLIENT.

It is announced that a great legal battle will soon be started to set Harry Thaw free from the Matteawan asylum in New York. There may be some difference of opinion as to who is the greatest lawyer that our country has produced, but doubtless all will agree that young Mr. Thaw is the best client.

LIFE'S LITTLE DAY.

By Mary Ella Cornell.

(With slight adaptations may be sung to the tune of "A PERFECT DAY.")

When we come to the end of life's little day,
And the sunset is drawing nigh,
Then the Father will call for his children all,
To be judged at his throne on high,
We must each one appear—will it be in fear
Of a Judge with a frowning face?
Or will Christ say, "Come, you are welcome home;
Have no fear, you are saved by grace?"

Though the end of life's day may seem far away,
It is nearer, perchance, than we think;
Will you longer roam from your Father's home?
You are standing on ruin's brink.
Christ has stretched his hand from the heavenly land,
It is scarred with the cruel nails,
He is calling you, he is wooing you,
With a love that never fails.

There's an hour that is known to our God alone
That shall come to us every one;
But you'll know not a fear as that time draws near,
When your life's little day is done,
If you've given your love to our God above,
To the one who for you has died;
Then the darkest night will as day be light,
For the Christ will be at your side.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

By Newell Dwight Hillis.

Gone the City of Jerusalem and the golden age for Galilee! The multitudes that once gathered upon the sea shore have dissolved, and the voice of the master musician is silent. Gone all the rulers, and soldiers and priests and peasants! Gone, too, the women and the little children, who, in their day, questioned themselves as to what they thought about Jesus. The Twentieth Century has come, and a new western civilization has arisen. But to the great ones of the earth and the lesser ones of the land, day by day, comes this question, What think ye of Christ? Once more he stands in the legislative hall, teaching men justice and truth. Still he walks in the market place, and often in the Temple he lifts the scourge to drive out the money changers. For those who have eyes to see he climbs the garret steps into the reeking tenements, and oft he makes his way to the jails where most of the inmates are little boys in their teens, and asks society how we could have made such images of himself. And sometimes at midnight, in the dark streets, where the daughters of beauty and the faded flowers wander, Jesus goes, with wet locks, abroad upon his mission of recovery. He lifts his hand, to the young girl's arm, looks hope into her young eyes, and sheds pity upon her broken heart. He speaks no word of blame, because she was lured astray by those who gave into her hand a cup of flame. Something tells her that his murmuring lips are saying, "Neither do I condemn thee, my child; go and sin no more." And then he points her eyes toward the stars and whispers that she must not be afraid or ashamed, and adds: "To-morrow, yonder, God will yet wear thee, my child, like a red rose, upon his heart!" To little children he comes, teaching them how to subject their minds and hearts to their parents. To men, who in middle life have been overtaken by failure, to all who are out in the storm and the black night and the turmoil, he comes with the lessons of his own defeat and tragedy. To the patriot and the teacher who feel that their work has failed, and the truth they have sown has been seed that is forgotten he comes, pointing to the day when those who sow in tears shall reap in joy. In this hour he stands here a silent and invisible figure beside each disciple, keeping watch above his own. Why, then, should you be weary and heavy laden when he offers rest and peace? Why should you now fear anxiety in this hour when you are out in the storm and the yeasty sea, when in a moment he can bring calm unto all waves, and a harbor after all the dangers of the open sea? Why should you fear death, when he is the door into the other room and immortal life? For the broken-hearted; for the lonely and desolate; for those who are pursued by pitiless fear; for all who have been defeated and despoiled and left prostrate like the flowers in the corn after the tornado has passed; for those who have been poisoned by grief, torn by remorse and wounded by sin there is medicine and hope, recovery and happiness. Lift up your eyes. Yonder, upon the horizon, stands a great, dear presence. His arms are outstretched, his heart is full of compassion, his words are pity and love. Oh, kneel before him! One touch, and lo! all the grievous wounds of life are forever healed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE VICISSITUDES OF LIFE.

By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D.

"Thy faithfulness reacheth even unto the clouds."—Psalm xxxvi. 5.

And is there anything more fickle and changeable than the clouds? The transformation of their outline is continual. If we try to sketch a cloud, it is almost gone before our materials are ready. So fleeting is the form that we can watch the swift transition. And yet these ephemeral presences are here chosen to express the faithfulness of God. Clouds are not the creation of caprice. They are not shaped by chance temperature, or by lucky and unlucky winds and tempests. In all their fickleness there is an abiding purpose. In the apparent chaos there is an established throne. Every transformation obeys a sovereign rule. "His faithfulness reacheth even unto the clouds."

Life, too, is full of vicissitudes. Our circumstances are as changeable as the clouds. Everything is in flux. We are never really "settled;" a radiant circumstance suddenly melts like a fleecy cloud, and another circumstance appears full of dark menace and frown. "Change and decay in all around I see." And yet the swift and almost fierce transitions are bound together by an invisible bond of divine faithfulness. They are more than a chain; they are the highway of grace. Through all the many coils and complications of an Alpine rope there runs the unbroken red strand which betokens its genuineness and strength. And through all the complicated web of the believer's circumstances, with their swiftly changing patterns, there runs the enduring strand of divine fidelity, the blood-red strand of sacrificial love and care.

And thus our changing lot is the home of the unchanging God. One purpose pervades the passing seasons. It links together spring-time and winter, and sunshine and shower. My fragmentary life may be a glorious whole in the unfailing truth and mercy of the eternal God. "O Thou who changeth not, abide with me."—British Weekly.

"SISTER KIEFFER."

By Rev. Felix R. Hill, D.D.

She was a very poor and humble woman, and was nearly seventy years old. She supported herself and little granddaughter by taking in washing. She was a dear, sunny-faced soul—full of hope, and faith in God. Though she lived many squares from her church, she was there at almost every service, and the little girl was with her. She was quite an independent character, and always declined any financial aid proffered by the Church. Indeed, her modest contribution in a weekly envelope, found its way into the collection plate every Sunday. Her home was an old-time and small French cottage, in the northwest section of New Orleans. The little house is still there; but it shelters strangers of another generation. The dear old saint who lived there so many years, long ago ascended to a larger and better home in heaven; but the memory of her still abides on earth, and the mention of her name to some people still living, is "as an ointment poured forth."

This good woman often helped and cheered her young pastor in his work. He has never forgotten the blessed testimonies of her faith and experience, which she frequently gave in the class-meeting and love-feast services. She was really a careful student of the Bible, and her ready use of appropriate and helpful quotations of Scripture texts was quite remarkable. She had a strong, clear voice, and often in the social meetings of the Church, the services were enlivened and hearts were stirred, when the joy in her own soul broke forth in cheerful, happy song, and inspired the souls of others. Her ministrations were benedictions in the lowly homes of poor people, especially in times of sickness and bereavement. One of the rich and worldly men of the city, when in great mental distress, and near unto death, begged the pastor to send for Sister Kieffer, saying: "Please send for that precious woman; I want her to sing and pray by my bedside." She came, and the mercy-seat was found in that room! a soul found peace with God—like a little child, received the kingdom of heaven. That pastor, who after so many years, is still in his imperfect way, trying to comfort, help and save people, can never forget a visit he paid Mrs. Kieffer in the summer of 1882. It was late in an oppressively hot afternoon. Shortly after the noon hour, he had been called on a long, weary tramp to visit certain people, who seemed not to appreciate him or his efforts to do them good. For hours he lingered striving to make the visit a helpful one; but at last he left that home, tired, heavy-hearted and greatly discouraged. And when he came to his office in old Carondelet Church, he dropped into a chair and leaning his head upon his desk, asked himself, "What is the use of all my preaching, and all my coming and going among the people of this great, wicked city? Will it not be best for me just to quit?" But recovering himself in some measure, though almost intolerably burdened and depressed, he was suddenly moved by a suggestion, which certainly came from God himself, to get up and go out and pay a visit to Sister Kieffer.

The sun was getting low when he approached her home. He had made a short cut through the common, and was passing near the rear yard, intending to make his presence known, by knocking at the front door. But he was arrested by the sound of what seemed to him familiar, yet wonderfully sweet music. He drew near, and looking over an adobe wall into the yard, he saw Mrs. Kieffer. She stood in the shade of a large fig tree. She was finishing up the day's washing. The tub was filled with water and clothes and a wash-board. Her sleeves were rolled up to the elbows. She was hard at work, and her strong arms and hands were vigorously moving the clothes up and down the board. Her face had a bright and happy look, and she was singing lustily and cheerily:

"The more I pray, the happier I am,
I love God, glory hallelujah!
The more I work, the happier I am,
I love God, glory hallelujah!"

She had not seen the preacher, as yet; but he shouted "Amen, Sister Kieffer," and joined with her in her cheery song. The visit that soon followed was a blessing to both; and the lesson was a glorious tonic to the pastor's soul. His heart sings hallelujah, as he still prays and works!

WHERE THE EMPHASIS IS BEING PLACED.

Another significant articie in the February number of The Century is that on "Peace and Disarmament," hy W. Morgan Shuster, author of "The Strangiing of Persia" and "The Breakdown of Civilization." Disarmament, he shows, or attempts to show, is utteriy out of the question. Peace wiii not come by that process. But after going through iiis discussion he too makes the hope of the worid for peace to ciuster around education. Last week we had some reference to the "Aiiicd Mission Boards of America" and its backing hy the Rockefeiler Foundation. One of the chief features of that corporation is an educationai propaganda and its scheme is to bring the peopie from afar to this country for their iiterary training and equipment for the work of missions.

It is worth while to stop a moment and think that each of these specific cases mentioned, and others of iike character could easiiy be muitipiied, makes the hope of the worid to center in the education of the people. Dr. Mott goes so far as to affirm that the leaders of the world are to be found when the war in Europe is over in America, and that hour, he properiy cails a "solemn hour" for America.

Bishop Candier, in his clear-sighted vision has not too eariy caiicd the attention of his Church and his country to the "shifting center" of education from Europe to this country of ours.

Where, then, shail this education be furnished for the coming time? If it is to be ieft to the rich educationai foundations of other sections of our country, the education furnished wiii he itseif a perii from which we might weii hope to be saved. These rich institutions have long ago severed their connection with the Church and have harbored the most unconceaied rationalism. Rationaiism has been tried in Europe. The universities there fostered it. And rationaiism in reiigion, or as a substitute for evangeiicai reiigion, has utteriy faiied there to preserve the peace of the nations. Militarism in government, and rationalism in reiigion, have heen no barrier against the horrors and ravages of war. Shaii we, in this country, repeat the foiiy of the great European universities and aiiow our education to drift from Him who is the Truth? And if the ieadership of the worid in the coming days shaii be found in America, and that ieadership has been formed and shaped in its intellectuai iife in those institutions which regard reiigion as a hindrance to the fuiiest mental deveiopment, what sort of ieadership of the worid shaii we have? The matter is one that hoids far more than the weii being of any eccieiasticai organization, or eccieiasticai organizations. it hoids far more than the preservation of any form of reiigion. This matter takes hoid of the every day, practical affairs of men—of all men and aii the interests of our people.

In the light of such things as we have here set down, it appears that the contention for education by the Church is far from the sectarian narrowness with which it is so often charged.

In this educational work that must make fit the leaders of the worid, the South must have a share. And inasmuch as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is an influentiai force and powerfui influence in the South the Church must take its place in the great work of fitting the future ieaders of the worid. It is a responsibility our manhood would not shirk if it could and whlch it could not shift if it would. It is a call to soiemn duty, which we take it, comes in the order of divine providence and to which our faith in Jesus Christ and ioyaity to him wiii not aiiow us to turn a deaf ear. The duty before our eyes is too piain to be mistaken; it is too soiemn to be turned aside. Here is offered a priviiege of service for the kingdom of God Southern Methodism wiii not faii to see, and seeing, seize with earnestness and devotion. Our ieaders have sounded the order of campaign for a great forward movement; the rank and fiie of our Church, accepting the caii of our leaders as the will and voice of God, wiii faii in iine and do their utmost to see that our Church takes its place—its God-appointed piace—in the great work of religious education. That education that wiii aione save the peopie from damage here and remediiess ruin hereafter.

We do not for one moment minify the need and conserving power of revivais. By no means. These we must seek and at periI of the most serious ioss obtain. But perhaps the greatest duty, at any rate, the most urgentiy pressing duty upon Southern Methodism at this time is the fullest equipment of its two great universities, the Southern Methodist University at Daiias, Texas, and Emory University at Atlanta. Our peopie are abie. May they be wiiiing in this their day of great opportunity and lofty privilege!—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

ONE RELIGION FOR ALL TIME.

We are hearing a great deal of late about the Twentieth Century Religion. It is quite the 'fad" with many. You see, it is up-to-date. The fathers, martyrs, reformers were behind the times. Beside, you know, they were an ignorant lot, groping about among their out-of-date Bibies and Creeds—honest enough, without doubt, and doubtiess saved; hut their faith and religion will never do for this enlightened and progressive age.

As I hear ail this, I am reminded of some students who one day disjointed ten or a dozen bugs of different kinds, and then artistically constructed one bug out of parts of ali the others. The professor of Natural History in the University was oid, and quite near-sighted. They piaced their bug on a tabie, and caiiing him in, said: "Professor, we have made a most extraordinary find! Here is a bug the like of which we have never seen or heard about. Can you teii us what it is?" The professor, adjusting his glasses, took a look, and then said: "Young gentiemen, this is a humbug."

But now, some professors who ciaim to be very learned speciaiists, have, from many sources, gathered numerous theories which they declare are wonderfui improvements upon the religion of the Bihie; and, when these theories are adjusted, we have the most striking and pecuiiar creature the world has ever seen. Its body is Higher Criticism. The neck and head are Evolution. The antennae are Skepticism and Rationalism. The iegs are Liberaiism, Unitarianism, Agnosticism, and Infideiity. The taii is Christian Science. It foiiows Higher Criticism naturally. Mrs. Eddy says, "Christian Science depends upon nothing that is written," and the Higher Criticism teaches that nothing written can be depended upon. The wings are Spiritualism and Theosophy. That which gives life and movement to the creature are its inward parts. Vanity stands for hrain; Pride, for heart; Conceit, for lungs; Seifishness, for liver; Wiii, for kidneys; Sensuousness, for loins; and Woridiy Pieasures, for the intestines.

And this creature the professors are trying to palm off on their students as an evolution of the religion of the Bibie, and a great improvement of the same; and, in order to make it popuiar, they call it "The Twentieth Century Reiigion." But I cali it Humbug!

When sin first marred the fair beauty of Eden, God promised a Redeemer—the seed of the woman shall hruise the serpent's head. At once there was an aitar and a victim. Since sin entered, the world has never been without these; and so it has always been possibie for man to be at peace with his Creator. Hence the reiigion of the Bibie is as oid as sin. Stand amid the bieeding victims and smoking altars of the oid economy, and watch its magnificent pageantries, as Jehovah ied the people steadiiy onward to Calvary, and teii me—Does the world need a new reiigion? It was intended for aii peopies and ages, and in its majectic sweep and reach is suited to aii times. The reiigion of Abei, Noah and Abraham; of Moses, Samuei and David; of isaiah, Daniel and John the Baptist was the religion of Jesus, the reiigion of Peter, John and Paul, of the Fathers, Martyrs, Reformers. By it, uncounted miiiions have received iife for death; joy for sorrow; and hope for despair. It has broken the shackies from hands enslaved. It has gone as the avaunt courier hefore the white wings of commerce on aii seas, and biazed the pathway of the discoverer into aii zones. It has iifted the nations, and there is no civilization without it. It never was so practicai and adaptahle as to-day; and the wide world never stood so much in need of it, or heartiiy invited its magnificent and manifoid ministries. The reiigion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ had its hirth in the heart of the eternal Father, and can, therefore, never be outworn or out of date. Away with your humbugs! and hack to your father's Bibie and your mother's Savior!—L. W. Munhall, D.D.

BREAKING DOWN THE LORD'S DAY.

Visitors from the West have noted a comparativeiy strict attitude toward the pubiic observance of the Sabbath in New England and other Eastern States. Now determined efforts in the interests of commerciaiism and pieasure are determined to hreak down these huiwarks of the Lord's Day. In the Legislature of the New England States fifteen bliis have aiready been introduced this winter to destroy the iegal safeguards of the day. In a meeting in Park Street Church, Boston, Mr. Henry Steriing, representing the organized workers of Massachusetts, numbering from 150,000 to 200,000 men, said: "The majority are in favor of a strict observance of the Sabbath."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE HOLMES STORE

OF NEW ORLEANS

is one of America's truly great department stores.

It has perfected a buying organization that reaches into every producing market of the world, maintaining offices in Berlin, London, Paris and Florence, as well as New York.

It never presents any merchandise that is not of good quality and equitably priced.

Its very efficient service to patrons in the city is supplemented by the largest and best-equipped mail order department of any store in the South. Ninety-eight per cent of all orders received are filled on date of receipt.

The aim of the store is to merit fully the confidence that has been manifested by the public during its seventy-two years of merchandising history.

CENTENARY DAY IN NEW ORLEANS.

By agreement of the pastors in New Orleans, last Sunday, February 23, was set apart as Centenary College day in the New Orleans Churches. There was remarkable unanimity of spirit and action in the arrangement and carrying out of the plan. By special invitation of Dr. Felix R. Hill, Jr., Dr. Wynn filled the pulpit at Rayne Memorial in the morning, making an able presentation of the subject of Christian Education, and the needs and claims of Centenary, which was followed by the special offering for the maintenance of the college. In the evening Dr. Wynn preached an impressive sermon on the Christian view of education at Carrollton Avenue. In all the churches of the city the special offering was taken, and while it is not possible at this date to report results in full, the first returns indicate encouraging success and general interest. Dr. Wynn remained for a few days in the city where he discussed the interests of the college with pastors and leading laymen.

One of the early reports on the Centenary Special comes from Rev. J. D. Harper, of Zachary, who has sent $25 to the treasurer as a result of his appeal.

One of the many evidences of general interest in our educational campaign is in the statement from Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of Crowley, that the Special will be in hand in his charge before Easter.

CENTENARY IS IDEAL.

Oftentimes we make our selection of the necessities of life by outward appearances alone. From the standpoint of attractiveness, there is no doubt but that a fine appearance is a good advertisement. But there are some things that should be selected after careful consideration without any reference to outward appearances. The one thing worth thinking of now is the school where youth is to be educated. When a lad, planning to go to college, I secured many catalogs. Some of them were expensive editions with showy pictures. The roll of students was lengthy and the buildings were large and attractive. With boyish taste for big things, I selected one of the big colleges.

After my selection had been made I was advised by a man who had more understanding than I had. He told me that the large college with its big classes, its many attractions, and its cosmopolitan student body was not the safest place for a young man to go to school. He told me that there were many things in the large colleges to absorb my time in social and athletic life to the exclusion of my studies; that the large classses would put me so far from the personal attention of the professors that I would receive scarcely any of their time; and that I might be in constant danger of being unwittingly led astray by false standards of learning that oftentimes creep into the large colleges. He urged upon me that the small school had just as good instructors and, for the most part, men of sound theology and vital piety, because their small number and their direct connection with the Conference of the Church made it possible for them to be closely watched; that in the classes where but few studied, I would have the personal attention of the professor, and thus be enabled to become more thorough than otherwise, and that the small number of students limited social activities and my time would be more my own for study. I took the advice and spent my first two years in a small college.

The argument urged in my case should be heard by every parent who plans to send a child to college. And, incidentally, every parent should be careful to know the influence that is to shape the destiny of the life of his child. The surest way to make sure of where your boy or girl is, is to stand by your Church and create a college atmosphere that is safe for young men and women. Everything that is needed is at hand to make Centenary just the place in which a boy is perfectly safe and where he has the highest advantages in order to equip him for a great future. We have there as President a man who is so clean, refined, pious and scholarly that there is not a Methodist in Louisiana but who would be glad to have him as a pastor. But he ministers not to a congregation, but to a school of young men, and helps to mold the thoughts and destinies of the men who will make the history of Louisiana and the Methodist Church tomorrow. It is a privilege rare and seldom to be obtained, to have at the head of a college the size of Centenary such a man as Dr. R. H. Wynn.

There is not a makeshift in the whole school. To name the professor at the head of each department is but to give the name of a proper subject for words of highest praise. One thing, and that alone, is wanting. Centenary College needs money. The boys should have more comforts while they follow their studies in this splendid environment. The professors should have better equipment with which to present the great truths that youth should be taught. More money should be available with which to pay living salaries so as to retain such men as we now have there and keep them after their added experience has made them worth more money. Right now the stress should be relieved with the big $6000 offering. With this amount, the school will have stimulus for a forward step that she is expected to make. Centenary College, the small college, is what Louisiana Methodists must have; so let us rally to its support as we have never done before.

A. J. G.

IN THE LAFAYETTE DISTRICT.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, commissioner of education for the Lafayette District, has taken vigorous hold of the campaign for "the Centenary Special" in that district. He has written to each pastor urging the importance of the matter, and set apart the month of March, culminating on the fourth Sunday, in which to complete the raising of "the Special." Brother Lutz is himself a graduate of Centenary, and his effective work in different sections of the Conference, commends the value of this indispensable institution of Louisiana Methodism.

FIRST REPORT ON THE SPECIAL.

The first actual return on the Centenary Special comes from the Franklinton circuit, and is made by Rev. F. N. Sweeney, who though superannuated at the last session of the Conference on account of his health, is supplying that charge. Evidently he is not on the shelf yet.

MISS FRANCES ELIZABETH WILLARD.

By Dr. J. T. Sawyer.

Miss Willard was born in 1839 and died in 1898; and, if living now, she would be 76 years old. A graduate of Northwestern Female College in 1859, she taught school for about ten years and then became Professor of Aesthetics in her Alma Mater, and also Dean of the Woman's College there. In 1874 she became Corresponding Secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and from 1879 until her death she was its President. Under her guidance the organization of the Union was perfected and its sphere of activity greatly enlarged. In 1882 she was on the Executive Committee of the Prohibition Party. In 1883 she founded the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and in 1888 became its President.

Miss Willard was a frequent contributor to the magazines, and wrote a number of books and pamphlets, three of which were: "Nineteen Beautiful Years," "Woman and Temperance," and "Glimpses of Fifty Years." She edited for a time the Chicago Evening Post and also the Union Signal.

In a little log schoolhouse Miss Willard studied "the three Rs," and became in after years a great scholar, a profound thinker, a most successful temperance orator, and a gloriously effective worker for the best things. She once said: "If I were asked the mission of the ideal woman, I would say it is to make the whole world homelike. The true woman will make home-like every place she enters, and she will enter every place in this wide world." Miss Anna Gordon, for twenty-one years her private Secretary, said of her: "Truly, 'pure religion and undefiled' is inseparable from the fragrance of Frances Willard's life. Strong, courageous, indomitable, yet a fair, sweet flower whose petals and whose perfume expand so far that we are all unfolded and sheltered in its tenderness and beauty."

Miss Willard traveled on her great mission over many lands on both sides of the great ocean, and thoroughly canvassed her own country. She made several visits to our city and State. She did God's work gloriously all her days and died triumphantly—at midnight her pure spirit went home, near the close exclaiming in a tone of perfect content, "How beautiful to be with God!"

As one of the starters of the Temperance and Prohibition Movement, she led the hosts of Christian women and men on to victory after victory while living; and the war against the whiskey devil has been fiercely waging ever since her departure for glory. It is not now thought to be a wild prophecy to predict the complete triumph in the American Union of the cause for which she lived. Every year the Christian women of our land hold memorial meetings for her; and her fame shall grow with the centuries, proclaiming that she, though a woman, is entitled to a place in our reverent and deathless love close by our Washington and others of the great men of the Nation. God called and fitted her to do what she did; and, with heart, head and all her soul wedded to the work, she did it well, and hers is a deathless name and fame.

The Methodists have no Annual Conference in Russia, but instead they have what is called "The Annual Prayer Meeting of Methodist Preachers." The reason for this is that the Governmental authorities are suspicious of anything called a "conference," and that another name had to be chosen for this yearly meeting of Wesleyans in that country. We are rather inclined to think that it would be helpful if Methodist Conferences everywhere had somewhat more of the "prayer-meeting" spirit.

Bishop W. A. Candler and Bishop J. H. McCoy spent Sunday, Feb. 21, in Memphis, Tenn., the former preaching at First Church at 11 a. m., and the latter at St. John's Church. At the same hour Dr. F. J. Prettyman, Chaplain of the United States Senate, occupied the pulpit of the Second Methodist Church, and Dr. P. T. Durham, Dean of the Theological School of Emory University, that of the Madison Heights Church. These distinguished ministers had been assembled in the Bluff City by the meeting of the General Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

The Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will hold its fifth annual meeting in First Church, Little Rock, Arkansas, April 14-22, 1915.

A Workers' Conference will be held Wednesday, April 14, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and the first public session at 8 o'clock in the evening of the same day.

Delegates and visitors should correspond with Mrs. F. V. Holmes, 621 Third Street, Little Rock, Ark., Chairman of the Committee on Homes, who will furnish lists of hotels and boarding houses.

Reduced railroad rates cannot be obtained. The Southeastern and Southwestern Passenger Associations advise that delegates from points in Arkansas use the regular one-way fares in effect in that State, which are on a basis of two cents per mile, and from points outside of Arkansas, delegates can take advantage of the all-year tourists' fares in effect to Hot Springs. These all-year tourist tickets are on sale daily from the principal stations in the southeastern territory, to Hot Springs, with liberal arrangements in the way of stopover privileges, limit, etc., but this ticket must be validated at Hot Springs before it can be used on the return trip.

MRS. T. H. LIPSCOMB.

On Monday morning, Feb. 15, when we laid to rest here in Columbus, Miss., the remains of Sister Lipscomb, the wife of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, there was the deepest grief in the hearts of all at the loss of this devoted young wife and mother. The funeral services had been conducted at Starkville by Dr. T. C. Wier, Rev. W. S. Harrison and others, but a short service was held here by Brother W. L. Duren, J. M. Carpenter, and myself. Many of the Starkville friends of the family came over to attend the burial, and to be with their loved pastor in this his darkest hour. Their consideration for him, as their love for his wife, was beautiful.

Sister Lipscomb was the mother of five children, all of whom she was raising for Christ. Adorned with many of the graces of culture, she had laid them all on the altar of Christ for the highest service. Sweet spirited and gentle, she was always kind and thoughtful of others. She made all her friends; and indeed there were none who knew her but that they loved her for her modest, though earnest Christian character. Her faith was true and strong to the last, and she went home with a perfect trust that all was well. Brother Lipscomb and his motherless children will have the full sympathy of all our brethren in this his time of bitter loss. May God have them in his keeping! W. W. WOOLLARD.

SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY ON GERMAN EDUCATION.

Nor can we admit for a moment that the universal military service of Germany has been a protection against indiscriminate war. This might be so in the case of any other country, but those who apply such reasoning to Germany should read the two remarkable articles contributed by Sir W. M. Ramsay to The Daily Chronicle of last Friday and Saturday. In dealing with Prussian espionage this distinguished archaeologist, who is intimately acquainted with German life and thought, shows how the whole system of Prussian education is so devised that "the boy is not taught to develop his own individual character; he feels himself an agent of the Government." Tale-telling, and with it spying, is made a formulated and systematic duty in all German schools. As Sir William Ramsay says:

The ultimate question as regards every act is, "Does it benefit Germany?" If it does, it is right. This doctrine is championed not merely by the crowd, or the soldier, or the politician. Even distinguished theologians maintain that it is right, that the interest of Germany is the one supreme consideration, and that any violence or fraud is right if it is for the good of the Fatherland. God alone is above all; but only on condition that he be German.

This unquestioning docility has worked all the mischief for both Germany and Europe. The representatives of the German Churches make light work of the methods of barbarism resorted to by their War Lords. It has been made necessary, though most painful, by "the infatuated population of Belgium." This makes pitiful reading. We can, however, sincerely join in the confession and prayer of the closing paragraph:

"In the hardships of this war we recognize the just judgment of the holy God upon the Christian peoples, and we will not close our hearts to his sacred voice. Let it be our earnest prayer that the day may be granted in which a purified and renewed Christianity may again live in honorable peace; the wounds of the war healed, and that we may be allowed by humble service to overcome the scandals and wrongs now being practiced against that duty placed by God upon us all toward non-Christian humanity. He can and will, if we allow this chastisement to bring us to repentance, employ the same to further the coming of his Kingdom."

May this great end be brought about in the new order of righteousness and peace for which we look as the divinely appointed issue of the terrible calamity that has overtaken a civilization which has not yet learnt to base international relations and policy upon the laws and mind of Christ.—Methodist Times (London.)

DEATH OF HOWARD D. PARKER.

Dear Dr. Meek: Another sorrow comes to us with the news of the death of our son, Howard D. Parker, which occurred at Montgomery, Ala., on the 8th inst. after a protracted illness from an attack of pneumonia. He was 35 years old and a fine specimen of manhood.

We find comfort in the fact that he met death with Christian resignation, expressing his willingness and readiness to go. Among his last utterences was a feeble intonation of "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

This is the second death among our sons within two years. Sad as this dispensation is, we bow submissively, knowing that He doeth all things well. J. A. PARKER.

Some Christians give the impression that they have a very small Christ. To hear them speak one would form the idea that they believe that Christ has revealed himself wholly to their particular denomination or communion or nationality. But Christ is so infinite that he requires all the Christian bodies which acknowledge him as Lord, and all nationalities and races of the world, through which to reveal himself and to accomplish his purposes.—John R. Mott.

Without fear of contradiction I affirm that our Mexican Church has the livest League in this city. This can be said in exaltation rather than in disparagement of other Leagues, for there are other very good ones. This League, through its workers, is filling the Church to overflowing at the Sunday evening services. It not only brings the people, but gives them the Gospel message when they get there. Last Sunday evening the house was crowded as usual. Some twenty-five of the young people present publicly professed faith in Christ.—J. H. Fitzgerald, El Paso, Texas.

The quarter just closed has been the best term's work in the history of the Union Methodist Theological Seminary. For the first time we have had all three of the classes provided for in the Course of Study, in session at once, and the quality of work done by the faculty is much in advance of anything in the past. This is in part due to the fact that we have for the first time had a full faculty. Another reason why the quality of work is better than in the past is that the class of students entering the school is improving. Many of the younger men have had the advantages of modern education as well as training in the Pierson Memorial Bible School. In addition to the encouraging growth in the standard of the school, we have had during the term a revival which brought quite a number of the students in both the Seminary and the Bible School into a higher experience of grace.—R. A. Hardie, Seoul, Korea.

LIFE'S BITTERNESS.

By J. W. Lipscomb, M.D.

(This poem is reprinted because of regrettable errors appearing in one of the stanzas last week.—Editor of the Advocate.)

Oh, the bitterness of life,
If at home there is strife,
When you turn at the close of the day
Where you long to be met
By those who will let
Your cares and your sorrows melt away.

You have toiled and you've struggled,
With mad business you've juggled
'Till your hair at the temples turns gray;
You have worked like a trojan,
Success was your slogan;
What a price, what a price, must you pay!

If in spite of achievement,
You've naught but bereavement
To meet you as the evenings unfold;
Don't your heart bleed with sorrow,
Don't you dread the to-morrow,
When you struggle again for the gold?

Oh, quit it, sad pilgrim,
And return unto Him,
For thy Savior's love may grow cold;
The prize is not worth it—
While for heaven you are unfit,
When your mind's so engrossed with the gold.

Let thy thoughts turn to Him above
Who is all peace and love,
Who cares not for riches untold,
Who'd rather see love abide
There by your fireside,
Than treasures of Ophir tenfold.

THE BOY IN THE STREET.

When a boy begins to earn he feels himself independent of parental authority, and in many cases breaks away from all restraint. He pockets and spends much or all of the money he makes, and the widowed mother whom his industry is keeping from a pauper's dole has been the rare exception in all localities studied. Of course there are boys in the street trades whose homes are wretchedly poor, but their earnings go to the "movies," craps and cigarettes oftener than to the family treasurer.

It has long been a fallacious tradition that street trading is a useful and beneficial occupation for children, but investigations are indicating beyond any question that it is scarcely more perilous for girls than it is for boys to sell papers, peddle gum, guide beggars, black shoes, tend stands or engage in any other form of street trading. Children who thus work out of school hours gradually fall behind in their studies and reach a limit of mental capacity lower than the promise of their earlier years. Not only that, but physically and morally they suffer positive harm.

The newsboy's companions are demoralizing, and his trade often takes him in and out of saloons and evil resorts with a freedom not permitted to other boys. Before long he hears of the "big money" boys make selling late at night, for a "drunk" seldom waits for change, and a stranger tips generously the boy who will guide him to the haunts of the underworld. This is the downward path, well beaten by the many boys who take it year after year.—Christian Guardian.

A LETTER FROM A CAT.

Dear Little Folks:

I hereby take
My pen in paw to say,
Can you explain a curious thing
I found the other day?
There is another little cat
Who sits behind a frame,
And looks so very much like me,
You'd think we were the same.
I try to make her play with me,
Yet when I mew and call,
Though I see her mew in answer,
She makes no sound at all.
And to the dullest kitten
It's plain enough to see
That either I am mocking her
Or she is mocking me.
It makes no difference what I play,
She seems to know the game;
For every time I look around,
I see her do the same.
And yet no matter though I creep
On tip-toe lest she hear,
Or quickly dash around the frame,
She's sure to disappear.

NOT SO FAST.

"O mamma," cried Blanche, "I heard such a tale about Edith! I did not think she could be so naughty. One—"

"My dear," said her mother, "before you tell it we will see if your story will pass through sleves."

"What does that mean, mamma?"

"I will explain. In the first place, let me ask you about your story; is it true?"

"I suppose so. I heard it from Grace White, and she is a great friend of Edith's."

"And does she show her friendship by telling tales of her? In the next place, though you can prove it to be true, is it kind?"

"I did not mean to be unkind, but I'm afraid it was."

"And is it necessary?"

"No, of course, mamma; there was no need for mentioning it at all."

"Always ask these three questions first when you are tempted to tell something about others."
—Southern Churchman.

TOM AND THE CLOCK.

Winnie and Tom were spending a delightful three weeks with grandma. They had never been in the country in the winter time before, and everything was new to them. Such fun as they did have! And how fine it was to go sleighing and coasting with Uncle Jack, who lived just a mile away!

"There isn't a single thing I don't like," confided Winnie to Tom as they sat talking one day. "Only just one; I do hate having to go to bed at eight o'clock."

"So do I, and I think it's mean to make us when we're visiting," declared Tom.

"Last night I was right in the middle of a most exciting game with Lucille, and I had to put the poor dear down without undressing her because it had struck eight about a minute ago," said Winnie.

"I know," said Tom gloomily. "Wasn't I reading the finest story when I had to stop? It's all right for girls to go to bed early; but I'm a boy and 'most twelve, and you're only nine."

"You are not 'most twelve!" cried Winnie indignantly. "You were just eleven last month. Besides, if I am a girl, I'm not afraid of the dark any more than you, Tom Price."

"Oh, well," said Tom, "maybe you're not; you're tolerably brave for a girl. But say, Win, I do want to stay up to-night, because Fred Warren told me he was coming over about eight. Wouldn't it be awful if I were in bed?"

Winnie nodded. "Tell grandma," she suggested.

But Tom shook his head. "She doesn't like Fred; never has since the time he showed me how to play shooting buffaloes with Spotty and her new calf."

"Well, the calf died," said Winnie soberly.

Tom was silent. The two children stood looking out of the dining-room window. They were all alone, for grandma was upstairs taking a nap.

"Oh!" said Tom presently. "I know something splendid to do."

"What? Oh, Tom, dear Tom, please tell me!" cried the little girl.

"Cross your heart you won't tell?"

Solmenly Winnie complied with this demand.

Tom leaned closer that he might whisper: "I'm going to set the clock back an hour."

There was a little gasp from Winnie, then a frightful silence.

After a minute Tom spoke: "I know just how. I see grandma wind it up every night. Watch." Pulling out a chair, he climbed on it and reached the clock, which stood on a high shelf. Carefully he moved the hand. When he climbed down again and pushed back the chair, it was two o'clock instead of three. He looked at Winnie triumphantly. "What did I tell you?" he exclaimed.

But Winnie was frightened. "I wish you hadn't," she said, her blue eyes full of trouble.

"Pshaw! Who's a 'fraid cat now?" cried Tom. "I can fix it back whenever I like."

Just then there was a ring at the front door. Grandma had finished her nap and immediately came down the steps to receive the note which the messenger handed her. "Why, children," she said, smiling, "this is from Aunt Mary. She wants you to come over at four o'clock. There's something jolly going on, but I'm not to tell. Why, what are you looking so sober about? Don't you want to go?"

"Yes," said the children faintly.

Grandma looked puzzled, but she did not say anything more. She glanced at the clock. "Dear me, I thought it was later. Well, you've plenty of time. I'll get you to wind a ball of yarn for me until it's time to get ready."

Winnie looked as if she were ready to cry, and Tom glanced despairingly at the clock. Oh, how much easier it is to do a wrong thing than to undo it! Mamma had always told him that; but then it had not seemed such a real thing, while now—oh, how dreadfully loud that clock did tick!

Presently grandma spoke: "It's time for you to go now, dearies; and, dear me, how dark it is for the time of day! Well, run along and have a good time. I guess Jack will bring you home."

The two children fairly raced all the way. At the kitchen door Aunt Mary met them.

"Why, children," she said, "what makes you so late? I thought you weren't coming. You see, I invited the minister's children to come over, and I made some candy for you to pull; but I had to let them do all the pulling, as you didn't come. Then Uncle Jack happened in and took them for a little run in his new sleigh. I do wish you had been here. Why didn't you come?"

The children did not know what to say. They ate a few of the doughnuts which Aunt Mary provided, but somehow they did not taste good. Aunt Mary was puzzled. Pretty soon the children said good-bye.

"I hope grandma hasn't found out about the clock," said Winnie, as they went slowly over the hard, frozen fields, "because I want to tell her."

"No, let me," cried Tom, "because I'm never, never going to do a thing like that again."

But grandma knew, and she had known all the time.—Christian Observer.

CHURCH EXTENSION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Editor: Please announce in your next issue of the paper, that the Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Annual Conference will meet in Brookhaven, Miss., Mar. 10, at 2 o'clock p. m., in the parlor of Whitworth College.

Feb. 16, 1915. L. E. ALFORD.

THE HORSE TO HIS MASTER.

I am a horse; you are a man;
I've been your slave since time began,
And though I am strong enough to shake
My shackles off and make a break
For freedom that would lift the lid,
You've noticed that I never did.
By day and night I've worked for you
And done the best that I could do;
And though I may not always like
Your methods, yet I never strike;
In heat and cold, in wet and dry
I'm always ready—glad to try
To do the very most I can
To satisfy my master, man.
Therefore, my master, if you please,
Consider such facts as these:
Say, don't you think it ought to be
Your pleasure to look out for me,
If for no other reason than
My great usefulness to man?
Of course, you might be worse, I know
You sometimes treat your own kind so,
But I'm a horse, and truer than
The man-slave to his master, man.
And, furthermore, my nature is Much more dependent than is his.
And as I trust you, sir, you should
Do all you can to make it good.
Nor do I ask a lot, I guess,
To be a fairly fair success—
Good food, good shelter, good care,
I think, is just about my share.
No other pay I ask—no touch
I make, but this! Is that too much?

—W. J. Lampton, in New York Times.

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

LET THE GOOD WORK GO ON.

Quite a number of the brethren are bestirring themselves to secure renewals and new subscriptions to the Advocate. We highly appreciate the efforts of these faithful friends. If all our pastors would do as well as some have done, the outlook for our paper would soon be brighter. What about the renewals in your charge, brother? Has an effort been made to secure them? If not, will you not please see that this very important work is done at once? This is the most favorable time of the year to take care of the interests of the Conferene organ. So, let every one who is interested, preacher and layman, lend us a helping hand NOW. One good way to assist, if you are in arrears, is to remit for your subscription without further delay. We do not believe that the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi will fail us in this crucial hour.

WAS WEBSTER A DRUNKARD?

The impression very generally prevails that Daniel Webster, America's foremost orator and one of her half-dozen greatest statesmen, was a constant drinker—indeed, that he was what is termed "an habitual drunkard." In the New York Christian Advocate of February 25, Prof. William C. Wilkinson of Chicago University, refers to this widely prevalent impression and seeks to ascertain upon what basis it rests. Among other things, he says: "Of course, no one would maintain that Webster was a total abstainer from intoxicating drink. For my part, I heartily wish that he had been. It would have been a vast gain in every way. But he certainly was not. He drank wine at the table, and he sometimes indulged in strong drink. There is no doubt of that. He even occasionally induiged himself to excess. Now, 'excess' applied in such a case is a relative word. What one would consider excess, another judge would not. Then let me explain. I mean that Webster unquestionably did on certain occasions drink wine more freely than was prudent even in the view of those who approved and practiced wine-drinking in general. But that such excess with him went to the degree of producing intoxication, or of muddiing his wits, I have found to be overwhelmingiy denied by a general consent of testimony proceeding from persons quaiified to give trustworthy testimony. Webster, therefore, I conclude ought not to be pronounced an intemperate man. His habits were the habits of his time and his social class. He no more deserves to be thought of as an intemperate man than do the great mass of his contemporaries and peers. It is a wrong to him and it is a wrong to ourselves to deem otherwise than thus of Daniel Webster."

Two of the witnesses brought forward by Prof. Wilkinson to sustain his position are speciaiiy interesting. The first is Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the Southern Confederacy, whose statement is as follows:

"I think Webster was the worst slandered man that I ever knew. It is the general impression in the country to-day that Webster was a great drunkard. You hear it spoken of even now whenever his name is mentioned, but it is an outrageous slander. I will tell you what I know myself. For six years while we were both in Congress I lived next door to him. His house was as familiar to me as my own garden. I was in there a great deal and he was as often in mine, and in all the time of my acquaintance with him I never saw Webster when he was in the least affected by liquor or under the influence of it in any way. I have dined with him at his house and mine. I have met him at dinners and affairs outside and I never saw him in the least inebriated. I never heard of his being intoxicated but twice, and on one of those occasions—a dinner—he made a speech that was grandly eloquent."

The other witness referred to is Edward Everett Hale, who in his "Memories of a Hundred Years," says:

"I do not know that I should have gone into these little personal reminiscences but for this, that they give me an opportunity to say one thing which ought to be said. Between the years 1826 and 1852, when he (Webster) died, I must have seen him thousands of times. I must have read thousands of letters from him. I have been I know not how often at his house. My father, as I say, was his intimate friend. Now, it was to me a matter of the utmost personal surprise when I found, gradually growing up in this country, the impression that Mr. Webster was often, not to say generally, overcome with liquor, in the latter years of his life. I should say that now a third part of the anecdotes of him which you find afloat have reference to occasions when it was supposed that under the influence of whisky he did not know what he was doing. I like to say, therefore, that in the course of twenty-six years, running from the time when I was four years old to the time when I was thirty, I never had a dream or thought that he cared anything about wine or liquor—certainly I never supposed that he used it to excess. What is more, I know that my own father, who lived to the year 1864, heard such stories as these with perfect disgust and indignation. This is a good place to print my opinion that this class of stories has been nourished, partly carelessly and partly from worse motives; and that they are not to be taken as real indications of the habit of life of the man."

This disposition to magnify the faults of public men has long existed and seems to be one of the many evidences of the innate meanness of unregenerate human nature. Indeed, there appears to be among a large part of our population a tendency to view with suspicion all persons holding high office. More than once we have been forced to hear clean and high-minded officials whom he knew intimately terrifically arraigned in private conversation and charged with vices of which they were utterly incapable by persons who had no dependable knowledge concerning them. If all the stories afloat about such men were to be accepted as true it is to be feared that we would have scarcely a single unsullied character left in the history of the American Nation. Daniel Webster had his faults, as all human beings have, but he was an incorruptible patriot, a firm believer in the Holy Scriptures, and there is reason to think that he was prepared when the summons came that called him hence. If any one doubts this, let him read carefully the magnificent tribute paid him soon after his decease by Rufus Choate, his associate at the bar, his successor in the United States Senate, and his warm personal friend.

NO SUCH STATEMENT GIVEN OUT.

We notice that the Midland Methodist of last week, in giving an account of the proceedings of the Educational Commission in its recent session at Memphis, copied from the Commercial Appeal what was claimed to be a statement made by the Editor of the New Orleans Advocate. That alleged utterance was printed without our knowledge or consent and was repudiated in the Commercial Appeal the next day by the publication therein of the following letter:

"Lexington, Miss., Feb. 21, 1915.

"Editor Commercial Appeal:

"The statement appearing in your paper yesterday in which I was represented as having said certain things concerning the work of the Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South, which has been in session in Memphis for the past few days, was wholly unauthorized and in most respects incorrect and misleading. I gave out no interview to a representative of any paper in Memphis, nor did I dictate a statement of any kind to any one. I was not in accord with the Educational Commission as to the course of procedure to be adopted in executing the instructions given by the last General Conference, and I discussed the question freely with some of its members and others in the lobby of the Peabody Hotel; but it never occurred to me that any one would do such an indefensible thing as to listen to my remarks and go away and try to reproduce them and place his recollection of my utterances in quotation marks, thus ascribing his own language to me. Your reporter, to some extent, correctly represented my general position, but I did not utter a single sentence as he gave it to your paper for publication. Whatever I might have said in my own paper, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with a view to placing myself in a proper light before the Methodist public as the Commissioner from the North Mississippi Conference, I had no thought whatever of criticising the members of the Educational Commission, who are high-minded Christian gentlemen and who, I feel sure, did their duty, as they saw it. As I understood the situation, there was practically no disagreement between the General Educational Commission and a majority of the Annual Conference Commissioners concerning any vital feature of the Vanderbilt controversy.

"Respectfully yours,

R. A. MEEK."

We are moved to reprint this communication to the Commercial Appeal, hoping that it will safeguard other Church periodicals from copying the unauthorized and misleading statement mentioned above. Herein lies the trouble with a public misrepresentation: when once it is set afloat, the truth even when published seems never to completely overtake and counteract it.

DR. H. L. SUTHERLAND.

A brief announcement of the death of Dr. H. L. Sutherland, of Benoit, Miss., which occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. R. B. Johnson, at Cleveland, Miss., on February 19, was made in the Advocate last week. Dr. Sutherland was a rare man—one who measured up to a very high standard both in point of character and service. He was educated in the common schools and at the University of Mississippi, being an associate student of Bishop Charles B. Galloway at that historic institution, from which he was graduated in 1870. Later, he studied medicine and became an ornament to that noble profession. He never ceased to be a student, and he always kept abreast of the foremost in the calling to which he devoted his life. He was public-spirited and contributed largely to the enactment of sound laws for the protection of the health of the people of his State. He was active in all the work of the Mississippi State Medical Association and had conferred upon him its highest honors. At the time of his decease, though he was stricken with disease and had retired from practice, he was still serving as the Health Officer of Bolivar County. He wielded a facile pen and wrote several pamphlets which were informing and of unusual merit.

Dr. Sutherland was one of the best known and most loyal Methodists in the entire Mississippi Delta. He resided at Rosedale for a number of years, and while there was always a faithful steward in his church. He had a profound sense of obligation and "his word was as good as his bond." His integrity was spotless and none ever dared to call it in question. He possessed many of the elements of a hero: though years ago he had lost nearly the whole of one leg and had to go on crutches, and though other physicians told him that he was destined to go blind, his eyesight already being bad, he went about his work uncomplainingly and seemed to face the future without a fear. We have never known a truer or a braver man. He served his day and generation well, and has left bebind a worthy record and a name that will long be pronounced with reverence and affection. Peace be to his ashes! And may the Heavenly Father watch over and keep his stricken loved ones, until they shall overtake him and abide with him again in "the City which hath foundations."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. G. E. Cameron is, we learn, preaching to large and appreciative audiences at Alexandria, La. Dr. Cameron bas unusual gifts as a public speaker.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, of Athens, La., has our tbanks for a club of subscriptions, forwarded on February 20. He reports encouragingly of tbe work in his field.

Rev. S. L. Pope, of New Albany, Miss., gave us a club of 7 subscribers from his excellent charge a few days since. This "Pope" may be always depended upon to do the proper thing.

Rev. J. A. Wells, of the Topisaw (Miss.) charge, has our thanks for a club of subscribers and some kindly words of encouragement. The work of tbe Church is prospering in his field.

Rev, K. W. Dodson, of Lake Charles, La., continues to bring things to pass in tbat important charge. He serves an excellent people, many of whom have the work of the Master much upon their bearts.

In a personal letter to the Editor, Rev. W. W. Graves says: "Our reception at Newton, Miss., was most cordial and the work is starting off nicely. Our new presiding elder, Rev. C. F. Emery, is making good."

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, the energetic presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, was in New Orleans last Monday and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. Much to his regret, the Editor was out and missed seeing him.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, is making his influence strongly felt for good in the territory under his supervision. Echoes of the good work that he is doing are constantly reaching our office from the field.

The annual sermon of the Louisiana Woman's Missionary Conference was preached in the First Metbodist Church last Wednesday evening by Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District. It was an able and inspiring discourse.

The measure providing for State-wide prohibition passed the lower House of the Utab Legislature last Monday. It had already been passed by the Senate. Shall we Louisianians let even the Mormons outstrip us in the graud march of moral progress?

We desire to express our high appreciation of tbe two excellent editorials written for the Advocate last week by Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the Parker Memorial Churcb of this city. Brother Harper writes as well as he preaches. This is saying much.

Rev. A. C. McCorkle, of Tunica, Miss., in a letter bringing us 2 subscriptions, appends the following note: "Our congregations have so increased that we have been forced to procure some additional seats. Conditions here are steadily improving. Our first quarterly meeting was a good one."

Rev. T. B. Winstead, of Burns, Miss., speaks hopefully of the outlook in his new charge, where the Lord is blessing his labors. He has lately been looking after the interests of the Advocate in his rounds with some degree of success, and he states that he will continue to press its claims in tbe future.

Rev. A. F. Vaughan, who holds sway in the historic town of Franklin, which has given to the State and Nation so many men of note, brought us under obligations to him for some subscriptions a few days since. Brother Vaughan is having a successful pastorate in his present field —not an unusual thing for him.

Brother T. M. Babington, of Franklinton, La., has our thanks for a club of 5 subscriptions, forwarded on the 20th ultimo. Brother Babington is one of the leading members of our Church in his town, and has for many years been a good friend of the Advocate. We wish him all the good things during the year now beginning.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss., passed through New Orleans last week en route to Florida, where he has engagements to hold meetings at Knights and Galloway. He embarked here for Tampa on the steamboat Brunswick. Brother Norsworthy expects to return to Mississippi about the middle of April.

Rev. E. G. Wood reports the death of Mr. Louis E. Ball, which occurred at the family residence at Pollock, La., on Wednesday, Jan. 27. The obsequies were conducted at the home of Mr. R. L. Ball in Pineville the next day, and the interment was made in the Rapides Cemetery. We extend sympathy to the bereaved.

From Tupelo, Miss., under date of February 21, Rev. J. C. Park, our faithful and eloquent pastor at that place, sent us a fine club of 21 subscribers. As Bishop Candler would say, Tupelo Methodism "is somewhat." Most of the names on this list are quite familiar to the Editor and the sight of them brings trooping into his mind many pleasant memories.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the General Sunday School Board, held on February 4, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., was employed as a Connectional Sunday School Field Secretary. Miss Kilpatrick is a Sunday school specialist of unusual gifts and we are delighted to see opened to ber this door to a larger usefulness.

Rev. J. L. Lay, of Simsboro, La., has requested the Publisher not to drop auy our our subscribers in his charge until he notifies him to do so. He states that he will at once take up the work of calling on them and soliciting their renewals. We highly appreciate Brother Lay's interest in the Conference organ and his efforts to keep it circulating among his people.

Last Sunday was Centenary College Day in New Orleans. The cause was presented in all the Southern Methodist Churches in the city and a collection was taken, the amount of which is not known at this writing. Dr. R. H. Wynn spent the Sabbath here, delivering two able and effective discourses. The Centenary Campaign seems to be taking hold of the Methodists of Louisiana.

Dr. Paul H. Saunders, who is a prominent member of the Rayne Memorial Methodist Church of this city, addressed the Young Woman's Christian Association of New Orleans last Thursday evening on the topic, "How to Invest Small Savings." Dr. Saunders is both a scholar and financier, and it goes without saying that his remarks on this important subject were well worth bearing.

Rev. Stonewall Anderson, D.D., of Nashville, Tenn., will preach the Commencement sermon and deliver the baccalaureate address at the approaching Commencement of Whitworth College, May 30 to June 1. The sermon before the Y. W. C. A. will be preached by Rev. Paul D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson District, and Dr. E. H. Mounger will deliver the address at tbe Alumnae Anniversary.

Rev. J. D. Harper, of Zachary, La., has lately been pressing the claims of the Advocate among his parishioners, and we scarcely need to say that we appreciate the good service which he has rendered our paper. Brother Harper is one of the veterans of the Louisiana Conference and a truer, more loyal itinerant cannot anywhere be found. He has convictions and the courage to maintain them.

Rev. W. L. Graves, of Pace, Fla., writes: "Please let me say through the Advocate that I should be glad to make a few more dates with pastors for revival work. I am particularly anxious to arrange for some early meetings." Brother Graves is a member of the North Mississippi Conference who is temporily sojourning in Florida. He has evangelistic gifts and is an efficient helper in a meeting.

Rev. H. B. Watkins, of Natchez, Miss., writes as follows: "Marion Kaiser, the third son of Mr. W. J. Kaiser, of this place, died at the Mississippi A. and M. College, near Starkville, on Tuesday morning, Feb. 22. He was buried here Wednesday afternoon. Brother and Sister Kaiser are among our most loyal people, and that so great a sorrow has come to them is deeply regretted by their many friends and acquaintances in this city."

Rev. T. L. Porter, pastor of the Eureka (Miss.) charge, says: "We are praying for and expecting a successful year. The Lord stands ready to bless us if we will only submit our wills to his. I am making a strenuous effort in behalf of the Advocate." Brother Porter's letter brought us 6 names for our mailing files. We are grateful for the good work that he is doing for the Conference organ.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Bolton, Miss., desires us to state that he is no longer Secretary of the Church Extension Board of the Mississippi Conference. That position is now held by Rev. L. E. Alford, of Brookhaven, Miss., to whom the brethren should write concerning such matters as are usually handled by that official. Brother Dawson's letter brought us some subscriptions to the Advocate, of which we make grateful acknowledgment.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., writes as follows: "I am making a campaign for the Advocate. I never have any trouble in securing subscriptions for our various benevolences from those who read our Conference organ. Rev. J. H. Mitchell, our presiding elder, held our first quarterly conference on Saturday, Feb. 20. We had a good congregation, a good sermon, and splendid reports. The work continues to prosper."

Writing under date of February 22, Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Heidelberg, Miss., says: "Our first quarterly conference has been held. Rev. G. H. Thompson, our presiding elder, was on hand and preached a most excellent sermon. He commended my board of stewards, stating that this charge had made the best financial report of any that he had visited up to that time. My prayer meeting at this place, which formerly had an attendance of about a dozen, has greatly increased. There were 73 persons present last Wednesday night."

In a decision handed down last Monday, the Mississippi Supreme Court sustained the constitutionality of the May-Mott-Lewis prohibition law. This opinion makes it illegal for social clubs to keep liquor in private lockers. The Court, among other things, said: "Whiskey is a good thing in its place. There is nothing like it for preserving a man when he is dead. If you want to keep a dead man, put him in whiskey; if you want to kill a live man, put whiskey in him." This is rather an unusual deliverance for a high judicial tribunal, but we are very much pleased with it. Anyhow, it is the truth.

We take off our hat to Rev. J. G. Johnson, who serves the Black Hawk and Acona charge (North Mississippi Conference). He gave us on February 22 a club of 10 subscriptions, with a check to correspond. Referring to his work, Brother Johnson says: "Everything seems to be moving along nicely here. We are planning and praying for a great year." It is doubtful whether there is another stretch of territory anywhere in Mississippi that is so completely under Methodist influence as that over which Brother Johnson has supervision, and it embraces in its population quite a number of choice Christian workers.

Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Guntown, Miss., writes: "We had our first quarterly conference at Saltillo, Feb. 14-15, and the occasion was a most enjoyable one. The congregations were good and the stewards made good reports. The assessment for ministerial support was fixed at the same that it was last year. Brother Mitchell, our presiding elder, gave us three strong and helpful sermons. We are having an encouraging attendance upon public worship and 4 members have been received since Conference." We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Brother Carlisle for 1 new and 5 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. S. N. Young, Barlow, Miss., 2; Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, Athens, La., 7; Rev. Leon I. McCain, Dubach, La., 7; Rev. W. W. Mitchell, West Point, Miss., 2; Rev. M. F. Adams, Fayette, Miss., 7; Rev. W. L. Blackwell, Vancleave, Miss., 2; Rev. W. L. Storment, Coffeeville, Miss., 4; Rev. G. P. McKeown, Richton, Miss., 2; Rev. R. P. Goar, Palestine (Miss.) charge, 2; Rev. R. F. Harrell, Centerville, Miss., 2; Rev. J. W. Thompson, Meadville, Miss., 4; Rev. N. L. Loftus, Lena, Miss., 5; Rev. P. M. Brown, Natchitoches, La., 2; Rev. J. W. Price, Benton, Miss., 3; Rev. J. R. Murff, Fulton, Miss., 2.

Bishop E. E. Hoss spent the latter part of last week and last Sunday in Shreveport, as the guest of Dr. George S. Sexton. A great banquet with three hundred plates was given in his honor one evening and good fellowship was at high tide. The principal address of the occasion was delivered by the Bishop on "Metbodism." Dr. R. H. Wynn spoke on "Methodism and Education;" Mr. J. C. Foster, a layman, on "The Progress of Shreveport Methodism;" Mr. J. C. Gredier, a Presbyterian, on "Metbodism as Viewed from the Outside;" and Dr. G. S. Sexton, on "The Work of the First M. E. Church, South, at Shreveport." Bishop Hoss remained in Shreveport over Sunday and occupied the pulpit of First Church. We are pleased to be informed that the Bishop seemed to be in good physical condition.

REV. F. MATTHIES DEAD.

Rev. F. Matthies, a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a member of the New Orleans District Conference, died in the Charity Hospital, on Feb. 17, where he had been taken about two weeks before.

He was for more than fifty years the religious leader in his community. He loved the Church and made many sacrifices in its interest. He was a great friend to the pastor and presiding elder. He was in his eighty-fifth year at the time of his death, and leaves a wife who is 87 years old. He had no children of his own, yet he leaves four step-children, whom he loved as if they were his own. His life was one of many years and hard work, but now he is at rest with his Lord. May the Lord bless the loved ones that he has left behind! TIMOTHY V. PETERS.

Mrs. SINA E. CHANDLER (nee Sanders) was born on Oct. 23, 1892. She joined the M. E. Church, South, during her childhood and remained a consistent member until her death. She was married to Mr. W. F. Chandler on Aug. 21, 1912. While it was never the writer's pleasure to be very well acquainted with her, he is glad to say on the authority of others who were intimately associated with her that she was one of the noblest young women ever reared in Claiborne County. On Feb. 17, 1915, she was called from earthly toil to a mansion in the skies where she will await the coming of her loved ones whom she has left behind. Her body was laid to rest in the family cemetery near Sarepta, the funeral service being conducted by her pastor. G. G. YEAGER, Pastor.

SAMUEL C. NESMITH was born at Brandywine, Miss., on Nov. 28, 1886. He united with the M. E. Church, South, when he was about fourteen years of age; and as a Methodist he was observant of the fundamental principles of Christianity, allowing the Bible alone to be the ruling guide of his unfaltering faith in Christ. As a citizen, we had no better in the State. To his pastor he was always kind, and was always ready to rally to his support and assist him in the defense of the truth. On Dec. 25, 1914, the gentle spirit of this young man was called from his labors to his reward in heaven, and on the following day his body was laid to rest at Sarepta, Miss., the funeral service being conducted by the writer and the Masonic Lodge in which he held his membership, in the presence of a large number of bereaved friends and relatives.

G. G. YEAGER, Pastor.

Mrs EMMA AUGUSTA MELDER passed peacefully to her eternal reward on Jan. 26, 1915, at her home near the little town of Melder, La. She was born in North Louisiana and came to Rapides Parish with her parents while young. She was married to Mr. H. L. Melder about 36 years ago. Of this union were born one son and four daughters, who, with a number of relatives and friends, mourn her untimely demise. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, for almost 40 years. She was a good wife, mother, and neighbor. May those who loved her best make that preparation that will permit them to join her on the heavenly shore. The funeral service was conducted by the writer in the presence of a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends in the cemetery at Melder.

L. E. CROOKS, Pastor.

Mrs HUGH WAGNER, aged 71 years and 5 months, died on Feb. 18, at her old home near Ridge, La., after a severe illness lasting eight days, which was caused by pneumonia, this being the fifth time she had been attacked by that disease. She leaves a large family—3 sons, 7 daughters, 52 grandchildren and 39 great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. She lived a most useful life and was loved by all who knew her. Her children have lost a devoted mother and others a friend. She was a good Christian woman, having been a member of the M. E. Church, South, since her girlhood and she served her heavenly Father well, doing all the good she could while here on earth. She has gone to her reward. He who doeth all things well will comfort the bereaved ones in this time of sorrow over the loss of their mother and friend.

ARTHUR HOFFPAUIR.

LULA GALLOWAY, daughter of Brother and Sister Vernon Y. Felder, of Magnolia, Miss., was born on July 14, 1909; was baptized by Rev. Jas. G. Galloway on Aug. 23, 1909; was received into the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sept. 27, 1914, and died on Feb. 12, 1915. Such are the facts of this little life as they may be written by a pastor's hand; but the history of a life cannot thus be recorded with any degree of accuracy or satisfaction. No one knew this little personality with its tender charm and winsome ways as father, mother, sisters and brothers knew it, and none feel so keenly the shock of the sudden ending of her earthly life as they; yet the sorrow of the home is sweetened by Christian resignation to the Heavenly Father's will. An earthly home has been saddened, but the heavenly home is made brighter and more attractive in the knowledge of the little one's presence there; and there is joy among the angels of God because the Better Country is being peopled with the redeemed, whose robes have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

J. A. MOORE.

Again death has come to the home and has taken away a young mother, happy in her husband's love and that passingly tender joy of a mother in her first-born. Mrs. ANNIE SUTTON, daughter of Mr. Gus and Mrs. Gussie Rhodes, was born near the town of Gibbs, Bienville Parish, La., on June 8, 1892; died at her home in Gibbs on Dec. 30, 1914, and was buried in the Mt. Lebanon Cemetery on the day following. On Dec. 14, 1913, Annie was happily married to Mr. Harry Sutton. To this marriage was born, on Dec. 23, 1914, a baby boy, who survives the dear young mother and is blessed with the tender care of devoted grandparents. The stricken husband and many loved ones and friends are left to deeply mourn their loss, while they bow with Christian fortitude and faith to this decree of the Divine will. She was a noble type of Christian womanhood and met death without a fear. No words of comfort can assuage their grief, but from hearts similarly stricken we bring our offering of tenderest sympathies that they may help to strengthen those who sorrow. May He who bringeth solace and strength and peace to the hearts of his children graciously abide with the loved ones in this time of grief.

SAGE TEA PUTS LIFE AND COLOR IN HAIR
Don't stay gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens hair so naturally that nobody can tell.
You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.
Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.
This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

"TIZ" FOR ACHING, SORE, TIRED FEET
Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.
Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. From the Field.

Seminary, Miss.

I have been noticing the letters concerning the work in the Advocate. I am certainly glad to see that much good is being accomplished for the Lord in the different fields of labor. The Lord has been with us also in our work this year. We have had 13 accessions to the Church, 5 by letter and 8 on profession of faith. This being my first year in the pastorate, I feel that I am weak and ask the prayers of all the Christian people. I wish to apologize to the Advocate for not sending in any subscriptions as yet; but on account of a great deal of sickness among my members and for other reasons I have not heen able to do much soliciting. However, I have the promise of several renewals, and will endeavor very soon to secure as many new subscriptions as possible.—S. E. Stepp, P. C.

Eucutta, Miss.

Our welcome on arrival here was very cordial, and when the parsonage was reached there were many things of a substantial nature to bring cheer and gladness to our hearts. After almost compieting the second round on the charge, I can state that sufficient interest has been manifested by the six congregations to make the outlook encouraging. February 5 was the occasion of our first quarterly conference here and the good attendance both upon the business session and at the 7 p. m. preaching service was gratifying, and all who were present on the occasions mentioned had a splendid opportunity for receiving spiritual strength and stimulation from the presence and instruction of our genial presiding elder, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson. In the operation of our plans, by the aid of the Holy Spirit and the co-operation of the people, we are earnestly expecting a creditabie year's work, for which the praise and honor shall be given unto Him who constraineth us.—Chas. E. Downer.

A NOTE FROM TEXAS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Enclosed find money for another year's subscription for the New Orleans Advocate. While it has been just thirty years since I attended a session of the North Mississippi Conference, I have by no means forgotten my home Conference, nor the many with whom I was once associated. I see some who were converted under my ministry and in revivals where I was helping occupying prominent places in the ministry, and other whom I have known for over half a century on the retired list, and it does me good to keep up with them. And yet there comes before me a vision which creates both sadness and joy when I learn that the death angel has severed the brittle thread of life and caused some to leave the walks of life. But a joyful thought comes rushing in its stead when I think of meeting them on the other shore, where we will be free from the decrepitude of age.

I notice that Rev. S. M. Thames has lost a son. He was only 5 years old when I saw his father in 1884. I know how to sympathize with one when the death angel enters his family circle and takes a promising son. My sympathy is with Brother Thames in this sore bereavement and I pray that God's sustaining grace may fill the vacancy caused by his great loss.

Dr. R. W. Jones was one of my personal friends. He was a gentle, sweet-spirited Christian of the highest type. I remember one night that I spent in his home, when, after attending prayer meeting, we went into his study and carefully examined a manuscript I had written on Partial Atonement, Foreknowledge, and Secret Council. And when I met him twelve years ago at the General Conference in Dallas, Texas, nearly the first thing he said was, "Why have you not published that manuscript?" I loved Dr. Jones as I have loved but few men in life. Yet, perhaps, I ought not to say this, for love is a cement that binds all God's people together and causes us to get above personal ambition and foolish whims. If there is one on earth whose soul I do not love and for whose well-being I can not pray, I pray God to reveal the same to me, and give me grace to measure up to my duty in this respect.

I was greatly disappointed in not being able to attend the Conference at Starkville and once more be in the home of Dr. T. C. Wier.

Wishing you a successful year, I am, yours in Christ,

Frisco, Tex. S. W. MILLER.

TEACHING THE CHILDREN TO SAVE.

The systematic saving of a certain part of one's income is to he commended, and mothers should strive to get their children into this habit while they are quite young. It has been noticed many times that the children who are taught to save their pennies and nickels are the ones who make the substantial business men and women. In a broad sense, success in business merely means saving—the spending of less than one earns.

Too many mothers foster a habit of extravagance in their children by permitting them to spend money foolishly. While the spirit of saving should not be exercised to the extent that the children are denied playthings and the pleasures that go with youth, the indiscriminate spending of pennies and nickels for candy and sweets should not be tolerated.

Along with the habit of saving, our boys and girls should be taught business principles, should be taught to depend upon their own resources and reasoning, to a certain extent, at least.—The Indian Farmer.

The Sunday School.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Rev. V. C. Curtis of Lexington, has organized a Wesley Bible Class with an enrollment of 38, with prospects of securing as many more. His Home Department has 45 members and the Cradle Roll 16. Curtis knows how to get things done on the first round.

Another organized class is reported from Grenada with—think of it—85 members. They will not be long in finding the other 15. Mrs. Ludie Stokes is teacher.

The Susie Thomas Bible Class in Starkville has caught the spirit of Christ. This class is never so happy as when it is lending a helping hand to one of its members, or to a lonely, sick, struggling girl on the outside.

The Gladney Bible Class in the Sardis Church could not but heed the cry of Belgian mothers for milk and bread for their starving babies. In His name this class sent a check through our Mission Board for $12 to save the lives of a few.

Water Valley, Main Street, got a vision last year when Brother Curtis showed some of the possibilities of Sunday school work. This school has an enrollment larger than the church membership. The preacher and superintendent are of one mind as to their work, and that means that this school will soon be one of our standard schools.

The First Church in Water Valley leads all others in some respects. The Home Department is the largest in the Conference, so far as I know. Miss Lillie Hartwell, the superintendent of this work, is a genius. Her wonderful success is due to the following method: "Always keeping on keeping at it." Judge McGowen is making a great church school. One more point will put this school where it belongs—at the top.

So many people say, "Tell me, what is a standard Sunday school?" We certainly ought to know. A school that does all that is required of it will have every member of the church studying the Bible; every member praying, and every member enlisted in some definite work. A standard school will make a standard church, and a standard church will have many members living the Christ life.

Our Conference adopted a report to this effect, that our presiding elders and pastors would ask the Sunday schools to pay the assessment for Sunday school work by the first of March and remit to Rev. V. C. Curtis, Lexington, Miss.

THE COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

"The determining factor in the future welfare of our great government, is the country Sunday school."

It has long been recognized by sociologists that it is far more important to prevent crime than to punish the criminal. The philanthropists of the day are directing their energies rather to the prevention of pauperism than to feeding the poor and clothing the naked. Not that the latter aims are being neglected, but the former are being more earnestly stressed.

As we face our country's future, our Church's future, and above all, and what is most vital to all, the future of our posterity, it is far more important that we use our endeavors to prevent the possible conditions referred to last week, than to wait and try corrective measures later. Dr. Josiah Strong is not a pessimist, nor an alarmist, though some have called him both. Rather he is a man who, having given careful study to the questions discussed, has worked out irrefutable logical conclusions from present day conditions, unless the currents change. He is trying to get us to see possible dangers and put into operation preventive measures now, rather than attempt correctives later.

As our population in the South, especially in Mississippi, is rural, not urban, but with a tremendous tendency towards the latter condition, we might well give careful attention to preventive measures. The best of these, unquestionably, is the Sunday school. In the March issue of our Sunday School Magazine, are to be found the following statements: "The Church is getting from the Sunday school 95 per cent of its ministers, 95 per cent of church workers, 85 per cent of its church members, and more than 75 per cent of its church organizations."

The following facts are gleaned from the Journal of the Mississippi Conference, recently held in Columbia:

In the Brookhaven District there are 21 pastoral charges, 61 church buildings, 70 organized congregations, and 59 Sunday schools, which shows that 11 congregations are without a Sunday school.

In the Hattiesburg District, 25 charges, 76 churches, 91 congregations, 71 Sunday schools—20 congregations without a Sunday school.

In the Jackson District, 23 charges, 76 churches, 83 congregations, 73 Sunday schools—10 congregations without a Sunday school.

In the Meridian District, 21 charges, 73 churches, 80 congregations, 68 Sunday schools—12 congregations without a Sunday school.

In the Newton District, 24 charges, 64 churches, 96 congregations, 80 Sunday schools—16 congregations without a Sunday school.

In the Port Gibson District, 22 charges, 64 churches, 72 congregations, 58 Sunday schools—14 congregations without a Sunday school.

In the Sea Shore District, 24 charges, 65 churches, 78 congregations, 72 Sunday schools—6 congregations without a Sunday school.

Thus, in the entire Conference, there are 160 pastoral charges, 501 church buildings, 570 organized congregations, and 481 Sunday schools, giving us a total of 122 congregations without a Sunday school. I suppose it will be conceded without question, that this is the best showing made by any denomination operating in this territory. Also that the growth of the Sunday school sentiment in our Conference is most gratifying. Yet we have 122 congregations too many with no Sunday school, and from these 122 communities not less than 200 young people will move into our towns and cities within the next ten years. What are we going to do about it? It is earnestly to be hoped the appeal of our Field Secretary found in the Advocate of Feb. 18, will be accepted by the 47 pastors having under their supervision these 122 congregations without a Sunday school.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

This Little Girl Had A Spinal Deformity

Little Miss Taylor had Potts Disease, a progressive, destructive disease of the spinal column, usually tubercular, and often accompanied by paralysis. The trouble in this case had been in existence three years when her mother, Mrs. W. S. Taylor, R. F. D. No. 2, Clinton, Ind., brought the child to this Sanitarium, Feb. 22, 1910. At that time, because of the disease and deformity of the spine, the child's head was forced forward—her chin in contact with her chest.

This picture, recently taken, shows her condition and appearance at this time. Write Mrs. Taylor. In treatment of this case plaster paris was not used. The GRACIOUS REVIVAL AT WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

On the evening of February 15, Rev. Lloyd Decell, of Wayneshoro, Miss., opened at Whitworth a series of revival services which have proved to be a great joy and blessing to all the members of our college family. For years past, the religious atmosphere at Whitworth has been a source of great gratification to those who know and love the life of this institution. Indeed, it is almost impossible for any one to remain here long without being conscious of the decided Christian tone of the school, as it manifests itself through many of the teachers and active workers of the missionary society and Young Woman's Christian Association. But never has the spirit of helpfulness and anxiety to be about the Master's business shown itself so prominently as it has within the past few days.

From the opening service, Mr. Decell had the interest and sympathy of his audience to such an extent that even those who had been out of harmony with the thought of having a protracted meeting were eager to listen to his messages. His sermons were straightforward, practical and full of feeling and power. He seemed to understand intuitively the needs of each heart. The services increased in interest and in definite results until the closing hour, Sunday night, when five young ladies joined the Church and almost forty went forward to say that during the course of the meeting they had definitely decided to consecrate the remainder of their lives to the service of Christ. This means that there are now very few at Whitworth who will not, henceforth, make themselves felt as church workers. Our hearts are very happy as we sing: "Blessed be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

JANIE H. DRAKE,
Lady Principal.

SIXTEEN YEARS OF TROUBLE.

Ended for H. H. Jackson, Friar's Point, Miss., with the use of Gray's Ointment. "I am glad to report that it has made a permanent cure of a sore of sixteen years' standing," he writes. This is one of the numerous instances of the remarkable curative powers of Gray's Ointment. Since it was first prepared in 1820, it has been used year in and year out by American families for boils, sores, ulcers, wounds, burns, bruises and all abrasions and eruptions of the skin. It quickly heals the skin trouble and is a sure preventive of dangerous blood poison which often follows from a neglected skin wound. Only 25c a box at druggists. Get a free sample by writing W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

MORE LOAN FUNDS.

The office of the Board of Church Extension is in receipt of title to a section of Jefferson County, Montana, land. Rev. and Mrs. E. J. Stanley of Whitehall, Montana, are the generous donors. The value of this land is conservatively estimated at $7000. Brother Stanley's interest in Church Extension is well known throughout all our borders. He had perhaps more to do with creating the sentiment out of which our organized Church Extension work came then any other, and has never failed in his interest from the beginning. He is greatly rejoiced over the good providence of God that makes it possible for him to give to the Board this $7000 Loan Fund.

This contribution of Brother and Sister Stanley brings the total contribution to our Loan Fund Capital from the little Montana Conference to $43,020.81. Only three Conferences have gone beyond this figure, the Baltimore, the Louisville, and the Missouri, and the Montana Conference is crowding the Missouri and the Louisville.

We are also in receipt of a check for $250 from the wife of a Methodist preacher with the instruction that the amount is "to be appropriated where you think most needed," and with the request that the name be not published. We have added it to the Loan Fund Capital, and are most grateful to this modest saint.

The total contributions to the Loan Fund Capital for the present fiscal year amount at this writing to $97,278.99. There is urgent need for $2721.01 additional to make the $100,000 for the fiscal year. Send in your contribution!

W. F. McMURRY,
Corresponding Secretary.

PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS MEAN BAD BLOOD.

People who have impure or impoverished blood should be careful to take only a vegetable and temperance remedy such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is and has been for over 40 years.

The first day you start to take this reliable medicine, impure germs and accumulations begin to separate in the blood and are then expelled through the eliminative organs.

In place of the impurities, the arteries and veins gradually get fresh vitalized blood and the action of this good blood on the skin means that pimples, boils, carbuncles, eczema, rash, acne and all skin blemishes will disappear. Then you must remember that when the blood is right, the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys become healthy, active and vigorous and you will have no more trouble with indigestion, backache, headache and constipation.

Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to-day at any medicine dealers; it is a powerful blood purifier, so penetrating that it even gets at the impure deposits in the joints and carries them out of the system.

Depend upon this grand remedy to give you the kind of blood that makes the skin clear, the mind alert, the vision keener and puts ambition and energy into the entire body. You won't be disappointed. For free advice or free booklet on blood, write Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets not only the original but the best Little Liver Pills, first put up over 40 years ago, by old Dr. R. V. Pierce, have been much imitated but never equaled, as thousands attest. They're purely vegetable, being made up of concentrated and refined medicinal principles, extracted from the roots of American plants. Do not gripe. One or two for stomach corrective, three or four for cathartic.

Wherefrom they drink who have confessed Love's name;
And, having tasted of that draught divine,
Their hearts go forth, more holy than they came.

With such exultance, leaving that high place,
I dared not look—I being among the least—

NOTICE OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will be held at Corinth, March 25-29. Itta Bena concurs in the selection of another meeting place, as they found it impossible to entertain us before June. They had no delegate at Aberdeen last year, consequently when the invitation was extended and accepted they did not know of the decision to hold meetings early in the spring in the future.

The names of all delegates must be sent at as early a date as possible to Mrs. S. F. Riley, Corinth, Miss.

An executive session of the Conference is called for Thursday morning, March 25, and a meeting of the District Secretaries for the Monday after the adjournment of the Conference.

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE,
President.
Mrs. M. C. GUERRY, Secretary.

AN APPRECIATION.

To the beloved secretary and my "sisters in the work" of the Hattiesburg District:

Language cannot express my deep appreciation for the great honor you have bestowed upon me by naming the nursery in our Wesley House at Biloxi for me. This is a "living memorial" that will go on and on for the extension of the Master's kingdom. Sisters, I sincerely thank you from the very depths of my heart for this token of your love and affection for your Ex-District Secretary.

While serving you in this capacity, each and every one of you were just lovely to me, and your co-operation was nearly perfect. My efforts were feeble, bnt with His help, I did the best that I could. My love for you is and always will be very strong. "There is a tie that binds." Let us do all in our power to help our present Secretary. Oh! how she needs our prayers, our sympathy, and our co-operation! Yours with gratitude,

(Mrs. J. R.) "MARY" ELLIS.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS IN KOREA.

The work of evangelization has had for the past few years somewhat of a setback on account of the political condition and a somewhat curious and unwarranted system of espionage which was operating against our organized work. This has been greatly relieved. Much more liberty is being given and we are enjoying quite a good deal of freedom in carrying forward the work of the kingdom. Backsliders are returning; new societies are being organized, and the old organized societies are receiving new believers. We are planning to hold in each church in the district a revival within the next three months. We are expecting to see many souls born into the kingdom. I ask that special prayer be offered for the native preachers and the missionaries who will take part in this special campaign.—W. G. Cram, Songdo, Korea.

I have never known the Korean Christians to be more genuinely desirous of the things that are truly spiritual than they are right now. In some directions we hear of revivals and times of deep heart-searching. From Songdo comes the news that they are having a meeting here with from 1200 to 1500 persons present every night. Around Wonsan, even in places where for many months past there has not been an attempt to hold services on the Sabbath, we find the people coming out gladly. We have seen a number shedding tears of deep contrition when they think of how they denied their Lord. Our colporteurs and others are selling more copies of the Scriptures now than ever before. Only a couple of weeks ago a company of them sold over 1700 volumes in one day. The Church has been purified, and the people are responding to the wooing of God. I therefore look for him to "make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."—C. T. Collyer, Wonsan.

A NEW AUXILIARY AT RIDGELAND, MISS.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Corresponding Secretary of the Mississippi Conference Missionary Society, reports a new auxiliary at Ridgeland, Miss., which was reported to her the day after her return from the annual meeting. We are always glad to make mention of any new auxiliary, and we ask the prayers of the women throughout the connection that this work may be blessed of the Father, and that its membership may grow in knowledge and numbers, and ever be a factor for good in the community.

CHANGE IN SECRETARY OF SARDIS DISTRICT.

Mrs. T. T. O'Bryant, of Sardis, Miss., has resigned the secretaryship of the Sardis District, and Mrs. High, of Hernando, has been appointed in her stead. We regret Mrs. O'Bryant's inability to remain with us in the active service, but we extend to Mrs. High a cordial welcome and bespeak for her the hearty co-operation of every auxiliary in the Sardis District, and assure her of the earnest prayers and support of every officer in the North Mississippi Conference Missionary Society.—N. Miss. Monthly Bulletin.

VALUABLE DONATIONS.

The following donations have been made to the Co-operative Home at Corinth, Miss.: Sidon, 48 jars of fruit; Baldwyn, 26 jars of fruit; Coldwater, 26 jars of fruit, 3 quilts, magazines; Boonevilie, 11 jars of fruit; Starkvilie, 29 jars of fruit; Prairie, 1 comfort; Lexington Young People, $2.50; Clarksdale, $10.

WESLEY HOUSE, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

The San Antonio Wesley House is located in a Mexican community of 25,000 people. The kindergarten is doing most active work, and on a recent cold day there were forty little Mexican children present. Two visitors were present, and these little folks gave them a cordial greeting in English, which had been learned through the plays of the schooi. The Camp Fire Girls are being used for the betterment of the community in a large way. The library is furnishing a point of contact with many young men. The relief work done by the deaconesses is most helpful just now, owing to the fact that thousands of Mexicans have come to the United States during this recent war. They have been able to conserve much of the fruits of the Wesley House work at the Mexican church, two blocks away.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Is Harmless To Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

Arouses the Liver and Purifies the Blood

The Old Standard general strengthening tonic, GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC, arouses the liver to action, drives Malaria out of the blood and builds up the system. For adults and children. 50c.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup, and watch that cough vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

It's really remarkable how promptly and easily it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. A splendid remedy for bronchitis, winter coughs, bronchial asthma and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

MRS. KATHERINE LEE MAY.

KATHERYN LEE MAY (nee Moore) was born on March 13, 1889; died on Jan. 6, 1915. Miss Kate, as she was called by those who knew her, was the daughter of Brother B. F. Moore, of Mitchell, La. She was married to Mr. Alvin H. May, on May 5, 1914. Sister May was a prominent figure in the Mitchell community and I am sure no one ever lived there who had more friends than she. She was a devoted Christian, having professed faith in Christ while but a girl. She united with the M. E. Church, South, at Mitchell, La., and remained true to the Church at that place until her marriage, when she moved her membership to Bon Ami where she and her husband expected to make their earthly home. Miss Kate graduated from Mansfield Female College in June, 1909, with honors, after which time she taught as principal of the public school at Mitchell, until her marriage. She was an excellent teacher, giving perfect satisfaction to the patrons. No one who ever lived so short a time, and few who live long lives do more than she did for the moral and spiritual uplift of her community. She was a devoted wife, a loving daughter and sister, as well as a true friend to all who knew her. She leaves a husband, a father, three brothers and four sisters to mourn her death. Her brothers are O. F. Moore, of Mitchell, W. T. Moore of Shreveport, and Homer Moore of Bon Ami. Her sisters are Mrs. J. E. Williams, of Butler, Mrs. O. N. Browne, of Mitchell, Miss Margrett Moore, of Pickering, and Miss Rubye Moore, of Mansfield College. She was the daughter-in-law of Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, at whose home she passed away. The funeral service was conducted by the writer in the Methodist Church, at Mitchell, in the presence of a large company of relatives and friends, on Sunday, Jan. 17, 1915, after which we laid her body to rest in the Mitchell Cemetery to await the resurrection of the dead, when she shall hear the glad words, "Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." To the bereaved husband, father, relatives and friends, we extend our sympathy, and pray God's blessing upon them in this sad hour of bereavement; and may they all be true as she was and meet her in that city above, eternal in the heavens. Realizing that our loss is her gain, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

WEEK OF PRAYER AND SELF DENIAL.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

The visible results of the week of Prayer and Self Denial have shared in the general depression in Missionary finances. First of all, they have been slow coming in, and what is of more concern, they are disappointingly small. Last year, by the 15th of February, we had received $9392; this year at the same date, we have received only $2670. This is not due to lack of preparation and cultivation. The care and thoroughness with which the Church was prepared and furnished with suitable helps was far beyond that of last year. We refuse to believe that the above showing gives the whole story, even in dollars and cents. If so, the financial conditions prevented the pastors from giving to the Church a fair opportunity to respond, or the offerings of the people would have gone far beyond that sum. We think the explanation lies in three directions:

1. The pressure had been so unusual in the effort to pay out all the assessments in the fall that it was not thought wise to urge this offering.

2. The general financial depression lay too heavy on the minds of men for any extra or, to them, unnecessary appeal to take effect.

3. In some instances the occasion was used to raise money on the regular Missionary assessment or to provide for specials already assumed. We are led to this last supposition by some correspondence we have had on the subject, growing out of the financial uncertainty of the future.

However it came about, it is a distinct disappointment. The more so at this time when we shall have to cut our appropriations to the fields to a point where it will hurt the missionaries and the cause. This Self Denial income will go to the special cause for which it was given, but it is easy to be seen that it will not go very far.

It is no time to fold our hands or to grieve over the past. We face a condition and not a theory and we must not falter. We rely on the loyal and self-denying spirit of our pastors and people for early and liberal collections and prompt remittances to save us from further embarrassment. We can refuse to appropriate and so keep from going further into debt, but what is to become of our great mission work and its future? Furthermore, what is to become of the appropriations already made for 1915? The answer is with the Church. We await it with concern but not with dismay, for we believe in the Church we serve.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

A BOOK YOU NEED.

The Southern Methodist Handbook for 1915, edited by Dr. Thomas N. Ivey, Editor of the Christian Advocate, is a publication that every Methodist should have. It gives information concerning every department of the Church's activities and is a book of reference that is not duplicated by any other publication of our Church.

The 1915 volume gives in its "Bureau of Information" certain historical facts concerning our Church that could not be secured except by tracing the records through various Methodist histories. "Some Educational History in Brief" gives the history of the Vanderbilt University case during 1914, the action of the General Conference on that question, and the progress made in the work of the Educational Commission since the session of the General Conference. "Directories and Rolls" gives a list of Bishops, Connectional Officers, General Boards, Commissions, and Committees of the Church, and a Directory of Missionaries in all of the foreign fields. In the department "The General Conference" is given a review of the work of the General Conferences of our Church since 1846. A new department is that of "The Annual Conferences," which gives, under separate heads, among other items, the following information concerning each Conference in the home field: Number of charges; membership; average per member paid for missions and ministerial support; names of superannuates, supernumeraries, presiding elders, Conference secretary, chairman of various boards. In the "Department of Statistics" is given detailed information concerning all of our General Boards and the statistics of the Church at the close of 1914. Other departments are: Unification of Methodism. Our Publishing Interests, Biography, Benevolent Institutions, Other Branches of the Vine, Miscellaneous.

This valuable Handbook is a volume of nearly two hundred pages and is sold for only twenty-five cents a copy, postpaid. Reduced price for three copies and more. Send your order at once to Smith & Lamar, Agents, Nashville, Tenn., or to Dallas, Tex., or Richmond, Va.

RHEUMATISM

is a disease of the blood. Medical authorities have so proclaimed it for years. It must therefore be treated through the blood. CAR-DA-RUMA is a scientific preparation of a well known Southern physician who used it in his private practice many years with marked success. It contains nothing of an injurious character but eradicates the disease through nature's channels. Its ingredients are expensive, but in order to introduce it in your locality we will on receipt of fifty cents send you, post-paid, a regular two-dollar size bottle with a coupon entitling you to a rebate of fifty cents on your subsequent purchase in case you require more than one bottle. CAR-DA-RUMA is not a cure-all but a prescription for Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Sciatica, and Lumbago. It is positive in its effects and has many remarkable cures to its credit. If it was not as we represent it we could not afford to make you this offer.

Plant Benders and Long Staple Cotton Protect Your Crops by Use of

Veldop
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFFICE

Although the cotton crop of 1914-15 was the largest ever grown, yet the percentage of long staple cotton will undoubtedly prove the smallest ever raised.

The cause of this is due in a great measure to the fear of the Boll Weevil. The planter, not wishing to take the chances of having his staples destroyed from this increasing pest, has therefore planted an earlier maturing crop, but even this has suffered severely from the ravages of the Boll Weevil.

The coming year the demand for long staple cotton from Spinners will be materially increased for the change in the style of women's dresses is bound to make more demand for fine goods, and this means the mills must have the staple cotton to do the work, but where is the supply of the staple cotton to come from? The Egyptian crop next year, on account of war conditions will be decidedly smaller, besides, with the pink boll worm, the seed will be very much inferior, which necessarily must make the next Egyptian crop decidedly inferior in staple.

Now if the heretofore raisers of staple cotton can be assured of protection from the ravages of the Boll Weevil by the use of Veldop, have they not a grand opportunity to again plant staples and be ready to take advantage of the demand, and the good prices for staple cotton which are bound to come?

The Seashore Divinity School will open on the night of June 22, and close at the noon hour of July 1. This is to give information to all the preachers of Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, so that they may make their arrangements to be present.

We have positively secured Dr. Geo. L. Robinson, of the McCormick Theological Seminary, who was with us three years ago. No man we have had gave more universal satisfaction than did Dr. Robinson. Since he was with us he has spent one year in Palestine and will come to us with freshness of mind and heart relating to the times of the Prophets and Apostles.

It is a regret that we have to announce that Dr. McFadyen cannot be with us, though we expect to have men of equal ability.

OUR SUPERANNUATED PREACHERS.

According to the Southern Methodist Handbook, there are in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 787 superannuated preachers, which is a little more than one for every ten men in the itinerant ministry. One would think at the first blush that a Church of more than 2,000,000 members would find it such a small task to care for these few hundred veterans that they would always be amply provided for and never permitted to want for anything. The proportion between the number of our retired ministers and the number of our communicants is 1 of the former to every 2555 of the latter; so it will be seen that if every church member would contribute as much as 25 cents for this purpose each of our superannuates would receive from the income thus accruing about $638 a year, to say nothing of the earnings of the endowments that have been raised for this cause. And since very few of our Annual Conferences provide homes for their superannuated preachers, a salary of between $600 and $700 each would hardly be adequate to meet their necessities and make them comfortable. But, as a matter of fact, in most of our Conferences the most needy of these men receive less than $300, a large majority of them less than $200, and many of them scarcely anything at all. Nor do the widows and orphans of preachers who are claimants upon this fund fare any better. The truth is, the way we are meeting this sacred responsibility in nearly every part of the Connection is a positive reproach to us.

About thirteen years ago our Church, with great enthusiasm, launched a movement to raise a general Superannuate Endowment Fund of $5,000,000. The total resources of that fund on April 1, 1914, amounted to only $348,263.65, which is far from being a creditable showing, considering the financial strength of our Church and the time that we have been engaged in accumulating it. It is to be hoped, however, that since the last General Conference levied upon the entire Church an assessment of not less than 1 per cent of the amount paid for ministerial support, more rapid progress will be made in the future in building up this important and urgently needed fund. The Joint Board of Finance in each of our Annual Conferences ought also, in our judgment, to try to build up a local endowment fund to aid in caring for the claimants on the Conference for which it acts. The Editor of the Advocate had the honor of drawing up one of the memorials to the General Conference which, several years ago, resulted in making these Joint Boards of Finance quadrennial instead of annual bodies, and the thought that was uppermost in his mind in doing this was that it would enable them to enterprise and operate plans that would provide more effectively for our Conference claimants. We confess, however, that the outcome of this change has been to us a distinct disappointment. Nothing like as much has been accomplished in this direction as we had hoped and expected. About the only Joint Board that we know of in this section of the Church that has achieved anything of consequence in the way of creating a Conference endowment fund is that of the Mississippi Conference, which is certainly to be commended for its continued activity in this respect.

We regret to say that occasionally we hear a remark or see an expression in print which seems to imply that the Joint Board of Finance is not considered a very important one; or, at least, that it is not to be ranked in importance with the Boards of Education, Missions, Church Extension, and Sunday Schools. But, in our opinion, this is an entirely erroneous conception. We do not believe that any other Board has weightier responsibilities or larger opportunities for service than the Joint Board of Finance. And certainly there is no other Board that needs to be more alert and diligent throughout the entire year in taking care of the interests committed to its hands. Our superannuated preachers and the other Conference claimants ought to be paid at least quarterly; it is a rank injustice to them to force them to wait until the end of the year for their pitifully small allowances. And, as we have already said ways and means should be devised for increasing the appropriations to these deserving and needy claimants. Surely, here is a field of work that is quite worthy of the attention and energies of the ablest and most resourceful men in any Annual Conference.

We do not, as a rule, show enough appreciation of our veteran preachers, who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and have spent their strength so freely in the Master's service, while receiving salaries upon which they could hardly live. We are inclined to think that we are disposed to shelve them too quickly when they begin to get a little old, and after they are retired, we support them far too meagerly, and often we seem to forget them entirely too much. We saw some years ago the statement that a Northern Methodist Annual Conference had adopted the beautiful custom of appointing a committee every year to prepare a letter and send it to each of its superannuate members, along with some fitting present as a token of the esteem and affection of their brethren in the active ranks; and we have sometimes wished that this practice could be transplanted into the Annual Conferences of the Southern Methodist Church. These heroes of the itinerancy will not be with us long; shall we not do more for them in a substantial way, and also be more generous in our manifestations of reverence and love for them? It would certainly be to our credit to do so.

Fanny J. Crosby, Methodism's sweet singer, who so recently went from us, was once asked by an official of the Methodist Episcopal Church to write a hymn specially designed for the retired ministers of that denomination. In reply, she wrote the following letter:

"I trust that you will allow me to substitute a poem for the song which I promised you. It seemed to me, after trying to compose the words of a song, that I could better present a plea in a poem to be read than in a song. I have written the same and enclose it. Could I voice my inmost thoughts in words, I am sure the appeal would touch every member of the Church. I pray that what I have written will touch many." The title of Miss Crosby's poem is "Love's Recompense." And since they apply equally to our own worthy veterans, we take pleasure in publishing these true and heautiful stanzas:

"There is a work of love and duty
That devolves upon us all;
There is a tender, pleading message,
And its tones like music fall:
Help our weary veteran preachers,
Scatter roses o'er their way;
Rally round them, hasten quickly—
Not to-morrow, but to-day.

"From the well of deep affection,
Now their hearts with gladness fill;
Do not wait their names to honor,
Till the pulse of life is still;
Break the box of alabaster,
Pour its oil upon them now,
Make their dwellings bright and happy,
Wreathe in smiles each furrowed brow.

"They have borne the royal standard,
Of our Master and our Lord;
From the time of early manhood
They have preached His holy Word;
But their strength has lost its vigor,
And their cheek its youthful glow;
For the frost of age has touched them
And their locks are white as snow.

"Watchmen on the walls of Zion
Though their feet no more will stand,
From the top of Pisgah's mountain
Faith beholds the promised land;
Soon triumphant like an army
Marching through the realms above,
They will shout the grand old story,
Robed in white and crowned with love."

A SIGNIFICANT DECLARATION.

In a statement setting forth his views as to the leading political issues now before the American Nation, made for publication on February 21, United States Senator Albert G. Cummins, of Iowa, included prohibition, referring to it in the following language: "The saloon must go. Sobriety must be the rule of conduct for the future."

There is much significance in this statement when it is remembered that Senator Cummins is one of the ablest of American statesmen—a man who is of Presidential size and the possible nominee of the Republican party for the Chief Magistracy of the Republic next year. Surely, a better day for the temperance cause has dawned when so distinguished an official, and one with such large possibilities before him, dares to speak out so boldly against the iniquitous liquor traffic. It is enough to encourage one to hope that the day when our glorious flag will float above a saloonless Nation is not far distant.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says: "It is better to he a standpatter than a pitapatter."

None but a manly man can be a worthy minister; and integrity and moral courage are a large part of manliness.

RIPENING FOR THE SKY.

"Growing old," sad lips repeat,
As gold fades into gray,
"Ah no," Faith cries—"Not growing old,
But richer day by day,

"More free from earthly dross, more calm,
Less like the restless sea;
Crowned with the sacred crown of peace,
God's high bequest to thee;

"More fitted for the starry spheres,
That seem so bright and near,
More filled with light reflected from
The heaven that grows so clear;

"More like the lovliest one in all
The universe so broad;
Ah, Christians, can you e'er grow old
While growing nearer God?"

A MESSAGE TO MINISTERS.

By Gipsy Smith.

"The spirit of the Lord God is upon me because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek. He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

The man who can say these words holds the greatest office in the world.

He represents God.

He bears the greatest message ever committed to a human being.

He possesses it and must tell it out. "Lift up thy voice, lift it up with strength, be not afraid. Say unto the cities of Judah, 'Behold your God.'"

There is only one book daring enough to say, "Thus saith the Lord"—that is the preacher's book.

The preacher is the man with authority. Let him be a good man; then all heaven is behind him. There is no limit to his work or the results of his work. He tells of light for those who sit in darkness, of strength for those who are weak. He carries comfort for those whose hearts are broken. He defies the open grave, for he preaches a gospel which some day will split every tombstone and wipe every tear away, changing sighs into songs.

The preacher's message is one of hope, of light and joy because it is a message of salvation—salvation from the guilt and power of sin.

The preacher must stand beneath the cross of Christ—the refuge for a lost world—for his name and his glory. He must be so hidden in the power and eternal mystery of that atoning cross that when he speaks those who bear will recognize the voice of God.

Oh, Brother Preacher, you are an honored man, hidden in God, taught in a sacred place the secrets of God and his great loving purposes for men.

Your first and last business must ever be to unfold that great mystery—"to make all men see."

This must be done tenderly, lovingly, faithfully as in the presence of God.

The preacher should be the cheerlest, happiest of men. For him there is no fear of failure—if he is faithful, God will see that he is fruitful.

God has said, "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.'

Believe in God.

Believe in your office.

Believe in your message—live it, and preach with conviction drenched in the power of the Holy Spirit.

Then, you preachers may "arise and shine, for thy Light is come and the glory of the risen Lord is risen upon thee."

DR. JOWETT ON COMPROMISE.

One of the most destructive and mischievous elements in modern spiritual death is neutrality, indifference, compromise. Dr. Jowett, in one of his recent sermons, sets these evils out well. He says:

"'Thou art neither cold nor hot.' These Laodiceans were neutrals, devoid of passion, destitute of any enthusiasm, loafing along in moral indifference. In times of great crises they were 'any way,' 'either way,' altogether tepid regarding the issues. And in times of great laxity they maintained the same tepidity, utterly unconcerned with the prevailing degeneracy. 'Thou art neither cold nor hot.'

"Now the subtle temptation for characters like these is to regard their tepidity as something better, and to call it by a grander name. Lukewarmness is described as tolerance, or moderation, or charity, or largeness of mind or breadth of temperament. And so dispassionateness comes to be thought of as piety, and moral distinctions lose the sharpness of their outlines. I am not, therefore, surprised to find that these 'neutrals' were unconsciously losing the truth of moral judgment. 'Thou sayest, I am rich * * * and knowest not that thou art poor.' The unexercised powers of discernment have become weakened, and are no longer sensitive to the primary contrasts between real poverty and real wealth. These 'neutrals' had forfeited their power to appreciate the ideal. They looked upon the commonplace, and regarded it as superlative. They looked upon trifles, and thought them great. They had ease, and they interpreted it as peace. They had many comforts, and they confused them with comfort. They had knowledge, and they thought it wisdom. They had many gifts, and they confounded them with grace. They handled ordinances, and they thought they were touching God. And this is always the Nemesis which attends the soul that haunts the ways of compromise. It loses sight of the ideal, and forfeits its appreciation of the unsearchable riches of Christ. These 'neutrals' of the olden time regarded themselves as rich in wealth and raiment, and in reality they lacked the true treasure and the discerning sight and the incorruptible vestures of the soul."—The Presbyterian.

ORGANIC UNION.

By Rev. C. H. Briggs, D.D.

(Dr. Briggs, who is stationed at Sedalia, Mo., is one of the strong men of Southern Methodism. Editor of the Advocate.)

The Federal Council of Methodism side-stepped the Atlanta case. To have decided in favor of our Church would have raised a storm in the North that would probably have resulted in wrecking all plans for a closer union of Methodism, while a decision against us would have stirred our Church in about the same measure. Frankly, the writer expected to see the measure adopted by our last General Conference split on that rock. Probably the Council was wise in declining to pass upon that case, which was really an inheritance from bygone days and not a new issue. But, if such cases are too delicate for adjustment by that Council, is there any ground for hope that when details have to be considered, we can find a basis for agreement? The effort may be worth making, but any solution of the problem is in the far distant future. A pastor in the M. E. Church lives in the same block with me, and our churches are but a block apart. We are old enough and cool enough to discuss these matters with perfect freedom. But yesterday he said to me, that the attempt to work out the details of a plan of union was like the courtship of a widower and widow, when both had a number of children. I can think of no better figure to represent the delicacy of the situation.

Some of our people have been unduly excited over the proposed union. When the report of the action taken by our General Conference went out a lady called me up and wished to know what it meant, saying that if the two Churches were going to unite she would join the Catholics. As I was her pastor more than forty years ago, I knew that her memories ran back to some experiences a younger generation knows nothing about. I reassured her by telling her that the action taken at Oklahoma City was only along the line of the plan advocated by Drs. McAnally and Scarritt many years ago and that nothing would be done hastily. The undue haste with which our Presbyterian friends passed their plan of union resulted in a partial failure of the plan and there is still among us a Cumberland Presbyterian Church. That is an object lesson from which the Methodists should learn wisdom. No readjustment of Episcopal Methodism is a possibility unless the colored membership of the M. E. Church shall elect to join with other colored Churches in making one great colored or African Methodist Church. Our brethren of the M.E. Church can not in honor crowd out their colored members and I am sure have no disposition to do so. To go back to an old school reader for a figure, the old lark will not need to move her nest until the colored people agree to get together. Should that be accomplished—and it will be the work of years at best—then it will be early enough to see whether the children can be so managed that the old folks can safely marry. But so many years will be needed to work out all these details that the older folks who remember too many unpleasant things, may be ere then in heaven, where they may be surprised to meet some they did not like very well in this world. The organic Union of American Methodism may come, but it can not be hastened by hurrying, nor is it likely to come till Methodists generally are ready for it—From the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

SOME THOUGHTS ON METHODISM IN LOUISIANA.

The Louisiana Conference was organized in 1845 with a few more than 11,000 members, about 3000 of whom were colored; but of those days and men I shall have nothing more to say, as, it is of recent developments that I desire to write.

Methodism in the United States from 1890 to 1906 had a growth of about 25 per cent, and from 1906 to 1913 there was a growth of nearly 19 per cent. An interesting feature of this growth is found in the following: The Northern section showed a membership of 38.5 per cent male, and 61.5 per cent female, while the Southern section shows 40.9 per cent male and 59.1 per cent female. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a larger male membership than any other denomination operating in the same section. We reach men by the grace of God and should, as a result, be able to enterprise easily those causes that are now appealing for liberal help at our hands. But these statements should not cause us to smile too broadly, for Methodism has not anything to spare to her credit in the general decrease from 68 per cent of Protestant religious or church population in 1890, to 61.6 per cent in 1906.

How is the situation in Louisiana? Not so cheerful, if you please. The Roman Catholics increased more than 100 per cent from 1890 to 1906, going from 211,000 to 477,000, using round numbers; the Baptists nearly held their own decreasing from 24.4 per cent to 23.8 per cent, while the Methodists decreased from 16.4 per cent to 10.2 per cent. This shows that the Methodists were pretty heavy losers as compared with the status of the Churches named above. Louisiana's growth in population was 21 per cent, I think, during the last decade. This makes the case worse for us, for Methodism in the other Southern States is keeping pace with the growth in population.

According to the statement before me, 50.6 per cent of the entire population of the State belong to some Church. Only four other States show a larger percentage of church membership, but of this membership Southern Methodists can claim 4 per cent, or only 2 per cent of the State's entire population, after more than 69 years of earnest labor.

Though there are about 7 Catholics and 2 1-3 Baptists to one Methodist in the State, there are more than 300,000 white people among us without any Church relation. Surely, there is recruiting ground here for us. Let us put on the whole armor of God and fight the good fight of faith this year and win many trophies for our Lord.

I hope to take up other features of this subject later.

FRAUDS.

By J. D. Barbee.

Under the surprising title of "The Flying Inn," Mr. Gilbert K. Chesterton, the distinguished English writer, has given the public a novel both interesting and unusual. It discloses a range of knowledge and power of treatment quite unusual among modern fiction writers. His book seems to be a satire on a number of shams, and, as a sample of his style, I cannot resist the impulse to let your readers see the following delicious bit on the "higher critics:"

"It was not until almost a year after that it was felt in philosophical circles that the last word had been said on the matter of the flying inn's sign. An estimate of the incident and of its bearing on natural and supernatural history occurred in Professor Widge's celebrated "Historicity of the Petro-Piscatorial Phenomena;" which so profoundly affected modern thought when it came out in parts in the Hibbert Journal. Everyone remembers Professor Widge's main contention, that the modern critic must apply to the thaumaturgics of the Lake of Tiberias the same principle of criticism which Dr. Bunk and others have so successfully applied to the thaumaturgics of the Cana narrative. "Authorities as final as Pink and Toscher," wrote the Professor, "have now shown with an emphasis that no emancipated mind is entitled to question, that the Aqua-Vinic thaumaturgy at Cana is wholly inconsistent with the psychology of the 'master of the feast,' as modern research has analyzed it; and indeed with the whole Judaeo-Aramaic psychology at that stage of its development, as well as being painfully incongruous with the elevated ideals of the ethical teacher in question. * * * But as we rise to higher levels of moral achievement, it will probably be found necessary to apply the Canaic principle to other and later events in the narrative. * * * This principle has, of course, been mainly expounded by Husher in the sense that the whole episode is unhistorical, while the alternative theory, that the wine was non-alcoholic and was naturally infused into the water, can claim on its side the impressive name of Minns. * * * It is clear that if we apply the same alternative to the so-called Miraculous Draught of Fishes we must either hold with Gilp, that the fishes were stuffed representations of fishes artificially placed in the lake (see the Rev. Y. Wyse's "Christo-Vegetarianism as a World-System," where this position is forcibly set forth,) or we must, on the Huscherian hypothesis, deprive the Piscatorial narrative of all claim to historicity whatever.

"The difficulty felt by the most daring critics (even Pooke) in adopting this entirely destructive attitude, is the alleged improbability of so detailed a narrative being founded on so slight a phrase as the anti-historical critics refer it to. It is urged by Pooke, with characteristic relentless reasoning, that according to Huscher's theory a metaphorical but at least noticeable remark, such as, 'I will make you fishers of men,' was expanded into a realistic chronicle of events which contains no mention, even in the passages evidently interpolated, of any men actually found in the nets when they were hauled up out of the sea; or, more properly, lagoon.

"it must appear presumptuous or even in bad taste for any one in the modern world to differ on any subject from Pooke; but I would venture to suggest that the very academic splendor and unique standing of the venerable professor (whose ninety-seventh birthday was so beautifully celebrated in Chicago last year,) may have forbidden him all but intuitive knowledge of how errors arise among the vulgar. * * * I crave pardon for mentioning a modern case known to myself (not indeed by personal presence, but by careful study of all the reports), which presents a curious parallel to such ancient expansions of a text into an incident, in accordance with Huscher's law.

"It occurred at Pebbiewick, in the south of England. The town had long been in a state of dangerous religious excitement. The great religious genius who has since so much altered our whole attitude to the religions of the world, Missysra Ammon, had been lecturing on the sands to thousands of enthusiastic hearers. Their meetings were often interrupted, both by children's services run on the most ruthless lines of orthodoxy and by the League of the Red Rosette, the formidable atheist and anarchist organization. As if this were not enough to swell the whirlpool of fanaticism, the whole popular controversy between the Milnian and the Complete Subiapsarians broke out again on the fated beach. * * * It is natural to conjecture that in the thickening atmosphere of theology in Pebbiewick, some controversalist quoted the text 'An evil and adulterous generation seek for a sign. But no sign shall be given it save the sign of the prophet Jonas.'

"A mind like that of Pooke will find it hard to credit, but it seems certain that the effect of this text on the ignorant peasantry of southern England was actually to make them go about looking for a sign, in the sense of those old tavern signs now so happily disappearing. * * * The 'sign of the Prophet Jonas,' they somehow translated in their stunted minds into a sign-board of the ship out of which Jonah was thrown. They went about literally looking for 'The Sign of the Ship,' and there are some cases of their suffering Small's Hallucination and actually seeing it. * * * The whole incident is a curious parallel to the Gospel narrative and a triumphant vindication of Huscher's law."

A PRECIOUS GIFT TO EMORY UNIVERSITY.

Our new University is receiving constantly valuable contributions to its historical collection. Already the collection is one of the most valuable of its kind in America, containing as it does many rare autograph letters of the Wesleys, Whitefield, Fletcher, Benson, Adam Clarke, and the historic men of American Methodism.

Recently Rev. H. W. Bowman, of the Louisiana Conference, sent to Bishop Candler, the Chancellor of the University, a precious miniature of Bishop Bascom, taken in the early life of the illustrious man. The gift was accompanied by the following interesting letter:

"Baton Rouge, La., Feb. 23, 1915.

"Bishop W. A. Candler, D.D., Atlanta, Ga.

"Dear Bishop: I will now fulfill my promise to you at Conference as to sending the picture of Bishop Bascom.

"I will give you a brief history of the donor of the same to me. R. R. Morgan, a man of wide reading, fine early training, and who was converted to God when he was past seventy-two years of age and to whom I had preached regularly every Sunday for three years, gave it to me. He made to me the following statement: "Brother Bowman, this picture has been in my possession ever since I was a young man. In my youth I have seen that man in my home and heard him preach many times. I remember him now as well as though it was a few days ago."

"Brother Morgan was a noted gambler on the River in his early life, and being a great reader of Paine, Voltaire, Hume, and later of Spencer, Darwin and Ingersoll, he became a pronounced infidel. Indeed, he might have been designated as a confirmed atheist.

"A meeting was being held in the Court-house at Homer, La., in 1906, conducted by Charles Dunaway. It was at the close of the service on a Wednesday morning, and the preacher had announced the services for the rest of the day, and had called the congregation to rise for the benediction, when a voice from the audience was heard saying: "Do not close the service yet, as I have something to say." We looked and saw this white-haired man coming feebly down the aisle, and facing the packed house, he said: "You all know me. You know what position I have always taken on religious things. I want to tell you now, I was in error. I have accepted Jesus Christ as my Savior, and he has accepted me, and from now till he shall call me home, I shall serve him the best I can." Of course, you can easily imagine the glorious hour that followed. My wife happened to be the first one to get to the white-haired man, and as I looked, I saw him as he not only reached out his hand, but embraced her in his arms, patted her on the head and said, words I shall never forget, and which help me to this day: "O Sister Bowman, I am so happy in my Savior, and your husband is the one who has led me to Christ. Where is he that I may embrace him?" Nine years have passed since then, and now he is totally blind, and sits alone, with only one comforting thought, that he has found his Savior, and awaits the summons with patience.

"Who knows but that some of those gracious truths he heard from the man whose likeness he had kept through these many years, may have ripened at last into this glorious fruition? That eternity alone will reveal.

"This picture I love because of Captain Morgan, and I turn it over to the safe keeping of our new University, praying God that this University may ever be dominated by that Spirit who can bring men into a conscious knowledge of their Savior.

"Should there ever be a move to decorate those walls with the likeness of some of our great men of the past, and should this picture become one to be so placed, it will be a pleasure to me to contribute my mite towards that end.

"I am yours cordially,

H. W. BOWMAN"

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE
BOARD OF EDUCATION

Rev. J. M. Henry, D.D., President

Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Sec'y

Rev. C. A. Battle, Treas., Baton Rouge, La

(This Department is conducted by Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Secretary of Education, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Publicity Commissloner.)

A STUDENT'S VIEW.

The following article was written by one of the students of Centenary College at his own instance, and is a sample of the feeling that is almost universal among the students—an unsolicited tribute to the excellent work of the institution. The writer is from McDonoghville, and is a graduate of the McDonogh-Jefferson High School. We venture the assertion that if more of our boys from the city would attend Centenary the effect would be felt in the future of New Orleans Methodism. The moral and religious ideals that the atmosphere of a college impresses upon a student are determining influences in his life and work.

THE NEED FOR CENTENARY.

(From a student's viewpoint).

When we sum up the various phases of human nature that the college life must deal with, we begin to see how grave is the situation confronting any college in properly meeting all these requirements.

First, we will consider the material part of the college, that is, the buildings with all their necessary equipment. The buildings must be properly equipped as far as sanitation, heat and lights are concerned. Has Centenary lacked in any of these? Has any fair-minded student had any other than a good word to say concerning the material part of Centenary? Every student who has understood Centenary, who has been fed at her table, and who has resided with her family can but offer a sincere commendation.

Next, we must consider the curriculum that any school has to offer. With its curriculum up to an accepted standard, a college has one feature that should go toward its success. But another thing: it must have competent teachers to give its courses of study. Without these, and without teachers who have a personal interest in the students, a college is far from a success. Let us consider Centenary's curriculum and its faculty. Can any college offer better? Has any college a higher standard for its courses of study or a more competent corps of teachers? We may quote a certain visitor's words with a clear conscience and echo them back to him, "Our faculty can deliver the goods."

The next phase of college life that all concede to be important is athletics. The student body, while not as large as it might be, goes into athletics whole-heartedly and gives its best efforts for the good of Centenary. The student, or prospective student, who so desires can have here any form of college athletics, such as foot-ball, basket-ball, base-ball, tennis and track. Centenary's athletic field and grand-stand would be a credit to any college and the contests that are frequent features of the athletic spirit of Centenary are held in its bounds.

The last and most important phase, yet one that is not stressed by many colleges, is the spiritual and moral influence it exerts, that contributes so greatly to the growth of manly characters. The proper foundation for such a character is, without doubt, the best part of its life that any college can offer. What would it profit a father to send his son to a college without this feature largely in the ascendancy? What value would a student derive from his time in college if he did not gain the right stimulus to the growth of his character along with the good result of his studies? We have observed the underlying strength of this influence at Centenary. As a whole, its students can be considered true Christian gentlemen, and the influence they add to the already strong influence of its faculty and its code of rules make this feature of Centenary's a great one. To send into the world men who will accomplish something, whose influence for good is felt by all who come in contact with them, should be the aim of every college, and with this influence as a predominant feature its success will be sure. We all desire to be able to accomplish something good and recognize the great importance of this feature. We have felt its uplifting powers and have resolved to try to raise our lives to a higher plane. The mutuality of feeling that exists between students who have felt and understood what this influence means, and that strength of conviction coming from its acknowledgment by us, at last results in the development of that noblest of man's privileges, brotherly love.

As we look back over the joys and troubles of our college life, we can see what our college has done for us. We see how it has put its material part, the work of its faculty, and its spiritual and moral influence into the shaping of our lives and characters. We can see how Centenary has formerly put men of character into the world and we thus say that its future can only be successful. We see men going forth from her doors into the future who will assist in the making of this world a more desirable place of habitation. And in view of all this, we can say that Louisiana, the United States, and the world need Centenary.

HUNTER NEAL, JR.

DR. WYNN'S VISIT TO NEW ORLEANS.

Dr. Wynn, the President of Centenary College, spent a part of last week in New Orleans, after preaching in two of the churches on Feb. 28, and conferred with the pastors and a number of laymen about the plans for the endowment and equipment of the college on a permanent basis. As a result of his visit, Dr. Wynn is very much encouraged as to the outcome of the campaign. While he was able to present the matter of personal subscriptions to only a few persons, he secured definite promises of more than $1000 for the endowment fund. The work of getting personal pledges on the endowment will be prosecuted vigorously in the city and elsewhere.

The Special.

The churches in New Orleans raised the special collection for Centenary with a good degree of success. Complete returns have not reached us yet, but the reports of the treasurer, which will be given from time to time, will doubtless show excellent collections from the city churches.

PAYMENT OF CAMPAIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Many subscriptions to the Conference Educational campaign were taken last year to run for several years. It is important that the Conference Treasurer have an account of the payment of these subscriptions. If any pastor has reported any of these subscriptions as paid without giving the Conference treasurer an account of it, it is important that the treasurer be notified as to the name of the subscriber who has paid, so that the proper credit can be made.

The treasurer wishes to state also that he will not give receipts in the case of each small subscription that is paid, as the amount of time and postage thus expended would be too large; but all payments will be properly credited on the subscription card, and credit given to the charge from which it comes.

EASTER SUNDAY, FOR THE ORPHANAGE.

By reference to the minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, you will find on page 12 where the recommendations of the Orphanage Board was adopted. Among these recommendations was the following: "We recommend that Easter Sunday and Work Day be observed as Orphanage Days for the purpose of raising funds for the Institution. A motion was also adopted " That all pastors, Sunday school superintendents, Epworth League presidents and Lay Leaders, be requested and urged to assist the Superintendent of the Orphanage in raising $12,000 for the maintenance of the Orphanage during the year."

By this unanimous action of the Conference we feel that every preacher, Sunday school superintendent, Epworth League president and lay leader in the Conference has had placed upon him the obligation to unite in an effort to raise funds for our work on the days appointed—Easter Sunday and Work Day.

Easter Sunday—April 4—is one of the days on which our Church is pledged to raise funds for our work. We sincerely trust that all our preachers and people will make a united effort to raise a large sum on that date.

We now have 100 children in the Orphanage. We have had appeals to take 44 more since January 1. We are struggling to provide for all that we can, but our limited income and the present crowded condition of the Home sadly limits our ability to respond to these appeals. Just a few days ago a prominent educator of the State wrote us a most pitiful appeal telling of the death of a widowed mother leaving four little children, with an aged and enfeebled grandmother the only relative to care for them, and this old lady helpless and dependent herself. Another widowed mother died in the Charity Hospital at Shreveport, leaving three helpless children, without a home. Her dying plea was that these children might be pleced in the Methodist Orphanage. She herself had been a member of the Methodist Church, and was from one of the prominent Methodist families of the State. Yet, our hearts and hands are full! Our funds are almost exhausted! "Times are hard," they say! Already we have 100 children to provide for! What answer will the Methodist preachers, Sunday school superintendents, lay leaders and church members give to this cry for help on Easter Sunday?

Remember there is no assessment for the Orphanage this year! We are dependent almost wholly on the response that comes from our appeals on Easter Sunday for the means necessary to carry us through the spring and summer months. We ask your generous help in this time of great need! Faithfully,

Social Service Commissions in other parts of the Connection, and all other Southern Methodists interested, are invited to be present on this occasion and participate in this consultation.

The Raleigh (N. C.) Times thus refers to two sermons recently preached in the Capital City of the Old North State by Dr. F. N. Parker, Professor of Biblical Literature in Trinity College: "Dr. F. N. A great congregation filled the church at the morning hour and for almost an hour Dr. Parker held the deepest interest in his theme, Sonship with God. Dr. Parker is one of the greatest preachers and thinkers of the day in the Southern Methodist Church, and it was a rare privilege to listen to two such sermons as he delivered on Sunday."

Disregarding the parish option law, the City Council of Shreveport ordered some time since a local option election in that municipality, which was held on March 4. The prohibitionists, believing the election to be illegal, did not generally participate in it, and the vote stood 1457 for the sale of liquor, and 42 against it. The wet vote is said to be somewhat more than half of the registered vote of the city. The issuance of saloon license has now been enjoined by the prohibitionists and the matter will be fought out in the courts. If the whiskey men are sustained in their contentions, the whole State will be more or less affected by the result, since the validity of the parish unit law is involved.

MORE LOAN FUNDS.

We are in receipt of a draft for $1000 from a worthy layman in California, which is to be added to the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension. This donation, together with other small items received since our last report, which was made on February 22nd, brings the total increase of the Loan Fund Capital for the present fiscal year to $98,312. It will require contributions amounting to $1688 to make the $100,000 for the fiscal year which closes March 31st.

CHIEFLY PERSONAL.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, our hustling pastor at Sherman, Miss., says: "My work is in good shape and the outlook is encouraging. Our Sunday school and prayer meeting are growing." Brother Bowlin's letter brought us 4 subscriptions to the Advocate from his charge.

Rev. D. L. Cogdell, who is on the Honor Roll of the North Mississippi Conference, will spend the remainder of the year at Corinth, Miss. Any community is fortunate to have Brother Cogdell as a resident. We have never known a worthier "knight of the saddlebags."

Rev. W. L. Broome, of Konawa, Oklahoma, sends us a subscription for Mr. H. A. Gassaway, a fellow-townsman, and adds: "Brother Gassaway came here from New Albany, Miss., to practice law. He and his family are valuable additions to our Church. I have been giving him the New Orleans Advocate to read occasionally and he wants to subscribe for it. You are certainly issuing a good paper."

Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss., sends us a club of 5 subscriptions, and makes the following reference to his work: "I have visited more than 135 families; have had 16 accessions to the Church—11 by certificate, 3 by baptism, and 2 by vows—and have baptized 20 infants. Our ladies have 'pounded' my wife with 14 chickens and Brother Walter Campbell gave us a pig." Evidently there are good times ahead for Brother Peebles.

Rev. Hilary Westbrook, pastor of the Waynesboro (Miss.) Circuit, writes in the following happy strain: "My wife is as happy as she can be this morning. The old cooking stove has been set aside and a new Charter Oak stove has been installed in our kitchen. If you will give the wives of Methodist preachers a chance they cannot be excelled when it comes to making music on a new stove, and all of us preachers like to hear good music in the kitchen. My work is on the upward grade, and I am happy every day."

Rev. W. W. Woollard presiding elder of the Columbus (Miss.) District, says: "The work throughout this district is moving along fairly well, but I am finding finances exceeding tight nearly everywhere. If conditions do not improve, we are going to have a very hard year. In some of the charges by strenuous efforts the collections have been pushed ahead of what they were up to the same date last year, but some of our pastors are being paid very little." It is to be hoped that the stewards everywhere will leave nothing possible undone to furnish our preachers sufficient funds to meet their current expenses. A minister cannot do his best work when he is cramped financially.

A correspondent sends us the following wedding notice: "Mr. Wilson Archie Giles, a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Giles, and Miss Annie Rubie Loflin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Loflin, were quietly married on the afternoon of February 17, 1915, at the parsonage in Leonard, Texas, by Rev. D. H. Dodson. Miss Loflin was formerly from Brandon, Miss., having moved to Texas about two years ago. She has made many friends in her new home by her genial disposition and kindly ways. Mr. Giles is a most superior and deserving young man. He formerly belonged to the United States Navy, being connected with the battleship West Virginia, and was in the battle of Vera Cruz. Lately he has been in the employment of the Wells Fargo Express Company. The young couple will reside in Leonard."

"THE PROBLEM OF THE RURAL CHURCH," IN LOUISIANA."

By Rev. T. V. Peters.

We bave many problems wbich we are trying bard to solve. We bave here in Louisiana the problem of putting Centenary College on a firm footing financially, the problems of the city church, and also that of maintaining the Church in the sawmill towns. Another problem of great concern, and one which, it seems to me, we are not trying to do mucb witb, is thát of the rural cburch. It seems that, as a great Church, we are doing very little to better conditions in the rural districts.

Tbe report of "The Country Life Commission," appointed by President Roosevelt in 1908, In part is as follows: "The time has arrived when the Church must take a larger leadersbip, both as an institution and tbrough its pastors, in the social reorganization of rural life." I believe this is true in regard to tbe Methodist Church, especially in Louisiana. We believe there are great opportunities for tbe farmers in this State, but a still greater opportunity for tbe Methodist Church in leading them to the realization of these opportunities.

As a Church what are we doing to better conditions on the farm? If you will study the minutes of our last Annual Conference, held at Sbreveport, La., you will see tbat the stronger preachers are sent to city or town churches. The Board of Missions is giving the larger part of its help to town or city churches. I am afraid we do not reatlize our responsibility to or the need of tbe rural churcbes.

A rural civilization must have a rural social center, and whether that social center is a saloon, a dance-ball, a club, or a churcb, it determines very largely the character of the man or woman connected with it. A rural church should be tbe rural social center. It is a fact that of all classes the farmer is naturally tbe most religious. He is in closer contact with tbe great forces of nature wbich express and reveal "His everlasting power and divinity." He is awed by the majesty of the summer storm, and by the pitiless power of the winter blizzard, and soothed by the balmy breezes of spring. The flower opens out its petals before his eyes as it welcomes and encloses tbe dewdrop. Tbe ancestral traits revealed in the young things as they come to the farm teacb him of the inheritance of evil as well as good. The wild life on the farm and that which flies over it reveal to him tbose implanted instincts that show God's method of caring for the sparrow. His very occupation develops in him the sterling qualities of industry, temperance, economy, and frugality, without wbich a profession of religion is a vain thing.

But wbile the farming class is undoubtedly the most susceptible of any class to religious impressions, more than 50 per cent of tbe country people have no church connection. They only send for the preacher for the solemnization of marriages and tbe burial of the dead. Is not this a great field for missionary effort? Surely there is not one so poorly occupied.

Tbere doubtless are several reasons for these conditions. The religion that will touch the farmer's heart and shape and mold it must not appeal to the emotions alone, though tbey have in it a large place. It must take in his wbole life—the plowing and the sowing and the cultivating and the reaping; the bome-life; tbe ethics of his business; his political life; the education of his children and their sports and plays as well. The farmer will sit at the feet of tbe sincere man, wbo knows his heart and life, and who interprets to him the will of God in tbe terms of farm life. For the support of a gospel of tbis sort the farmer's pocket-book will always open willingly.

The consumer whether in the city or country complains of the ever-increasing cost of living; the farmer of the ever-increasing cost of production. The food supply of this country can be doubled, but it cannot be materially increased until there are more skilled laborers on the farms. This skill can only be acquired on the farm, and can be retained on the farm only by making life in the country satisfactory to tbose born on tbe farm. This cannot be done witbout a material, intellectual, social, and religious life in the open country that will meet tbe wants of the country people, young and old. Will not the Methodist Episcopal Cburch, Soutb, realize here a great opportunity as well as a great responsibility.

A readjustment of the rural life is inevitable; but the only way it can be made is by the development of a rural civilization that will be satisfying to those who in tbe future must feed and clothe the world.

McDonoghville, La.

DON'T BE IN A HURRY.

Mr. Editor: I beg to be allowed to request the Anti-Saloon people of Louisiana to be in no hurry to promise their support to any candidate for Governor or the Legislature.

We, of the dry territory, have had our laws dictated by tbe brewers and mail order liquor dealers long enough.

We bave some rigbts and intend tbat these rights shall be considered, and the time to prepare for legislation is before and not after the primary election.

Our organization, tbe Anti-Saloon League of America, is non-partisan and welcomes to its ranks all who believe the licensed saloon is an evil, without regard to their political affiliations. The history of the movement shows that we are getting results. Some nine or ten States have climbed onto the water wagon in the past six months and others are preparing to join tbis happy band.

We believe that when the entries for State officers have been announced and their platforms published will be time enough for our people, individually, to select the man or the men for State officers, who are not tied to tbe idea that all of Louisiana is in the city of New Orleans.

We are all interested in New Orleans, and as a native of Louisiana personally, I desire to see her become the great city she ought to be.

But if this means liquor domination for all of Louisiana, with headquarters in New Orleans, here is where some of us balk.

I do not presume to influence your vote. Thank God, the time when one man can deliver the votes of a country parish in Louisiana has passed. I believe that our people constitute a large per cent of the people who are not boss-ridden; so, as Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Louisiana, I shall only ask to be permitted to make such suggestions from time to time as will in my judgment be to tbe interest of the cause we represent.

We have been inactive long enough. I have discovered that the politicians of Louisiana make the laws of Louisiana and the time for the common people to make themselves heard effectively is before and not after the primary election.

This is all for the present.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. TURNER,
State Superintendent Louisiana Anti-Saloon League.

CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA.

"According to the latest and most reliable data available there is a total Evangelical Church membership of 470,000 in the Republic of China. They are served by 548 ordained Chinese pastors, and 5364 unordained workers. In addition there are 4712 Chinese Christian school teachers, 1789 Bible women, and 496 native assistants employed in the hospitals. Other Chinese workers in the Evangelical Churches bring the total of the Chinese staff giving of their time to tbe service of Christianity up to 15,501. There are 2955 Christian congregations and the Chinese Christians contributed $320,900 for Christian work among their own people during the past year. Leading in this work of Christianization and guiding tbe destinies of tbe Chinese Church are 5452 foreign missionaries from America and Europe.

"There are 86,241 Chinese boys and girls in the primary and day schools of the Christian Church, and 31,384 students in the intermediate high schools and colleges maintained by the Evangelical Churches. There are 235 hospitals with 200 dispensaries which ministered last year to 1,322,802 patients.

"The Roman Catholic Church dates tbe founding of its work with the arrival of Francis Xavier in the early part of the sixteenth century. After many vicissitudes, passing through historic martyrdoms, that Church to-day reports its strength in China, viz: 48 Bishops, 1475 foreign priests, 701 Chinese priests, with 1,363,397 communicant members and 462,000 catechumens. The total increase in the communicant membership during tbe past year amounted to 83,645."

THE MODEL CHURCH.

Well, wife, I've found the model church,
And worshiped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times,
Before my hair was gray;
The meeting-house was finer built
Than they were years ago;
But then I found when I went in
It was not built for show.

The sexton did not sit me down
Away back by tbe door;
He knew that I was old and deaf,
And saw that I was poor;
He must have been a Christian man—
He led me boldly through
The crowded aisle of that grand church,
To find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singing, wife;
It had the old-time ring.
The preacher said, with trumpet voice,
"Let all the people sing;"
Old "Coronation" was the tune,
The music upward rolled,
Until I thought the angel choir
Struck all their harps of gold.

I tell you, wife, it did me good
To sing that song once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner
Who gets a glimpse of shore.
I almost want to lay aside
This weather beaten form,
And anchor safely in the port,
Forever from the storm.

Well, wife, the toil will soon be o'er,
The victory soon be won;
The shining land is just ahead,
Our race is nearly run;
We're nearing Canaan's happy land,
Our home so bright and fair.
Thank God, we'll never sing again,
"There'll be no parting there!
In heaven above, where all is love,
There'll be no parting there!"

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES.

The report of tbe Federal Census Bureau for 1913 shows some increase in the Nation's indebtedness over the Report issued in 1912, and a larger increase over that issued in 1890; but relative to population there has been a decline in the national public debt from $13.60 per capita in 1890, to $12.22 in 1902, and $10.59 in 1913. Tbe net per capita indebtedness of the States only increased during the same period from $3.37 to $3.57. The per capita debt in cities, however, has advanced rapidly, as is shown by the following figures: 1890, $14.79; 1902, $20.74; 1913, $35.81. The urban tendency of our population is keeping up; in 1890, about one-third of the country's population was in towns of 2500 and over; to-day approximately one-half of it is there.

THE BUNNY STORY.

A family of bunnies lived under a big stump,
They were merry and frisky and playful and plump;
All the evening they skipped by the light of the moon
And begged Mrs. Bunny to get dinner soon.
Mrs. Bunny brought onions and peas in the shell—
Where the tenderest radishes grew she knew well—
With a carrot or two on a cabbage leaf plate,
And the young Bunnies chatted, and, oh, how they ate!
They had napkins of lettuce leaves tucked snugly in,
That covered them up from their toes to their chin;
They nibbled the good things, and, wondrous to state,
They also devoured both their napkins and plate!
Said Mrs. Bunny: "Housekeeping, I find,
Is a thing I can truthfully say I don't mind,
For my work is so light and my duties so few,
With no napkins to wash and no dishes to do."

BABY HAD SWING IN ELEPHANT'S TRUNK.

A circus was passing through a country town. In the animal parade there were several elephants. The people stood watching the procession when a little baby, just able to walk, toddled out into the road directly in front of the elephants. Everybody stood expecting to see the little tot crushed by the big feet of the elephant. It was not so. The leader of the herd deftly and gently picked the baby up with his trunk and swung him out of danger, depositing him on the side of the road, none the worse for his remarkable swing in the trunk of an elephant.—Our Dumb Animals.

"KITTEN FLOSSIE'S STORY."

By Adelaide Heyworth Chapman.

"I hope the boys and girls who read my story will do just as their mammas and papas tell them to do and thus escape my sufferings.

"Little Alice, my mistress, had given me a warm bath one bright morning and put me upon my cushion before the grate to dry my fluffy fur. I didn't like to keep still, so I jumped down and started for the kitchen to get something to eat.

"Alice caught me and being afraid I would take cold; she tied a ribbon around my neck and fastened it to a chair near the fire again.

"This made me angry, and I bit through the ribbon and when the maid opened the door to let in a caller, I slipt out and ran as fast as my feet could carry me, thinking I would make my little mistress feel very badly for I knew she loved me dearly. I had not gone very far before I was very tired and the snow kept getting deeper and deeper until it almost touched my body.

"I was shivering and shaking all over and I wanted to go back to my happy home; but I was so stiff and nearly frozen that I could hardly move at all. I was wondering what I could do when I saw, right in front of me a tall pole with a beam across the top and something was nailed to it that looked like a box I had seen a man put letters into.

"I tried to climb the pole, but was so stiff I fell back several times, but at last I stuck my sharp claws deep into the wood and pulled myself up far enough to fall into the box.

"Being very drowsy, I must have fallen asleep. When I woke, I was in my soft lined basket in the cozy room of my dear mistress. She was feeding me warm milk with a teaspoon.

"I heard her tell some of her friends that her papa had followed my foot-prints in the snow and found me nearly frozen in the mail box."—Sunshine.

WASHINGTON'S GENEROSITY.

It was Colonel Seth Warner and his famous regiment of "Green Mountain Boys," who, after the evacuation of Ticonderoga, beat back a whole brigade of the hotly pursuing British in the Battle of Hubbardton. Colonel Warner spent so much in the cause of his country, and in aiding the needy families of his soldiers, that when he came to die, he left his home encumbered with a mortgage.

One day in September, 1789, Israel Putnam Warner, the elder son, was in the yard, grooming his father's war horse, and Seth, a lad of twelve or thirteen, was in the house with his mother, who happened to be particularly downcast that day.

"No, no, Seth," she said, sighing, "I can never pay, nor, with our means, begin to pay this dreadful mortgage. I hear it is to be foreclosed, and we must be driven from the pleasant home we have lived in so long, and, until your father's death, so happily. Your father fought as well as the bravest of them. He did more than his part for the cause, and wore himself out in the service. And yet his family is on the verge of beggary."

While she spoke, there came the sound of horses' hoofs, and Seth went to the window to look out. To his surprise, he saw two well-mounted gentlemen entering the yard. One of them was unusually tall, with a commanding face and carriage.

In another moment, the tall gentleman had entered the house. "I take this to be Mistress Warner," he said, with a gracious bow, "the widow of my much-esteemed friend, the late Colonel Warner, of the Continental army?"

"It is, sir."

"Will you permit me to introduce myself to you, madam?" he resumed, with winning dignity. "I am General Washington. After I arrived in this part of the country, a few days ago, I made—and I hope you will pardon me the liberty I took with your private affairs—I made some inquiries about you, and, to my deep regret, learned of your situation, and I was prompted to come and see you."

"I had little dreamed of such an honor, general."

"There is a rather heavy mortgage on your homestead," Washington went on, "and I propose now to leave with you the sum of money you will need to cancel it."

"Does the money come from the Government, sir?" Mrs. Warner asked, doubtfully.

Washington looked at her, and hesitated a moment; then he said slowly:

"In one sense, it does, madam. I am in receipt of a liberal salary from the Government, which, at my discretion, I may use to give aid to deserving objects. I know of no better service I can put it to than to relieve the family of so meritorious an officer of the Continental army as your husband was."

Upon this, Washington opened his valise, and took from it a bag of silver money, from which he counted out nine hundred and some odd dollars, which proved to be precisely the sum necessary, in principal, interest, and fees, for the discharge of the mortgage. He then took the hand of Mrs. Warner, who seemed inclined to remonstrate, but could not force the words from her quivering lips.

"Accept it; don't hesitate to accept it," Washington said, tenderly, but with an air that seemed to forbid any attempt at refusal. "It will relieve your most pressing anxieties, and soon you will enjoy those brighter days that the God of the widow and the fatherless has in store for you. And now, it only remains for me to say, as I do most sincerely, 'Heaven bless you, dear madam, heaven bless you.'"

And leaving the house, Washington immediately mounted his horse and rode away.—The Presbyterian.

GIVE YOUR BOY OR GIRL A CHANCE.

One summer a party were out camping in the Adirondacks. After a few evenings all the yarns and songs the men knew began to get stale, so some one suggested reading aloud around the camp-fire. Unfortunately, none of them had thought of bringing a book along, except one man who rather apologetically explained that he always carried a Bible, but expected it would hardly do, as half the party was composed of rough backwoodsmen—who would not understand it. Having nothing else, however, they started reading it, and it so happened that the simple backwoodsmen appreciated it most of all.

Don't be afraid to give your boy or girl a Bible because you think they won't understand it. It may be they will catch the meaning in it better than you do. In this day when the Bible is being crowded out of the public schools there is added cause for you to see that they have a Bible of their own. And now when you can get a beautiful Oxford Bible with the teacher's helps to assist in studying the text, they will soon learn to understand the world's greatest book. At least give your boy or girl a chance.—Methodist Recorder.

PERTINENT.

"How are you getting on at school, Johnny?" asked the father when his boy came home for the spring vacation. 'Fine, father,' was the encouraging answer. I can say 'Good morning' and 'Thank you' and 'If you please' in French. He was going to add to the list of things he could do when his sister broke in: 'How soon are you going to learn to say them in English?'"

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

OUR BEST KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

We learn something of God through nature. His existence, power, and wisdom are therein obviously reflected. The Psalmist was right when he wrote: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." Paul echoed the same great truth when he said: "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." But while there is undoubtedly a revelation of God in nature, it is neither a full, nor adequate disclosure of the character and attributes of Deity. Out of this insufficiency, arose the necessity for the written revelation of God, which brings vastly more information concerning our Maker than could ever be derived from nature's varied and widespread volume. It shows God to us as our Father, and in the unfolding of the great scheme of human redemption, sets forth in a most impressive and touching manner his mercy, patience, and measureless love.

But not even from the Bible, as glorious and indispensable as its inspired pages are, do we get our best and most satisfying knowledge of God. That must come to each individual soul as a direct communication from the Divine Father, through the Holy Spirit. In his remarkable conversation with his disciples on the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, Jesus said to them: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou are the Christ, the son of the living God? And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." It was of this spiritual revelation that St. Paul was speaking when, in writing to the Corinthians, he said: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit. * * * The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

It is only when "the Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God," that we learn to know our Heavenly Father in the highest and most certain sense. Thus alone can a knowledge of God be obtained that dissipates doubts, that gives sweet assurance, and that makes a trusting, loving, and largely useful Christian. However much knowledge of other kinds one may have of his Creator, it is worth comparatively little until it is rounded out and made complete by this direct revelation which the Heavenly Father makes to the soul in response to penitence and faith. Are there not many in the Church to-day whose supreme need is this clear and definite spiritual communication which lies within the reach of all? We fear that such is the case, and that this is also true of some ministers.

IS THERE NOT SUCH A ONE?

The campaign for Centenary College, under the leadership of Dr. R. H. Wynn and others, is being conducted with ability and energy. That the $6000 special maintenance fund will be successfully raised and the current expenses of the institution during the present session triumphantly met, there is good reason to believe. But that achievement, while it will help much, will by no means solve the vexatious problem of how the college is to be kept up in the future. As is well known, the tax that the city of Shreveport has by special agreement been levying for Centenary for a number of years will soon cease and there will no longer be any income from that source. It is hardly to be thought that the Louisiana Conference could impose and collect an annual assessment sufficiently large to make good this loss and, together with the tuition fees and the income from its other small resources, supply the institution with sufficient means to keep it going. The truth is, Centenary must have a considerably enlarged endowment, if it is to keep open its doors and maintain its rank as a college. The whole history of religious education in the Southern States within recent decades sustains this contention. Scarcely anything is now more generally accepted among educators than the view that a male college which is a private enterprise or which is owned by the Church cannot be successfully operated without a revenue-producing endowment of considerable size. In the case of State institutions it is different, for the reason that the State has the power to levy taxes for educational purposes and can make appropriations at will to the colleges under its care.

From the foregoing, it should, it seems to us, be evident to all that if Centenary is to live as a college it must have a much more ample endowment. In our opinion, the minimum amount that it will take to insure its success is $100,000, and in reality two or three times that much is needed. Where is this money to come from? The task of raising it by a popular campaign for small subscriptions is an exceedingly difficult, if not impossible one. What is needed at this critical time is for some man, or woman, to come forward and give $25,000 or $50,000 to this noble cause. In other words, Louisiana Methodism now needs a Millsaps or a Candler to step into the breach and lend her educational interests a strong helping hand. Is there not such a one somewhere among the more than 36,000 Methodists of this State? Here is a magnificent opportunity for some person of means who loves his Church and State to do a monumental work that will greatly bless both the present and future generations and outlive the stars.

Never did Louisiana need Centenary College so much as she does to-day when the tides of immigration are beginning to pour into her borders and the omens of a larger future for her are visible on every side. For our Church to surrender this great source of strength at such a time would be nothing short of a tragedy. We shall be culpable in the sight of God if we do not exhaust every possible effort to rescue Centenary College and place it upon a firm and efficient footing. Its location is a beautiful and ideal one, and we have in this institution, as it now exists, a splendid beginning. Let us rally to it, build it up, and equip it to do our work in the coming years.

Is it asked, How are we to proceed? We answer let us earnestly pray that God may lay this noble cause upon the heart of some Methodist who is able to give it large assistance. There is a mighty power in the united petitions of God's people. We have more faith in achieving results in this way than by giving banquets, or than by many other methods that are sometimes employed to promote such undertakings. It was by faith and prayer that the early disciples of our Lord so often accomplished what was seemingly impossible.

We do not desire by anything that we have said to discourage persons of small means from doing their part, or to create the impression that their assistance is of little consequence. It is incumbent upon us all to give our leaders in this educational campaign our hearty support and to make such contributions as we can. Every dollar helps, and when a number of small donations are added together they soon foot up a considerable sum. Still, as we have said, it is our conviction that if Centenary College is saved our people of wealth must come to the rescue. Who will be the first to lead the way, and thus honor God and write his name imperishably in the history of his Church?

DEATH OF FRANKLIN SAWYER.

It is with much regret that we chronicle the death of Mr. Franklin Sawyer, son of Dr. John T. Sawyer and Mrs. Elizabeth T. (McKnight) Sawyer, which occurred in New Orleans on Feb. 28, 1915. He was born in Arcadia, La., on July 10, 1885. He was endowed with natural gifts of a high order, and for a time attended Emory College, at Oxford, Ga. He was once on the staff of the Times-Democrat and evinced unusual ability as a writer. Mr. Sawyer was stricken with illness early in life, and made a brave and determined fight to overcome it. He traveled for quite a while in the West in the hope of regaining his health, but finally returned to New Orleans to be with his parents. He lived a Christian life and bore his afflictions well. He was not afraid as the end approached and he died trusting in Jesus. The obsequies, which were largely attended, were conducted by Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and the interment was made in the family tomb in the Washington Street Cemetery.

It is indeed sad to see one thus stricken in the early morning of one's career and called into eternity when ordinarily one's work would be just beginning; but God knoweth best, and we can safely repose our trust in his wisdom and love. All things must work together for good to those who love the Lord, and he unfailingly watches over and cares for his own. For the Christian, death is but the beginning of life, and after earth comes heaven, where sickness and weariness are unknown and manhood is in perfect flower. We extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved parents and other sorrowing relatives, and earnestly pray that they may have the comforting and sustaining power of the Holy Spirit in this trying hour.

THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Louisiana Conference was held in the First Methodist Church of New Orleans on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. The sessions were presided over by Mrs. Abel Bliss of Shreveport, the accomplished State President, and in the absence of the regular Secretary, Mrs. J. C. Calhoun of Rayville, Mrs. R. W. Winstead, of Natchitoches, was elected Secretary pro tem. The work of the Society in Louisiana was carefully reviewed, many superior addresses were made, and the exercises throughout were highly instructive and interesting. The presence and talks of Miss Belle Bennett, President of the Woman's Missionary Council, contributed largely to the success of the occasion. As the editor of the Woman's Department of the Advocate will doubtless furnish our readers with a full account of the proceedings of the conference at an early date, we will not undertake to give a report of what was done. We shall only say that the Southern Methodist Church has in Louisiana as fine a body of women missionary workers as can be found anywhere, and that they are alert, active, and faithful in the service of the Master. We trust that the new year upon which they are now about to enter will be the best in the history of this noble organization.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. S. Purcell has our thanks for a club of subscribers from Montrose, Miss. He adds: "Our school here is progressing nicely."

Rev. Robert E. Selby is having success in his work at New Augusta, Miss. He has been pressing the claims of the Advocate upon the attention of his parishioners recently, with gratifying results.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson continues to give a good account of himself at Crowley, La. He has won his way into the hearts of the people, and the various interests of the Church are flourishing under his guiding hand.

Rev. W. W. Drake is giving great satisfaction as pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans. He is preaching to fine audiences, and his prayer meetings are well attended and are occasions of much interest.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. Louis Voss, who spent the Sabbath in Bogalusa, La., the Editor preached last Sunday morning at the First Street German Presbyterian Church, of this city. The congregation was not large, but was quite attentive.

By order of the Annual Conference, every church and Sunday school in Louisiana is expected to take a collection for the orphanage at Ruston on Easter Sunday, April 4. Read what Superintendent Vaughan has to say on this subject on another page.

Dr. G. E. Cameron will begin a revival campaign at Alexandria, La., next Sunday. The preaching will be principally done by Evangelist D. L. Cole, of San Antonio, Texas, and the choir, which will be composed of fifty voices, will be in charge of Mr. Robert Huston.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, spent last Thursday in New Orleans. He was quite well and was in his usual genial mood. Dr. Cooper is arranging to take a party to the Panama-Pacific Exposition immediately after the close of his school.

Rev. S. S. Bogan, of Winnfield, La., sends us some names for our mailing files and calls for a list of our subscribers in his charge. As he usually does where he has sway, he is showing himself to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed" in his present field.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of New Albany, Miss., who is one of the strongest preachers in his Conference, reports that the prospects all point to a good year in his charge. The attendance upon both the regular preaching services and the prayer meetings is excellent.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, continues to magnify his office as a district superintendent. His pastors all love him and speak well of him. He is sounding an evangelistic note wherever he goes this year, as he also did last year.

Rev. W. N. Dodds, of Verona, Miss., in a letter bringing us some subscriptions, appends the following note: "The work is progressing nicely with us. We have a good Sunday school and one of the best prayer meetings in the Conference. I am serving an excellent people."

We have in hand the Bulletin of our church at New Albany, Miss., for March 7, which contains much information concerning the activities of Brother Pope's growing flock. We note that Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., is booked to begin a meeting at New Albany on April 4.

Mr. W. P. Kretschmar, of Greenville, Miss., reports that the Boys' Senior Class in the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church, South, at that place, held a memorial service in honor of the late Dr. H. M. Hamill on Sunday, Feb. 28. This service is said to have been a most interesting one.

We regret to be informed that Dr. W. H. Huntley, presiding elder of the Seashore District, has recently been ill, but are pleased to know that he has recovered sufficiently to resume work, though he is not yet fully at himself physically. We hope that he will soon completely regain his strength.

Mr. F. Skellie and Miss Elaine Griffin, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Griffin, were quietly married at the home of the bride's parents at Long Beach, Miss., on March 4, Dr. W. H. Huntley officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Skellie will make their future home at Long Beach. We extend congratulations and best wishes.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Dr. J. M. Brown, of Haughton, La., for a club of 5 subscriptions from his charge. Referring to his work, Dr. Brown says: "Things are moving on moderately well, considering the financial depression and bad weather. Up to date (March 5), we have had only two fair Sundays this year."

Rev. C. M. Chapman, our genial pastor at Rolling Fork, Miss., gave us last week from his interesting charge 3 new and 7 renewal subscriptions. Of his work, Brother Chapman says: "Things are progressing favorably with us. I have reported to our first quarterly conference about 50 per cent of our collections." This is indeed a good showing.

The Mississippi State Sunday School Convention will be held at Tupelo, April 7-9. One of the prominent speakers expected to be present is Mr. J. R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn.

The Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Ellis, of Homewood, Miss., have announced the approaching marriage of their daughter, Miss May Neal, to Rev. David Young Register, of Mobile, Ala., which will be solemnized in the Methodist Church, at Homewood, on March 30, at 6:30 p.m. The Advocate extends beforehand congratulations and all good wishes.

Major R. W. Millsaps last week promised an additional donation of $12,500 toward the construction of the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, Miss., on the condition that the whole of the $35,000 necessary to complete that splendid structure is raised. Major Millsaps had already given several thousand dollars to this enterprise.

Rev. J. L. Neill, of Laurel, Miss., writes: "The Y. W. C. A. Convention for the South Central States convened at this place last week. All the sessions were held in our First Church. Laurel has the only city Young Woman's Christian Association in Mississippi. The presence and addresses of these godly women were a great blessing to our people."

In the hymn from the pen of Rev. R. M. Evans, of Strong, Miss., which was published in the Advocate of February 25, there was a typographical error. In the third line of the third stanza, the words, "Help thy Son," should have been, "Help the Son." The word "thy" made it appear as if Christ were the son of the Holy Spirit, an improper conception. We regret this mistake.

Rev. A. R. Beasley, in a note to our office bringing us some subscribers, makes the following reference to his work: "I am pleased with the Poplar Creek (Miss.) Circuit, and I believe that we are going to have a good year. We have organized an every-member canvass, which seems to promise good results." We are pleased to know that things have started off well with this faithful pastor and his good people.

Writing from Taylorsville, Miss., under date of March 4, Rev. B. F. Crook says: "The outlook in my field is encouraging. We had our first quarterly conference on February 19, and our presiding elder, Rev. G. H. Thompson, preached us a masterful sermon. The congregation was a very large one, the public schools having dismissed for the service and the teachers and about 200 pupils being in attendance."

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., writes as follows: "A fine baby girl arrived at the parsonage yesterday. Both the mother and babe are doing well. A linen shower was given the little one in advance of her coming." We congratulate Brother and Sister Cunningham upon this addition to their family, and pray that a kindly Providence may keep the child and make her a great blessing to their home in the years to come.

Mrs. E. F. Arnold, of Bellefontaine, Miss., states that $141 has been expended in improving the parsonage at that place since Conference. Of this amount, $55.50 was given by persons outside of the Bellefontaine charge, and Sister Arnold states that the people are deeply grateful for this kindly assistance. The work of making the pastor and his family comfortable in the home provided for them is one which always deserves commendation.

Rev. Paul F. Daniel sounds an optimistic note from Logansport, La. He says: "The state of the work is gratifying in this charge. There is a splendid interest in all the departments of church activity. Two representatives from our woman's missionary society attended the Conference meeting in New Orleans last week." Brother Daniel's letter brought us 1 new and 5 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate, for which we extend to him our thanks.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., expects to attend the meeting of Conference Educational Secretaries which is to be held in Atlanta, Ga., March 31 to April 1. He has been requested by Dr. Stonewall Anderson to lead in the discussion of the question, "How can the Conference Secretary of Education Be of Service in Influencing Young Men to Consider the Call to Preach and Assist Them in Securing the Means for Adequate Educational Equipment?"

At the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Conference of Louisiana in the First Methodist Church of this city last week, Dr. S. H. Werlein suggested having three or four luncheons a year for the official members of the Southern Methodist Churches of New Orleans, with a view to having them get acquainted with one another, thus developing a spirit of mutual interest and co-operation. This proposal seemed to meet with a hearty response from the wide-awake workers in the Woman's Missionary Societies of the city.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, of Itta Bena, who is the St. John of the North Mississippi Conference, and who never does things by halves, gave us a club of 23 subscriptions on February 23. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ, and we pray that our paper may carry a weekly blessing into the homes into which this faithful pastor has been instrumental in sending it for another year. Itta Bena is fast taking rank as one of the best appointments in North Mississippi.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, presiding elder of the Winona District, writes: "While my first round has developed many delicate and difficult questions, it has been characterized by a remarkable loyalty on the part of both our preachers and laymen. Some of the best financial reports during my term of service have been made. Much more systematic work is being done in the district than heretofore, and I think that there is a deeper interest in spiritual things. Rev. R. Bradley, an honored superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, will serve the Moorhead Circuit until Rev. R. H. Ruff finishes the term in the Theological School of Emory University and returns to take charge."

Rev. J. L. Neill is having a remarkably successful pastorate at the First M. E. Church, South, of Laurel, Miss. There were 392 persons present at Sunday school on Sunday, February 28, and there was only one Sabbath last month on which members were not received into the Church on profession of faith. During his twenty months as pastor of this congregation, Brother Neill has taken into the Church 219 members, all of whom came in at the regular services, and more than half of them by profession of faith. Brother Neill will start a series of revival services on March 17, which will continue through Easter Sunday. He will be assisted by Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala.

The Louisiana State Sunday School Convention will be held at Baton Rouge, April 13-15. Among the prominent Sunday school workers who will be present are Mr. W. C. Pearce, Secretary of the Adult Bible Class Division of the International Sunday School Association; Miss Minnie E. Kennedy of Birmingham, Ala., Secretary of the City Sunday School Association; Nannie Lee Frayser, of Louisville, Ky.; Dr. W. J. Williamson, of the Third Baptist Church of St. Louis; Dr. W. M. Anderson, of the First Presbyterian Church of Dallas, Texas; Alvin W. Roper, and Prof. E. O. Excell, of Chicago. Mr. Van Carter, our live State Secretary, is busily engaged in getting everything ready for this occasion, which is expected to be a memorable one.

We are grateful to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: W. D. Kleinschmidt, Athens, La., 3; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Poplarville, Miss., 5; Rev. A. L. Davenport, Walnut, Miss., 2; Rev. H. Mellard, Hattiesburg, Miss., 2; Rev. S. A. Brown, Okolona, Miss., 2; Rev. Chas. E. Downer, Shubuta, Miss., 5; Brother G. W. Halloway, Carson, Miss., 6; Rev. J. A. Wells, Topisaw (Miss.) charge, 5; Rev. J. L. Neill, Laurel, Miss., 5; Rev. J. W. Ramsey, Heidelberg, Miss., 2; Rev. T. H. Dorsey, Water Valley, Miss., 6; Rev. S. D. Howard, Baker, La., 5; Rev. B. W. Lewis, Utica, Miss., 5; Rev. G. W. Gordon, Chester, Miss., 2; Rev. J. C. Chambers, Sumrall, Miss., 5; Rev. C. J. Stapp, Scotland (Miss.) charge, 6.

MRS. E. M. STONE.

Mrs. Elizabeth McCrary Stone, wife of Mr. Samuel Stone, died at her home in New Orleans early Wednesday morning, March 3, after an illness of some fifteen months. Mrs. Stone had been married for nearly fifty years. She was the mother of nine children and had eighteen grandchildren, all of whom are living. Her death, after nearly a half of a century of happy family life, was the first break in the family circle. Mrs. Holmes, the wife of Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, is one of her children. She and four of the sons, as well as the husband, were with Mrs. Stone when she passed away.

Mrs. Stone was 72 years of age, having been born Oct. 26, 1842, in Sullins County, Tenn. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when quite young, and was a faithful member the remainder of her life. For thirteen years she had resided in New Orleans and had been a member of the Carrollton Avenue Church. During her long illness she became gradually weaker and more helpless, but through it all, up to the last hour of consciousness, she expressed a strong faith and hope in Christ. May the large family circle, so long unbroken here, be completely re-formed in the heavenly home!

SARAH JANE HART was born at Lewisburg, Tenn., on March 8, 1829, and moved to Mississippi in 1843. She was married in 1848 to Mr. A. P. Overstreet of Kemper County, where she lived till his death 11 years ago. She then moved to Eucutta, Miss., so as to be near her only living daughter, Mrs. W. O. McNeill, and never was a daughter more faithful to her mother. There were born to her nine children—six of whom remain to mourn her death. Sister Overstreet united with the Baptist Church when nineteen years old and remained a faithful member till death. She was a member of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church. She loved the Church and was the preacher's friend. Although she was an invalid for several years she never complained and was always cheerful. She was one of the strongest minded old persons the writer ever knew. Her mental and spiritual strength seemed to grow brighter as she grew older. She leaves a host of friends and loved ones. None knew her but to love her. She was buried at DeKalb.

W. W. MURRAY.

Mr. LOUIS E. BALL was born on Oct. 3, 1857, and died at Pollock, La., on Wednesday, Jan. 27, 1915, aged 57 years 3 months and 24 days. Mr. Ball was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Church soon after his marriage. He was connected with the lumber interest and forgot God, and lived a very wicked life until last summer. In the early spring of 1914 he was arrested from activity by the rupture of a blood vessel on the brain, after which he attended a meeting held by the lady evangelists, Mrs. Bartlett and Mrs. Perdue, and again gave his heart to God, and joined the M. E. Church, South. Brother Ball numbered his friends by the score, as he was noted for his honesty and his tender heart. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife and nine children, 5 brothers and 3 sisters. The prayers of a faithful wife and daughters had much to do with bringing him to Christ in the last days of his life. May God bless the family and help them to rejoice that he was called when he was prepared. May they all be prepared to meet him in heaven.

E. G. WOOD.

On Feb. 21, 1915, the entire community was shocked to learn of the death at his residence in Phoenix of Brother ROLAND HAMBERLIN. He was a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and held office as a steward or trustee in the Church for a number of years; he was noted for his unswerving loyalty to the Methodist Church and its doctrine, as well as its preachers, and no preacher found a more cordial welcome in any home than in his. As a man and citizen, he was noted in his daily walk for his honesty, truthfulness and integrity. His faith in God was evidenced by a correct life and faithfulness to duty, and when the summons came, sudden though it was, he felt no fear in going to his reward. Brother Hamberlin leaves a wife, two daughters and one son, besides many friends, and has bequeathed to them an honored name, and the legacy of a faithful, consecrated life. What a blessed thought that we shall meet him again in heaven, where there is no pain nor sorrow, where there shall be no more parting. After the funeral service conducted by the pastor, the body was laid to rest in the Wesley Chapel Cemetery.

L. V. HAMBERLIN.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from the walks of life Mr. J. C. Calhoun, the husband of the faithful and efficient Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Brooklyn charge, Seashore District, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we extend to Sister Calhoun our deepest and most sincere sympathy in this deep hour of sorrow and grief and pray that she may have grace and strength to look ever to Him who has said he would be a "Father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow," and may an abiding faith sustain her until the dark shadows of this grief shall have passed away, leaving only a sweet memory of the halcyon days of earthly association with him she loved so dearly.

2. That in her removal from our midst, we lose one of our most loyal members, as also do our Church and Sunday school—one whose place will be very hard to fill. But we know our loss will be a gain to those among whom her lot is cast.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon our Minutes, one sent to the bereaved one, also one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. D. L. Gay, Mrs. J. M. Nall, Mrs. M. E. Gillis, Mrs. P. H. Grice, Corresponding Secretary.

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Starkville, Miss., desires to express its deep sense of loss in the death of one of its beloved members, Mrs. T. H. Lipscomb. We esteem it a privilege to bear testimony to her noble Christian character, to her faithfulness to duty, to her loyalty to her loved ones, her friends and the Master's cause, and to our devotion to and friendship for her.

Endowed with a sunny disposition, the dominating motive of her life was fidelity to duty, and devotion to her vows of allegiance to her Savior. This trait shone through her smiles and characterized her tender ministry in the family, and filled the home with the fragrance of a beautiful life.

We thank God for lending us for a time, this beautiful Christian life, with its sweet influences, and we pray him to grant that these gracious influences may abide with us as a sweet incense forever, enabling us to emulate her lovely traits of character. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we extend deepest sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones, and we pray that "the peace of God that passeth all understanding," may be theirs.

2. That these resolutions be placed on the records of our Society, that a copy be sent to the family, and one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. W. Eckford, Mrs. J. C. Herbert, Mrs. J. S. Wallace, Mrs. Zeno Yeates, Committee.

(Resolutions were also passed by the Juvenile Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Lipscomb was formerly the manager.)

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.
There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

From the Field.

Tremont, Miss.

Dear Advocate: Our first quarterly conference was held on Feb. 15, at Tremont. We had a very good conference, and our presiding elder, Brother Bell, preached a fine sermon, after which the ladies of Tremont spread a nice dinner and it was appreciated by all present. We regret that so small an amount of our preacher's salary was collected for this quarter, but are sure that the people of this charge will do better next time. We are well pleased with our pastor and do not believe that a more efficient, faithful, self-sacrificing man can be found anywhere than Brother Gean, and we think that he is in every way worthy of our support. We know, of course, that the preacher must have the prayers, the co-operation and the financial aid of the church in order to do his best work, and we feel that the time spent in praying for Brother Gean and the money contributed for his support will be a telling investment for God. Will not all those who love Jesus and his cause pray that God may stir all hearts to give more to the cause of Christ?—Estelie Townley.

Smithville Charge (N. Miss.)

Dear Dr. Meek: Our first quarterly conference convened at Antioch on Feb. 20 and 21. Brother Bell was with us in his usual genial mood. All the churches were represented; the financial report was a little above that of the first quarterly conference of last year, and the preacher's salary was raised $100. The sermons on both days were up-to-date and were well received by the congregations. On Sunday the rain greatly interfered with the attendance, but the few present felt well repaid for facing the wind and rain. We regretted giving up Brother Brisco, who made many warm friends on this charge, and the prayers of the people follow him to his new field of labor. His successor, Brother Foust, has made a good beginning and we predict for him a fine year's work. We gladly say that we find the Advocate readers are the most loyal of our church workers, and we hope the list of subscribers will double this year. Every number increases my interest in its circulation as it continues to grow better all the time. The editorials each week are worth more to me than the price of the paper, so through the year I get many times the worth of my money.—Martha Rye.

Roseland, La.

Just a few lines to the Advocate, as I would like for all the preachers and brethren to know something about my work among the French people of this parish. I never knew there were so many of them in the parish, and with so little knowledge of the old, old story of the Bible. About one month ago I went to preach about forty miles from Roseland where I live. I found there some boys and girls who had never been in a church; and I preached to them for one week. At the close of my meeting I took 6 into the church and baptized 4 children whose ages ranged from four to 10 years. More than one-third of these people do not try to bring up their children in the church; and when I think of those dear boys and girls and know that the dear Lord wants them all for his own, and remember how little they know about God's love, my heart yearns for some one to teach them. So I would like for all the preachers and members of the Methodist Church to pray for me and my work among this people that I may be strong to teach them the way of salvation. We often talk about foreign missions, but there are those who need the gospel right here in our own yards. Let us pray and work and plan to do more this year for home and foreign missions than we have ever done before.—A. D. Martin.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Frank A. Montgomery Chapter of the U. D. C., Rosedale, Miss., on Feb. 25, 1915:

Whereas, In the providence of God Dr. Hugh Lewis Sutherland has been called from earth to heaven; therefore, be it resolved:

First. That our Chapter of the U. D. C. mourns with inexpressible grief the irremediable loss of our beloved physician.

Second. That we tender to his stricken family, his dear wife and children, our heartfelt sympathy.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our U. D. C., a copy be sent to his family, also copies sent to the Bolivar County Democrat, Our Heritage, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Miss Hattie D. Chambers, Miss Lottie Montgomery, Mrs. Bonner Richardson.

MARRIED.

On March 4, 1915, at the residence of the bride's father, two miles east of Beauregard, Miss., by Rev. I. L. Peebles, Mr. F. J. HARVEY, of Texas, and Miss CLARA MERCIER.

Division has done more to hide Christ from the view of men than all the infidelity that ever was spoken.—George Macdonald.

The gospel cannot require anything less of us than a perfect obedience of righteousness, because nothing less would be for us real redemption and moral freedom. But it does not undertake to produce righteousness by requiring or demanding it. It comes to us not law foremost but God foremost, making not obedience the condition of God in us, but God in us the condition and cause of obedience. —Dr. W. P. DuBose.

The Hundred Ways Which Don't

End Corns

Perhaps you say—"I've tried and tried, but found nothing that ends a corn."

You might keep trying for years, Madam. There are a hundred ways which don't. Most of them are very much alike.

But remember this:

There is one way which has removed 70 million corns. It is now removing half the corns that grow.

It's a plaster which contains a bit of wondrous wax. It ends the corn pain in a jiffy. It ends the corn itself in two days. It gently loosens the corn until it comes out without any pain or soreness.

When you merely pare corns—

When you use some folderol—

Bear this in mind. There are folks all around you—users of Blue-jay—who never suffer corns. You are wronging yourself when you fail to do what they do.

The Sunday School.

THE COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The country Sunday school, together with the rural day school, should form a most potent element in the community's uplift, regeneration, and salvation. In Dallas, Texas, the Woman's Missionary Society, has a rescue home called the "Virginia K. Johnson Home." "This institution takes young girls under twenty-two who have erred. They are usually from the country and know nothing but to eat, work in the field, and sleep. They have no wholesome amusements and know nothing of the natural world that lies so close to their hands." Of the 58 girls admitted last year, 36 were members of some Church and only three knew how to dance. Some of the girls who have been admitted to this institution have been from Mississippi. Of these, some have gone from our own Conference, the Mississippi Conference, and some of them from the bounds of some of those 47 pastoral charges where there are organized congregations without a Sunday school. Is it needful to say more?

That there are difficulties in the way of organizing and maintaining Sunday schools in our rural communities, cannot be denied. That some of these are great and discouraging, is also true. That some of them will require patience and a determined effort to overcome them, is a fact. But that these difficulties are insuperable, cannot be asserted. Some have overcome them; why not all, at least us? We have solved the problem of the rural day school; why not the problem of the rural Sunday school?

Among the many difficulties urged against the successful maintenance of a rural Sunday school, may be mentioned; the scattered community, therefore the small attendance; bad roads; uncomfortable building; summer protracted meetings, and such. But note: A few cents will buy all the the glass needed to repair the broken windows. A few dollars will buy a stove, while a few minutes will secure plenty of wood fer the fires from near-by trees. An old blanket or discarded quilt thrown over the horse will protect him from the weather far more than running at large as he would if at home. Thus all the difficulties, one by one, can be brushed away.

Were I asked to mention the two essentials to a successful Sunday school in the country, I would say:

First, a determination to have such a Sunday school. The battle is half fought and the victory all but won, when this determination is formed. No man ever yet set his face determinedly towards duty and the right, and was unable to hew his way through difficulties. There is a story of early California days. It cannot be vouched for, but it does illustrate this point. A certain portion of that country was badly in need of an irrigation ditch. For several successive years the farmers met and passed strong resolutions calling for this improvement, and adjourned. After a while a new man moved into the community. He went to one of these meetings. After listening to the discussion, he arose and offered the following resolutions:

Resolved first, That this irrigation ditch is a necessity; second, that it should be built; third, that we are the fellows to build it; and so it was constructed.

The second essential I would mention is, Intelligent leadership. It may be said that the whole question revolves around this one thing, knowing how. Some one remarked in my presence not long since, "Nobody is afraid to do that which he can do perfectly." If in every one of our 122 congregations without a Sunday school, there was one person who understood Sunday school work, could not he have a Sunday school there? What better investment can those communities make than to select the brightest, most capable person in the community and pay his way to some first class Sunday School Convention or Institute to learn how. An investigation will reveal that every one of the Sunday school leaders of our State, or of any other State, for that matter, got his inspiration and information at some such meeting. A few cents from a dozen men will meet the expense. No church can make a better investement than to send its pastor to these institutes, paying all his expenses. He, coming in touch with men who know Sunday school work and have fought out their own battles, will come back a new man, and render a hundred fold to his people.

Jacob lived a very narrow, seifish life until "he lighted upon a certain place and tarried all night—and dreamed—a ladder set up and the top reached to heaven, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon it." It gave him a broader vision. He saw something he had never heard of before. This led him into a broader life and laid the foundation for that later experience when God said to him, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men and hast prevailed." Let our people go to where the ladder touches the earth and get this broader vision. Then our problems can be solved.

FROM MANY, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: My wife has been sick almost ever since we reached Many, and a part of the time dangerously so. My eldest daughter resigned her position as teacher of Plains School, East Baton Rouge Parish on account of her mother's illness. The good women of our church have been most kind, and especially so during the serious illness of my wife. Rev. W. H. Coleman, our efficient and beloved presiding elder, came and held our first quarterly conference on Feb. 22, preaching an able and helpful sermon at the night service. After some consideration, the officers deferred making the assessment until the time of our second quarterly meeting. All things considered, we had a good quarterly conference. Two members have been received into our Church on profession of faith since we came here. Our congregations are increasing in size, and our prayer meetings are fine, the attendance ranging from 45 to 50 by actual count. Our Sunday school is growing in interest also. I am expecting a great year, and to this end desire your prayers and the prayers of the entire Advocate family. Our long and expensive move this year, together with the necessary expense connected with my wife's illness, has made it hard for us at this time. May the Lord bless you, Mr. Editor and all connected with the Advocate.—S. D. Howard.

PERFECT HEALTH IS EVERY WOMAN'S BIRTHRIGHT.

A Temperance Remedy That From Girlhood to Old Age Has Been a Blessing to Womanhood.

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, when a woman passes through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe organic disturbances.

At these critical times women are best fortified by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, an old remedy of proved worth that keeps the entire female system perfectly regulated and in excellent condition.

Not a patent medicine because this old prescription of Dr. Pierce's has its ingredients published on wrapper.

Mothers, if your daughters are weak, lack ambition, are troubled with headaches, lassitude and are pale and sickly, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is just what they need to surely bring the bloom of health to their cheeks and make them strong and healthy.

For all diseases peculiar to woman, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a powerful restorative. During the last 40 years it has banished from the lives of tens of thousands of women the pain, worry, misery and distress caused by irregularities and diseases of a feminine character.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form at any medicine dealer's to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and receive confidential advice that will not cost you a penny. To-day is the day. 136-page book on women's diseases sent free.—Adv.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach-headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest stomach doctor in the world. It's wonderful.

PURE RICH BLOOD PREVENTS DISEASE

Bad blood is responsible for more ailments than anything else. It causes catarrh, dyspepsia, rheumatism, weak, tired, languid feelings and worse troubles.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been wonderfully successful in purifying and enriching the blood, removing scrofula and other humors, and building up the whole system. Take it—give it to all the family so as to avoid illness. Get it today.

A HAPPY OCCASION, AND ELSE.

Dear Doctor Meek: Rev. W. B. Alsworth, the hustling and popular pastor of the Nebo Circuit, and Miss Josie Wilkinson were married at noon today at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Wilkinson, near Union Church, Jefferson County. The bride is of fine personal appearance, and possesses all accomplishments necessary to fit her for great helpfulness in the work and life into which she has come by her marriage to an itinerant Methodist preacher. I am sure Will Alsworth has gained by making haste slowly in getting him a wife. I was glad to officiate at such a happy event where everything gave promise of large happiness.

On yesterday I held Alsworth's second quarterly conference. It was a profitable occasion; every church was represented, and every official was in fine spirits. There was not a steward present who knew his pastor was to marry the next day. Wasn't that secrecy with a vengence?

I have three more single pastors in my district who are very much in need of wives. I hope to get them all married before next Conference.

It looks as if the tribulations of the Port Gibson District will never come to an end. Another disastrous fire has visited Hermanville. This time nearly or all of the business houses east of the Railroad have gone up in smoke and down in ashes. Less than a year ago the west side was swept by flames. The gloom is appalling. I have never known a community so afflicted as this town. They have had two awful fires and a bank failure within a year—too bad! It is almost equal to the painful plight of Belgium.

We are doing our best for the Advocate. Everbody praises it. I cannot understand why we cannot multiply subscribers when the paper is so universally praised. We are with you, Doctor, in sympathy and prayers, notwithstanding the fact that we fail to give evidence of it by lengthening the subscription lists to the extent that we ought.

T. W. ADAMS.

Fayette, Miss., March 3, 1915.

THE LOWER COAST MISSION.

Dear Brother Meek: Our work on the lower coast becomes more interesting as the days pass by. New fields open up and the people are crying for the Gospel of Christ, while, on the other hand, the voices of the Gadarenes are heard crying, "What have we to do with thee; depart from our coast." We have only one organized church on the work, which is at Daisy. There we have, or will have, when Brother Edge Combe has finished the repairing, a nice building with ten members. Brother Edge Combe has a very interesting Sunday school at Daisy and the prospect of organizing a good church in the near future is good. At Buras we have a very well organized congregation consisting of members of the different Protestant Churches who have built a nice church to be used by all denominations for worship. At the other seven places at which I preach, we use school buildings and have only small hands of women and children, and our services are attended by Roman Catholics. I have preached to a congregation consisting of people all of whom were Catholics. I find them more eager to hear the story of Jesus and his love than our Protestant people. The little Catholic children can't understand why I will not allow them to call me Father McPhearson. These people have been neglected both by their own Church and by Protestantism. The time is not far distant when, if we do not do our duty, there will be no need for Protestantism in these places, since they will be dominated by Catholicism. The call to us is to arise and work, "for the night cometh." There are people who do not know that Christ died for the sins of the world, and yet they are drawn by the pathos of the cross and yield to its strange compassion. At every point where I can get some one to teach the children, I am organizing Sunday schools. The children are delighted with the idea of going to Sunday school. They are so interested in the work of the Church that they neglect everything to show me the homes of the people to announce services. And these children never go to church without their pennies to put in the contribution plate, which is one of the most important lessons they could learn, since it tends to impress them with the fact that it costs them self-denial to come into the Kingdom of Christ. If these children have the proper care and instruction they will become men and women who will stand for something in the Church and in the communities in which they live. Looking at the work on the lower coast from a financial point of view, it would be a wise and profitable investment; and over and above that, is the opportunity of saving many precious souls. I travel about six hundred miles each month in reaching my appointments on the coast, and hold about twenty services.

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL

That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fail down. Mrs. S. E. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every hit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray, or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur receipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The fifth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Council will be held in First Church, Little Rock, Ark., on April 14-22. All persons wishing to make hoarding arrangements will write to the General Chairman, Mrs. George Thornhurgh, 1624 Spring Street, Little Rock, Ark.

Speakers at the Council Meeting.

Public addresses and sermons that will be delivered at the Council Meeting this year will be given by Bishop James Atkins, who has just returned from an episcopal visit to the Orient; Dr. Ed. F. Cook, Missionary Secretary of the Foreign Department, who has recently spent seven months in China, Japan, and Korea; and Dr. Josiah Strong, of New York. Dr. Strong is President of the American Institute of Social Service and editor of the "Gospel of the Kingdom." The influence wielded through his writings can never he fully estimated, but it is safe to say that they have done more than any other agency to bring the Church to the present realization of the great need of industrial betterment and social service. All who may have the privilege of listening to these men are assured of the fact that their subjects will he presented in a masterly and powerful manner, forcing conviction into the heart and mind of the hearer.

One other occasion which we would mention is the consecration of deaconesses and the commission to foreign missionaries which will take place on Monday night, April 19. One of our Bishops will perform this sacred duty, and we ask that our women throughout Southern Methodism unite in prayer for this occasion, so that God may pour out his Spirit upon these women dedicating their lives to his service.

THE COUNCIL DAILY.

As heretofore the "Council Daily" will he issued in connection with the Council Meeting. The women of the Council desire to make this the very best edition that has ever been published; and they have made all of their plans with that end in view. They have also taken every precaution to insure the paper's being gotten out on time and mailed to the subscribers promptly.

Miss Estelle Haskin is to he Editor-in-Chief and Mr. George Thornburgh, of Little Rock, has heen made Business Manager. The price of the paper remains the same—25 cents for the seven issues. It is worth ten times that amount. All who are interested, should send their suhscriptions AT ONCE to Mr. Thornburgh, care of Masonic Temple, Little Rock, Ark. We are asking that you give this prompt attention in order that Mr. Thornburgh may make an accurate mailing list.

Should this notice reach the eye of any one not specially interested, we ask that you pause long enough to read it, and then resolve that you will give this paper a trial. It is full of the very hest things of the Council Meeting and will so open your eyes to the magnitude of the work heing done hy our women that you will never regret having expended this small amount, hut will thank us for giving you this opportunity of hroadening your vision and creating a deeper interest and enthusiasm for the work.

Don't forget that the price is 25 cents, and send it NOW to Mr. Thornburgh.

HOLDING INSTITUTE, LAREDO, TEXAS.

In a recent issue of The Nashville Christian Advocate appeared an interesting article, on Holding Institute, from the pen of Dr. J. M. Skinner. As our women have always been in deep sympathy with the work of this school, for the benefit of those who do not see this journal, we take from it the following extracts:

"The attendance this year has been very good considering the fact that the Republic of Mexico, where we get many students, has been in the throes of revolution for three years; and this being possibly the worst of the three because of the destruction of property and the levies made upon the wealthy elements, driving many of them into exile. These people in a foreign land and under adverse conditions, because they do not understand the language and the customs of those among whom they sojourn, are striving to hold the little left of the vast fortunes that have been destroyed by war, and are, therefore, not able to send their children to school."

"Verily the ends of the earth are met in our enrollment; for we have Mexican, Spanish, French, English, German, Assyrian, Italian, Swiss, Irish, and American scholars. All these meet on a common level on our sixteen-acre plot, living as contentedly and as happily as if all the world were at peace. Of course, the bulk of the children are Mexicans. These vary in appearance according to the preponderance of Spanish or Indian blood. Most of them are fine looking; indeed, many of the girls are very pretty. They have an inordinate love for dress. The girls, combing their hair in the very latest fashion, and bedecking themselves with ribbons, make a very pleasing appearance."

"Our work is very similar to that done in other institutions and is systematized as best we can. The children are called every morning at six o'clock hy electric bells, and the duties of the day at once hegin. Many of the children have duties of various kinds to attend to and they are soon at work with a will. Breakfast is served at seven o'clock, dinner at twelve, and supper at half past five. Chapel exercises are held at half past eight every school morning, and the children assemhle in the study hall at half past six, where they work for two hours in preparing their lessons for the next day. Nine o'clock is hedtime and 'lights out.' On Tuesday evening of every week there is preaching to the children, alternately hy the Mexican preacher and the American preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Saturday afternoon is mending time for the girls. At this time all patching and darning must be attended to, each girl attending to her own clothes. Sunday morning at nine o'clock we have Sunday school. The school is graded and uses the literature of the Church. Sunday afternoons from two to four is the 'quiet hour.' At four o'clock the Junior Epworth League has its meeting, and at seven-thirty, the Senior League. These are both properly officered, and the Senior League carries on all the departments of League work. There are occasional exercises of a different nature, such as receptions, musicales, "Jamaicas," etc.

"Such in brief is a statement of some of the activities of the school here. I hellieve there are great possihilities for the work, and out of it can come only good for those most vitally concerned."

AMOUNTS PAID ON PLEDGES IN LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

At the annual meeting in Rayville, the Louisiana Conference instructed their representatives to pledge to the Council $2750 for the Foreign Department, and $2000 for the Home Department. Mrs. J. J. Holmes, the Conference treasurer, sends the following amounts as having been paid on these pledges: In the foreign department, $1850.33; in the home department, $1476.21. These figures speak for themselves. It seems that each of our Conferences have fallen short of the amounts pledged. Some one has said that there are six ways of giving: the careless way; the impulsive way; the shirking way, by getting up a supper or other kind of entertainment; the selfish way, giving only to the enterprise in which we are interested; the systematic or fair way, setting aside a certain per cent of our means; and lastly, the heroic, or self-sacrificing way. We've tried the first four over and over again. The result is one with which we are all familiar. It is time now to try the last method. It is the only proper way to give, and when our women realize this fact, there will be no more empty coffers—pledges will be paid in full, and there will be a surplus for enlarging the work.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK. DON'T STAY BILIOUS, CONSTIPATED

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Clean Your Sluggish Liver Better Than Calomel and Can Not Salivate.

Calomel makes you sick; you lose a day's work. Calomel is quicksilver and it salivates; calomel injures your liver.

If you are bilious; feel lazy, sluggish and all knocked out, if your bowels are constipated and your head aches or stomach is sour, just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone instead of using sickening, salivating calomel. Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and bowels regular. You will feel like working. You'll be cheerful; full of energy, vigor and ambition.

Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal guarantee that it will clean your sluggish liver better than nasty calomel; it won't make you sick and you can eat anything you want without being salivated. Your druggist guarantees that each spoonful will start your liver, clean your bowels and straighten you up by morning or you get your money back. Children gladly take Dodson's Liver Tone because it is pleasant tasting and doesn't gripe or cramp or make them sick.

I am selling millions of bottles of Dodson's Liver Tone to people who have found that this pleasant, vegetable, liver medicine takes the place of dangerous calomel. Buy one bottle on my sound, reliable guarantee. Ask your druggist about me.

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

DR. ROBERT McWATTY RUSSELL ACCEPTS CALL TO MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

The Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D.D.,LL.D., president of Westminster College, has just accepted the call of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to the Chair of Doctrine and Homiletics, and also will be associated with the Dean, Dr. James M. Gray, and other members of the Faculty, in Evangelistic and Bible Conference work throughout the country as well as in the editing of the Christian Workers' Magazine.

Dr. Russell is a native of Pennsylvania, where he received his college training and acted as principal of McKeesport Academy before graduating from the Allegheny United Presbyterian Seminary. He has held two pastorates, one for six years in Caledonia, N. Y., and the other for nearly 16 years in the Sixth Church of Pittsburgh, both being marked by evangelistic and missionary enthusiasm. During the period of his Pittsburgh ministry his church contributed more than $1,000,000 for home and foreign missionary purposes. In 1905 Dr. Russell accepted the presidency of Westminster College, since which time the plant has been completely renovated, and a total of more than $200,000 secured for betterment and endowment. Dr. Russell represented his denomination at the Pan-Presbyterian Conference in Edinburgh in 1896, and served as Moderator of the General Assembly meeting in Atlanta in 1913. He is a preacher and Bible teacher of exceptional ability and power, and will add strength to the faculty of the Institute.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

SOME POST-CONFERENCE REFLECTIONS.

Dear Dr. Meek:

Most people of this section are pleased at the return of Rev. J. W. Bell as principal pastor of the Aberdeen District. Such men have a great opportunity and do exceedingly important service. The Bishops are awake in many directions but set the pace often as revivalists, and many presiding elders do a monumental work in this department of Christian effort, and also aid immensely in the temporal church interests.

The Shannon churches did well for 1914, even with a shortage on Conference Claims. The fine gains in membership and the several hundred dollars above ordinary on general expenditures gave a good showing, indicating much devotion and positive excellence on the part of the church people. That $900, however, on the salary payment by some mistake, should be $800.

A place or two in this important territory has been mentioned as "heaven" and "the garden of Eden," not literally, of course, but simply as similitudes. The aspostolic "third heaven" is yet to be located, and many broken links will no douht be discovered in this feature of the much discussed "Succession." By all indications St. Paul was honored vastly above common in the matter of being caught up to paradise, and he properly made no mention of his great experience for the space of "above fourteen years." The rudiments, however, and the mere alphabet of paradise regained and the title to it might be found at Shannon, or at Grundy Mission, or even in a ditch, or at the White House, at Washington, D. C., according as God has bestowed his favor and called unto a given place and service. The mere largeness of the position is not a consideration. nor is the smallness—it is the kind of person and the simple post of duty that counts. Lazarus possessed this incipiency of paradise and went to heaven. The rich man in purple sank to hell—not because he was rich and lived in opulence. Abraham, the father of the faithful, was a great cattle king and very rich. The kind of person was the distress with the friend of Lazarus.

Our Savior in the manger was Christ, the Lord of all, just the same as when he expired on the Cross in the darkness of the rocking earth and said, "It is finished." The man sent of God to dig the ditch is needed, so also is the President, and God is pledged alike to each. The small star fulfills its mission and the great planet can do no more—the true religion and devotion to duty must everywhere he the same in essentials but also it must be true that uniformity is not the order of God in his universe. Churches cannot he alike and should not be; neither can men be just the same. Were this true many gaps would go unfilled in the plans of God for the good of humanity and many kinds of service remain unperformed. High purposes and the best possible attainments are none the less in order: "be ye therefore perfect" was the command of Him who knows. And there is ample room for silver trumpets and for vessels of gold, with no numerous army of competitors to embarrass the situation.

The Starkville Conference lingers as a captivating vision of helpful agencies and of uplifting influences, even though regrets many times may he coupled with the finest performances and greatest occasions. Not every pulpit man of that company secured the goal of his high-steeple aspirations and some congregations were made serious hy the assignment of the unexpected pastor. The compassionate power of the Supreme Ruler in governing all for good must indicate that "the Church is of God." It was the prince of ministers and chief of the apostles who said: "None of these things move me." He was pressing "toward the mark," and hoping also to speak the word of truth "in Rome;" and of the triumphing church people it was affirmed, "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." "Work up or work out" appeared to be the slogan at the Starkville meeting, and the "high private in the rear ranks" could well nigh hear the ominous thunderings and witness the coming lightenings of Conference indignation, and even a few of the "higher ups" may have involuntarily investigated for lingering sprigs of "moss on the back." A preacher said: "Would God call a fool to the ministry?" The reply was, "No, but some of them answer all the same." The way of certain and simply duty is by no means always a royal route. Bishop Marvin, a great Methodist light and a man sent from God, was once advised to quit, and some others like him have heard the voice of God, and have wrought on unto prominence and distinction after having been set at naught in the judgment of good men The same God who employed the seraphim and "the live coal from off the altar" can at any period in the history of the Church "erect from crumbling dust his monuments o praise." The bush before Moses was ordinary, hut the flame was of God and made powerful the chosen and prepared man, who was mentioned as slow of speech. "The man behind the gun" is great in the time of hattle if ready for his task, and the most eminent of all affirmed, "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase."

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS.

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

AN INSTITUTE AT WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

(The following letter is being mailed to a number of laymen in the Mississippi Conference. It and the response by Brother Enochs are published by special request of the Committee having this movement in charge.—Editorial Note.)

"Dear Brother Enochs: At our last Conference at Columbia, Miss., Dec. 9-14, 1914, a Committee composed of W. H. Lewis, W. M. Williams, W. A. Hays, G. H. Galloway, and L. L. Roberts was appointed, looking to the establishing of a Summer Institute, for the training of our young Christian workers. This Committee met in Jackson, Miss., Tuesday, Jan. 19, 1915, with all the members present except W. A. Hays. After much prayer and due consideration, the Committee decided that the great need of better trained teachers in our Sunday schools, more efficient workers in our Leagues, and a more intelligent young Christian constituency in our Church, justified an honest effort on the part of the Church to bring these things to pass. We decided that if we could bring together any considerable number of our young people in an institute, under trained and expert workers in the various departments of church work, for ten days each summer, we could, within a few years, bring about great results. The honest conviction of the entire Committee was that we should make the effort, and begin at once. So we launched the enterprise under the name of The Mississippi Conference Summer Institute, to be held at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., a few days after the close of the present session in May. The following officers were elected, pending the meeting of the Annual Conference: W. H. Lewis, President; G. H. Galloway, Secretary, and L. L. Roberts, Treasurer.

"W. H. Lewis, G. H. Galloway and W. A. Hays were appointed to arrange the program and secure speakers and instructors. We hope to have two popular lectures each day and wish to secure the best talent possible for that, but we expect to be able to secure home talent for all class work.

"Dr. I. W. Cooper of Whitworth College has agreed to give us rooms and board at $1 per day; hence the location of the Institute at Whitworth College.

"The Committee, and I think the ministers of the Conference, with the good women that we may be able to secure, will be glad to give their time gratuitously to the school, but there will of necessity be some expense attached to the work, if we are to make it worth while, such as advertising, securing lecturers, and board and expenses of the teachers and instructors, etc. In view of an estimated expense of from $300 to $500, and in the absence of any provision with which to meet this expense, I was appointed a committee of one to write to some of the laymen of our Conference, hoping to interest them in this work to such an extent that they will furnish the money for this very important undertaking.

Please write me what you think of the matter, and how much you are willing to put into it this year.

"With best wishes I am very truly yours, L. L. ROBERTS, Treas."

"2140 Washington Street, Vicksburg, Miss."

Brother Enochs' Reply Follows:

"Dear Brother Roberts: I am in receipt of yours of the 9th inst., and am pleased at the prospect of the Summer Institute as indicated in your letter, and I believe that it will meet a great demand on the part of our Sunday school and Church workers. I regard the location and time suggested, as most fortunate. It is true, the time in which to prepare for the first session is comparatively short, but with a vigorous campaign on the part of the presiding elders, preachers, Sunday school superintendents, and other workers, it is quite sufficient.

"I think it is important that a success should be made of the initial session and that prompt action should be taken that the best possible talent, program and organization may be provided, and I am willing to be one of ten laymen to contribute $50 or $100, to this cause, depending on what is estimated to be necessary. Certainly we should not raise less than $500.

"Assuring you of my willingness to assist in any way that I can, I beg to remain with best wishes, as ever,

"Yours truly,

P. H. ENOCHS."

"Fernwood, Miss."

Cured His RUPTURE

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 1000A Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

Editorial

"And what if joy or sorrow shall betide thee,
If smooth or rugged paths thy feet have trod—
What matter by what way his hand shall guide thee,
So it be said of thee, 'He walked with God?'"

* * *

Have you ever thought of how few absolutely settled and unchallenged truths there are? Nearly everything believed and taught among men is more or less disputed. Herein lies the peril of breaking down the authority of the Divine Revelation. When the finite and erring human reason is made the standard and arbiter of truth the inevitable result is a veritable chaos of conflicting opinions.

* * *

The work of soul winning should be done under the guidauce of the Holy Spirit. He will both impress the Christian as to what he ought to do, and go in advance of him and prepare the way for his coming, if he will completely surrender himself to his gracious influence and leading. It was so with the early disciples, and it would not be less so now if as the followers of Jesus we would measure up to our highest privileges.

* * *

Prohibition is making wonderful strides in the United States and is steadily looming larger as a national issue. A year ago the number of States that had outlawed the saloon was nine; to-day the number is nineteen. This roll of honor is as follows: Maine, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Alabama, Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, Colorado, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington.

* * *

Read Dr. Steel's "Myrtle Letter" which we are publishing in this issue of the Advocate. What he has to say about making Christians of men who stood apart from the Church and who never claimed to be regenerated, is quite pertinent. As we have before said, this business of converting dead men is being very much overdone in this day. Such a practice is decidedly worse than the Roman Catholic custom of praying for the dead. Possibly the explanation of it is to some extent to be found in the fact that this is the only kind of converts that some ministers can make.

* * *

After calling attention to the fact that the present war in Europe is being fought with expensive modern guns and motor cars, the Scientific American remarks that these appliances soon lose their efficiency and wear out, and that it may be that the "fatigue of such machines, rather than the exhaustion of the men furnished by the nations engaged in it," will hasten the end of the titanic struggle. The question of food and that of the munitions of war already seem to be becoming important factors in the great conflict; and it is the superior advantage that the Allies have in these respects, more than anything else, that promises to give them final victory.

A CAMPAIGN OF PERSONAL EVANGELISM.

A campaign of personal evangelism, in which thirty-two of the Protestant Churches of New Orleans are co-operating, was started on February 21 and will continue through Easter Sunday. Though we are not disposed to look with approval upon the disposition of some of our pastors and congregations to imitate the Roman Catholics and Episcopalians in specially magnifying the Lenten season and undertaking a formal annual observance of it, we are always heartily in favor of active effort of any proper kind that has for its object the bringing of men and women to Christ. And undoubtedly this is a work in which the entire membership of the Church should engage. This was the case in the opening days of the Christian era, and it ought to be so now. Indeed, we do not believe that there has ever been a great gathering of souls into the Kingdom without the earnest co-operation of the laity. As is well known, when a revival meeting is in progress very little is accomplished until the members of the Church become aroused and take up the task of reaching and impressing others. Influence is born very largely of the relations that we sustain to our fellow-beings in life. Frequently a Christian man or woman could help religiously persons with whom they are associated in the home, in the store, in the shop, or in the social circle, if only a tactful effort were made, that the most eloquent minister in the Nation could not successfully touch. To have such influence and not exercise it, is to fall far short of duty and to incur the guilt of negligence in the sight of God.

How our churches would prosper and grow if every member of them was a busy worker for the Master! We would not only have more conversions, but such activity, by its reflex influence, would give us Christians of a larger spiritual stature. Thus only may we lay up treasure in heaven and add to the splendor of the reward that awaits us on high. Let us see that we do not have to stand before our Lord empty-handed when he comes to reckon with his servants. Happy, indeed, will he be in that great day who is able to say to the blessed Christ: "Here am I, and those whom thou hast given me!"

GOOD NEWS FROM THE ORIENT.

Mr. Sherwood Eddy, who has lately returned from China, where he made an extensive evangelistic tour, reports that Christianity is making wonderful headway in that large and populous country. He says that what is most significant is that the Gospel now seems to be taking hold of the rulers and the upper classes, which is a new development. Hitherto "the gentry, the aristocracy, and the scholars" have not been responsive to the efforts of the missionaries. Touching upon this point, Mr. Eddy makes the following statement: "The President, Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, and the Governors of almost every Province that we visited, either erected pavilions for the meetings, or gave the students half-holidays, or invited us to a banquet, with an opportunity to address the officials." * * * Probably in no other country in the world to-day are the officials so accessible to Christianity as in China. * * * At one meeting (in Peking) for enquirers who were deemed near the point of decision for the Christian life, there were present one former governor, two generals, a private secretary to the President, the director of China's national bank, prominent officials, and a young non-Christian philanthropist who has given this year $12,000 to Christian work."

At Hangchow, an occurrence took place which has been referred to as being much like some of the things described in the "Acts of the Apostles." The following is Mr. Eddy's account of it:

"For an hour we presented Jesus Christ to that Governor and his secretary, Mr. S. T. Wen. Finally, I said to the secretary, as I took out my Testament: 'Mr. Wen, when the eunuch had heard the gospel that Philip preached to him, he said:

"'"What doth hinder me to be baptized?" What hinders you from becoming a Christian here and now?' Mr. Wen replied:

"'Mr. Eddy, some day I will; but now it would complicate my official position. Some day I will retire from political life and go into private life and become a Christian.'

"'Why not do it now?' I urged. 'We need Christian leaders now. Will you not do it now?'

"He answered: 'I will.' And we shook hands. Then I said: 'Mr. Wen, when will you do it?'

"'Next Sunday,' he replied. At first he asked for private baptism, but I said: 'Let us be plain; we must be courageous, and work for the glory of Jesus Christ. Will you go down to the little church and be baptized in public?'

"'I will,' he said. The following day this fearless man took the chair at the meeting and stated publicly that he had decided to become a Christian. Even the non-Christian students broke into applause. The next Sunday he went down and gave his testimony before the people in the little church. He said: 'I may lose my official position, but I take my stand to-day once for all for Jesus Christ.' * * * He immediately started Bible classes among his household servants and officials: and on the last day of the meetings in China, when illness prevented me from conducting the meetings as scheduled, Mr. Wen came down and carried them on with Mr. C. T. Wang."

A TRYSTING PLACE WITH GOD.

No Christian can afford to live constantly in the whirl. Daniel needed to have an Olivet in his chamber amid Babylon's roar and impiety. Peter found his on a house-top in Joppa. Let every child of Jesus resolve that he will have a place and a time for meeting his dear Master alone, and he will go forth from such holy interviews with his face shining and his strength renewed.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

MY BIBLE AND I.

By T. J. Searis.

(A few weeks ago we published a poem under this caption. The following stanzas are not less beautiful and suggestive.—Editor's note.)

When I am weary, discouraged and sad,
I read in my Bible 'till my heart is glad,
And when I am tempted from God's fold to go,
I read in my Bible of Christ's suff'ring and woe.
It binds firmer together and better the tie
So sacred to me—my Bible and I.

And as day by day, new resolves I do make,
They're nothing to me, 'till my Bible I take,
And read that promise so true and so sure,
That they shall see God whose hearts are pure.
And no one need strive to break this dear tie
That binds us surely—my Bible and I.

And thus I am able while here below
My Father and Savior so fully to know;
But better still with the ransomed there,
Who are free from sorrow and sin and care.
For this I am striving, and when I die,
Please lay us together—my Bible and I.

And as the earth presses on my cold clay,
Think of me kindly as you turn away,
And think of the soul that lies at rest
Down here—down here in the earth's dark breast.
But if trodden down by the passers-by,
Remember, God watches—my Bible and I.

THE AGED CHRISTIAN.

From the days of his youth he has been in the habit of attending church. Now he is an old man, and he walks with feeble step. Yet every Sunday morning he makes his way to the house of God. He prefers to walk when the weather is fine, although he has a thoughtful son who is always ready to take him in an automobile.

He sits facing the preacher, very near the front of the church. He hears very little of what the preacher says, for he is quite deaf. Most persons so afflicted would consider that as reason enough for staying at home; but it is not so with this aged saint. He loves still to worship God in the church of which he has long been an officer. The few words he does hear cheer him.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth," he said one morning, as he clasped the hand of his pastor at the door of the church.

"You caught that?" said the minister, for he remembered that he had quoted the passage in his sermon.

"Yes, I heard, and it made me very happy to know that they expressed the assurance of my soul," answered this veteran in Christ's service.

One other morning he heard the minister mention "family worship." Instinctively and instantly he held up his hand, under the impression that the preacher was asking how many observed family worship.

"I'm pretty feeble, and I can't hear much; but I can maintain family worship," said this stalwart "pilgrim of the infinite," when he spoke of the incident later.

What inspiration and strength others find in his example the old man does not realize; but few do more for the cause of the Lord than he does by his mere presence every Sunday at church.—The Youth's Companion.

SOME NOTABLE EXAMPLES OF MEN WHO PRAYED.

Some notable examples of praying men will help us to practice this heavenly ministry of prayer.

Wesley spent two hours daily in prayer, and often more than this. He began at four in the morning. One who knew him well says of him: "He thought prayer to be more his business than anything else, and I have seen him come from his closet with a serenity of face next to shining."

John Fletcher stained the walls of his room with the breath of his prayers. Sometimes he would pray all night.

Luther said: "If I fail to spend two hours in prayer each morning, the devil gets the victory through the day." His motto was: "He that has prayed well, has studied well."

Bishop Leighton was so much alone with God that he seemed to be in a perpetual meditation. Substantially the same was said of Dr. A. J. Gordon.

Bishop Asbury said: "I propose to rise at four o'clock as often as I can and spend two hours in prayer and meditation."

Samuel Rutherford rose at three o'clock in the morning to meet God in prayer.

Robert Murray McCheyne spent from six to eight a. m. and an hour after tea shut in with God.

The memorable Methodist Band spent from four to five in the morning and from five to six in the afternoon in private prayer.

John Welch, a worthy son-in-law of John Knox, and a wonderful preacher, thought the day ill spent if he did not spend eight to ten hours in prayer. His wife would complain when she found him on the ground weeping. He would reply, "O woman, I have the souls of 3000 to answer for, and I know not how it is with many of them!"

It is said of the saintly Payson that he wore the hard-wood boards into grooves where his knees pressed so often and so long. His biographer says: "His continuing instant in prayer is the most noticeable fact in his history and points out the duty of all who would rival his eminence."

Dr. Adoniram Judson spent several hours a day in prayer. He impressed an empire for Christ and laid the foundations of imperishable granite in the heart of Burmah.

David said: "Early will I seek Thee."

"Thou shalt early hear my voice." Christ went to the place of prayer a great while before day.

Christmas Evans knew the value and power of prayer, which brought to him "the anointing of the Holy One, which worketh mightily in the inward man. This is the mystery of effective preaching. We must be endued with power from on high." His preaching brought conviction of sin like a deluge over the people.

John Livingstone preached one sermon in Scotland after a night in prayer and five hundred persons professed conversion. Michael Roberts, of Wales, preached and one thousand decided for Christ. Another mighty Welch preacher, John Elias, preached one sermon and twenty-five hundred were added to the Church.

Let us "give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the mystery of the Word."—Rev. F. H. Senft.

THE CULTURE OF FAITH.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

There is scarcely anything more essential to the prosperity of Christian life than the constant culture of personal faith. This is especially true of one who is constitutionally inclined to skeptical indulgences. Such a person is frequently afflicted with sinister doubts. It is more difficult for him to believe some statements in the Bible than it is for one who is entirely free from a skeptical inclination. As for myself, I may say that I never had such a tendency; hence I am not able to sympathize with one who is the victim of destructive doubts. But I would urge a Christian of that type to assiduously cultivate a positive and open-hearted faith in God and in the Bible. Let him banish from his mind every thought which would bring him into captivity to unbelief. Let every suggestion to disbelieve the Word of God be driven away. There is no danger in one's believing fully in the Bible. There is great danger in one's believing too little in God's Word. Just as surely as one begins to disbelieve in parts of the Bible, so surely will it begin to sap and weaken his faith in the Divine oracles. Unbelief in one part of the Bible leads directly to unbelief in other parts of it.

Unbelief always runs downward, and the further that one follows that path, the more rapidly he descends. It is much harder for one to get back from a descending unbelief to the first beginnings of doubt, than it is to conquer and kill doubt when it first preys upon the heart. Some years ago, a very intelligent and well educated man, past middle life, who had indulged in skeptical notions about the Bible, told me that he would give a great deal if he could believe as I did. He spoke in a solemn and despairing tone. He had descended so far in the path of unbelief that he found it most difficult to retrace his steps; and this is true of thousands of people. There is nothing better for a young person than to be in the habit of believing, with all earnestness, in God, and in all that he has declared to mankind. Such a faith, kept in freest exercise, will continue to grow in vigor and effectiveness.

SUCCESS.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

I.

What is success? Some one has said: "That only is a success that adequately accomplishes the end, or purpose, toward which it was made, promulgated, instituted, or ordained." Webster says: "Success is the favorable, or prosperous, termination of anything attempted." Success, then, is attaining unto a goal. Such a defining of success is true, but it is success defined upon a materialistic basis. Narrowly speaking—that is looked at from the single view-point of "getting there" with a projected proposition—the above definition of success is true. But when one speaks of success in connection with a human life can one be excused for taking simply the materialistic conception of success and then praising men because they approximately measure up thereto? Broadly speaking, success for man is "Doing the will of God."

II.

How is success attained? Success is attained by the possession and exercise of certain prerequisites. As some one has wisely said: "Generally speaking, these are three: 1, Knowledge; 2, System; 3, Industry."

1. Before one can even start upon the road to success in any line of activity one must know something about the game one proposes to play. Wise men make a thorough study, as far as circumstances will allow, of whatever business they contemplate undertaking that they may know the "ups and downs—the outs and ins" thereof. Wise men seek to profit by the mistakes of others and thereby avoid the pitfalls that have become the graves of other men. "Fools pass on and are punished."

2. Any undertaking that requires the work of but one man can best be accomplished through systematization. All industry that requires the work of two, or more, must be systematized that there may be no crossing of one laborer into the work of another, or conflict of interest, or loss of time. We have but to look at the great industrial organizations of the world to-day to see the indispensable necessity of system—every wheel every cog, every belt, every shaft and every man in place and in line, with the machinery well oiled, is a thing absolutely necessary that organized machinery may even move with ease.

3. Industry on the part of the manager even must be exercised. Eternal vigilance, and being ever on the job, is the recognized price that must be paid to make any machinery go, whether it be of steel or men.

The union of the trinity—"Knowledge, System and Industry"—is the price that must be paid by all for success. Leave either of the three out and success is never found except temporarily.

III.

Who may attain unto success? We have seen that success is conditioned, only, upon the possession and exercise of "Knowledge, System, and Industry." With the possession and exercise of these three prerequisites, success may be attained in any line of activity, either good or bad. Success, then may be attained by any person who is willing to pay the price, no matter what be his proposed line of activity. Speaking generally, all men have the price that must be paid for success within themselves. God has endowed all men with the fundamental elements for success. However, they are within each man, to begin with, in a state of chaos and must be arranged in order by the will. Wherever there exists a personality with power to will, power to think and power to perform, right there you have the possibility of success.

IV.

What is the legal goal of all industrial activity? Clearly, there is but one answer—PROFITS. That institution, whether belonging to an individual or to a corporation, that does not produce profits is counted a failure. The cost of advertising, etc., necessary to run the business, must not equal the income from the business. Without profits there is no success, no matter how perfect the advertising, how beautiful and attractive the fixtures, nor how excellent the goods delivered. PROFITS—DIVIDENDS is the only thing that spells SUCCESS in the commercial world.

V.

What is the goal of the Church of God? To what end was it founded among men? "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," is the command given by Christ to his followers. The Church was established by our church fathers to carry into execution the command of our Lord above quoted. The purpose of the preaching of the gospel is to save souls. The goal, then, of the Church of God is to save souls. INCIDENTALLY, AND ONLY AS A MEANS TO SAVING SOULS, the Church has undertaken SIDE LINES, such as education, establishing and maintaining orphan homes, hospitals, etc. These are only BY-PRODUCTS when looked at from the view-point of the purpose for which the Church of God was founded. The local church building and organization, the educational institutions, the hospitals and orphans' homes are but means toward the accomplishing of the purpose for which the Church of God was founded. Therefore, it matters not how beautiful the church building may be, how perfect the organization is, how successful the orphans' home, etc., may become, nor how much praise may be heaped upon the heads of certain preachers because of their successful demonstration of the human attributes of preaching, IF SOULS ARE NOT SAVED, THE WHOLE THING IS A FAILURE.

THE TOBACCO EVIL.

Dear Brother Meek: The enclosed article, opposing the use of tobacco, published in the Mississippi Sunday School Herald, is well worth careful thought. A prudent man forseeth the evil and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished (Proverbs 22:3). A man beyond hope of recovery from cancer of the mouth caused by smoking said to his physician who had told him in the earlier stage that if he would cease smoking he could cure him, "I can not." When I saw him, the kind physician could no longer say if you willl discontinue I can cure you; but he said, "It is too late; there is positively no hope for you." C. H. ELLIS.

Camden, Miss.

The article referred to by Brother Ellis, and the publication of which he requests, was written by Dr. Charles L. Hamilton, a specialist, of Dwight, Illinois. It appears in full below:

"The Anti-Tobacco Campaign.

"The numerous mental wrecks, youths who have come under my care during the last ten years, whose lives are failures, or who have filled suicides' graves, impress me with the thought that to-day tobacco stands as the gravest danger confronting the new century."—Dr. Love, in Medical Bulletin.

"It has been found that of 603 delinquent children from 8 to 15 years of age, 51 per cent—more than half—had formed the tobacco habit before detention. The use of tobacco by a child leads to idleness, drunkenness, crime."—From "Crime, Its Causes and Cure," Mosby.

Tobacco smoke drawn in comes directly into contact with the soft, absorbent mucous membrane lining of the lips and mouth. When inhaled it reaches the lining of the upper part of throat, larynx, wind-pipe, and large bronchial tubes. These absorbent membranes quickly soak in the nicotine, acrolein, carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, etc., and these poisonous products pour into the blood. Back of the nose are three "turbinated bones;" over them lies a great fold of mucous membrane. When smoke is drawn in and expelled through the nose, it strikes squarely that surface of absorbent lining and deposits its poisons there.

Absorbed into the blood-stream, these poisons are carried to the brain. Even a small amount of these poisons will dull and damage the brain, resulting in an impairment of moral, mental and spiritual capacities. The smallest percentage of nicotine or carbon monoxide absorbed in this way does great harm. The tobacco-poisoned brain cannot act as a normal brain should act.

Recent investigations have demonstrated the effect of tobacco smoking on muscular and intellectual efficiency. Men were selected in groups of fifteen and a series of 120 tests made. The results of the mental tests showed that tobacco smoking decreased mental efficiency ten per cent. The greatest actual loss was in the field of imagination or imagery that plays so important a part in boy life. That was 22 per cent. Other effects were loss of perception, weakened willpower, impaired intellectual ability, decreased power of association which is the basis of reasoning powers. The greatest losses occurred when the cigarette was used.

Smoking means—

1. Impure blood. That means imperfect nutrition of the brain cells which will hinder ordinary every-day thinking.

2. Increased blood pressure, one cause of Bright's disease of the kidneys.

3. Heart diseases of different kinds.

4. Arterial sclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, which means one is getting old. Tests show that in men of thirty-five, who are tobacco users, we find as much hardening of the arteries as is normally found in men of seventy.

5. Damage to the highest brain centers, resulting in an impairment of the conception of right and wrong, which often and easily, leads to criminality.

Let me quote Dr. Matthew Woods:

"We positively know that it does at times produce serious disturbances of the heart, the nervous system and mucous membranes, while in a great many diseases its use by the patient limits and diminishes the possibilities of recovery."

MISSIONARY DAY—EASTER SUNDAY.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren—We desire to call special attention to the following recommendation of our Conference Board of Missions adopted at our last Annual Cnference as part of Report No. 2: "Your Board of Missions has deemed it expedient to designate the first Sunday in April—Easter Sunday—as Missionary Day, at which time it is expected that a missionary offering will be taken in every congregation, and we recommend that a missionary sermon be preached by each pastor the Sunday preceding." If the majority of our pastors will comply with this reasonable recommendation, we are confident that gratifying results will be achieved, especially in the matter of early collections. The offering may, of course, be divided between Home and Foreign Missions. Many of our domestic missionaries are in urgent need of funds. Dr. E. H. Rawlings states that because of delayed collections, our General Board is forced to borrow a considerable sum every year to keep the missionaries in the field, and that we pay interest enough on this borrowed money to support ten new missionaries.

For a number of years one of the leading pastors of the North Alabama Conference has observed Easter Sunday as Missionary Day with signal success. Let us not fail to give our people an opportunity on that joyous occasion to express their gratitude to God for the blessed hope of the resurrection through the risen Christ by making an offering for the world's evangelization. It has been found helpful to distribute Easter offering envelopes in the congregation the Sunday preceding, and also by mail to the absentees. Easter envelopes can be had from our Publishing House at 30 cents per hundred.

Yours fraternally,

WM. H. LaPRADE, President.

M. M. BLACK, Secretary.

FAITH AND THE ANSWERING WITNESS.

"There is much about Jesus Christ that we do not understand, and concerning which we offer no explanation. How it was possible for him who was very God to assume our flesh and therein embody a consciousness that was perfectly human and at the same time divine, we are utterly unable to say. The question leads to the realm of faith, where we rise to the summit of divine fellowship, and there obtain the witness of the Spirit and cry, 'Father!' By that witness we know that Jesus is the Son of God, and that we in him partake of his life. We simply know his love and are changed into his image. With a glad and grateful heart we say, 'My Lord and my God!' That is all, but is is enough."

(This Department is conducted by Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Secretary of Education, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Publicity Commissioner.)

THE CHURCH IS YET RESPONSIBLE.

The early history of civilized nations reveals the fact that the privilege of an education was provided for very few, and that the governments taught their sons how to fight, instead of how to think. The Hebrew nation was different in that it taught its children the commandments of God and the Books of the Law. There was developed in the youth of Israel a yearning after knowledge. This yearning was inspired by the knowledge of God coming to the consciences of individuals. It is the spark of the divine within us that yearns after a greater knowledge, because that divine is a spark of the Divinity that is All Wise. The teaching of the providence and will of God to youth produced from the Hebrew race such men of great learning and wisdom as Joseph, Moses, Solomon, and Daniel. None of these men had their equal in all the world.

In heathen lands individuals yearned after a deeper insight into the secrets of life. Great minds were developed and great ideas advanced. But somehow the learning of the heathen lacked balance. Seneca, one of the greatest of Greek scholars, found nothing in the wisdom of the world to satisfy his hunger for knowledge and sought the path of self-destruction as the end of a miserable life. In the course of time the great yearning of youth for knowledge and the great advantage of learning to the individual were recognized by heads of governments. Tax money was expended in increasingly large sums in order to provide conveniences for youth to be taught. The result is that to-day we have schools and colleges and universities provided by States and individuals. The almost unlimited supply of money behind these institutions guarantees their continued existence, and also guarantees that they will be equipped with the very best that money can buy. It is no longer true that a liberal education is the privilege of the few.

The first educational work of the Church was that of teaching individuals the law of God. It was that knowledge that inspired mankind to reach forth and discover great natural laws and the far-reaching effects of certain conditions. The history of the world shows that only where this higher learning gets its inspiration from a first knowledge of God does it really benefit civilization. Japan has her great universities and scholars, but it is an honorable thing in Japan for a great public servant to commit suicide if by so doing he seems to do an act honoring a great principle or a great ruler. Unless our American school system, which leaves God entirely out, is struck by a cross current coming from the Church of God, the end of our educational system will be worse than abject ignorance. The Church must stand to the front and lead as an educating factor if our civilization is to pass the test of time.

It is not necessarily true that the Church must teach science and literature only in a general way, but the Church must teach the commandments and precepts of God as handed down to us by inspiration. Our Methodism has in Louisiana only one college where young men are taught. Centenary College is the only light that breaks from the Methodist Church across the lowering darkness of the pure materialism that exists in the system of our State schools that persistently leaves God out of everything. Centenary College is the light-house, and she will burn brighter in proportion to how well she is supplied with young men and money. Our Methodist families should be represented in this great work in some way. If Methodist parents contemplate giving their sons higher education, they should send them to Centenary College. If our Methodist membership does nothing else just now, it should lay its money liberally upon the altar of Christian Education so that Centenary College many want for nothing in the carrying on of the great work that is committed to her.

CENTENARY AND PROHIBITION.

In the convincing statement from Dr. Wynn published in this department on Feb. 25, reference was made to the fact that Shreveport, where the college is located, is under local option prohibition, and has been for years. This fact is worth taking into consideration by those who are interested in colleges for boys in Louisiana, especially in connection with the fact that CENTENARY IS THE ONLY COLLEGE FOR BOYS IN LOUISIANA THAT IS LOCATED IN DRY TERRITORY. The State Industrial School at Ruston and the Normal at Natchitoches are not really colleges, and all the other colleges for boys in the State are situated in easy reach of open licensed saloons The parent who is interested in the moral welfare of his boy must take this into consideration in sending the boy away from home restraints to college. The same fact makes it imperative that Louisiana Methodism should raise to the highest efficiency this college with such an initial moral advantage.

JUDGE JOHN MORGAN STEVENS.

Judge John Morgan Stevens, recently appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Mississippi by Governor Brewer, is one of Hattiesburg's most highly esteemed citizens. He is now serving his second term as Chancellor of the Eighth Mississippi District, to which office he was first appointed by the Governor and re-elected for a term of four years by the people last November without opposition. Before his elevation to the bench, more than two years ago, he was a member of the law firm of Stevens, Stevens & Cook, which ranks among the best and strongest in the State.

Judge Stevens comes from an old and honored family, being one of six sons and four daughters of the late Benjamin Stevens, of Perry County, who was a captain in the Confederate Army. All the members of this large family have made useful citizens and have achieved more than ordinary success in life, some of them having become distinguished in their chosen professions. Every one of the brothers was named for a Confederate general, the subject of this sketch being named for that intrepid leader of the "lost cause," General John Morgan.

Judge Stevens possesses those qualities of mind and heart which are necessary for the discharge of the duties of a Supreme Justice. He is only thirty-eight years of age, enjoying the vigor of young manhood and combining in his character the culture of a fine home, the learning of the schools, the wisdom of the law, the temperament of the judge, and the religion of the Christ. He was educated in the public schools, Millsaps College, and the University of Mississippi, receiving at the last-named school the degree of Bachelor of Arts, with distinguished honors. He read law in the office of his brother, the late William Forrest Stevens, of Carrollton, for several terms judge of the Circuit Court District in North Mississippi in which he resided. Beginning the practice of law in Lexington, he soon removed to Hattiesburg where he formed a partnership with his brother, H. S. Stevens, the latter having served his county with distinction for one term in the State Senate. The firm later was changed to Stevens, Stevens & Cook, which was its style at the time of his appointment to the Chancellorship.

He married Miss Ethel Featherstun, the accomplished daughter of Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, D.D., a leading member of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Church. Judge and Mrs. Stevens are both active and influential members of the Main Street Methodist Church and take an aggressive interest in all civic, charitable and religious work which goes on in the community. He, in addition to his duties as Chancellor of probably the largest Judicial District in the State, is a teacher of a large class of young men in the Sunday school. This class is influential for good throughout the city and was built up to its present efficiency largely through the personal efforts of Judge Stevens.

The liberty of a free people will never be imperiled, nor will crime go unwhipped of justice, so long as men of the type of John Morgan Stevens fill our offices and guide the affairs of our beloved Commonwealth.

His pastor and friend,
CHARLES WILLIAM CRISLER.

The effort of Germany to blockade the British Isles by means of submarine war vessels has thus far been very ineffective. It is stated that during the week from February 25 to March 4, 1474 British vessels arrived and left the various English ports without a single one being lost or injured.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, who was Miss Laura Celestia Spelman of Wadsworth, and later of Cleveland, Ohio, died at Pocantico Hills, just outside of Tarrytown, New York, on March 12. She had been an invalid for many months, but her death was unexpected. She was the daughter of well-to-do parents and a city girl when she formed the acquaintance of her now famous husband, who was then a country boy who had found his way into Cleveland seeking employment.

It has been announced that a convention of Lieutenant Governors will be held at Rhea Springs and Chattanooga, Tenn., next May and that at least forty such officials will be present. The meeting will be presided over by Vice-President Marshall. The object of this conference is said to be to enable the Lieutenant Governors and Presiding Officers of the Senates of the various States to organize in order to secure larger salaries, the enlargement of their powers, and cooperation in the enactment of legislative measures of common interest.

The constitutionality of the Mississippi law against Greek letter fraternities in the State schools has been challenged in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the case was argued last week. It is to be hoped that the Court will sustain the validity of the law. The Editor was a member of one of these fraternities when a college boy, but it is his conviction that, while they do some good, the general effect of them is to create unfortunate divisions among the students and make poor boys feel that they are discriminated against. A spirit of genuine democracy should prevail at our educational institutions.

Telephones are now being used to locate bullets in the bodies of wounded soldiers in the military hospitals of Europe. The London Lancet thus describes the method by which this is done: "One terminal of the instrument has attached to it a fine needle, and to the other terminal is attached a plate made of the same kind of metal as the needle. The plate is placed on the limb or portion of the body to be examined and the needle is thrust in where the bullet is believed to be, and when it strikes the ball a galvanic battery is formed within the body. This will cause a click to be heard in the telephone each time the bullet is struck."

Mr. Benjamin R. Strong, a wealthy citizen of Knoxville, Tenn., who recently died in Florida, left the principal part of his estate to the University of Tennessee. He made two direct donations to that institution: one of $30,000 for the construction of a girls' hall to be named for his mother, and another of $35,000 to be used in purchasing additional lands for the farming operations of the University. Besides these special gifts, the University will share in the final distribution of Mr. Strong's property; so it is estimated that the whole amount it will receive from this source will be more than $250,000, which is said to be the largest sum ever given to it by one person.

In a statement to the State Probe Commission, sitting in Alexandria, La., last week, Hon. H. H. White, of that city, is quoted as having declared against calling a constitutional convention in Louisiana now and as being in favor of increasing the working time of the State Supreme Court from four to five hours and of shortening the vacation of the judges to at least three months. Because of the possibility of political influences being improperly exercised, Mr. White said: "I favor long terms for judges and their appointment by the Governor or some committee of the State Senate." Louisiana has had an elective judiciary for a number of years and Mr. White has had ample opportunity to observe its workings; hence his opinion is not merely an academic or speculative one.

Though the European war has been in progress for about seven months, there apparently have been scarcely any decisive battles. Germany yet holds practically the whole of Belgium and about one-eighth of France, while her own soil is still free from occupancy by her foes except a small portion of East Prussia and some 300 square miles in Alsace. Austria, however, has fared very much worse than her great ally, Russia now having possession of more than 25,000 square miles of her territory. Germany also is beginning to show signs of a scarcity of food and ammunition and to exhibit in some respects a spirit of desperation. The war ships of England and France have been hammering away at the Dardanelle forts for several days with considerable success, and at this writing the fall of Constantinople in the near future is considered probable. All in all, the final triumph of England and her allies seems to become increasingly certain as the weeks pass. But how long the war will last is about as perplexing a problem to-day as it was six months ago.

The situation in Mexico continues to be anarchistic. Apparently little headway toward supremacy is being made either by the forces of Carranza or Villa. The population still remains divided into factions and disorder and violence seem to be prevailing nearly everywhere. Lately, with General Obregon's troops in control of it, there has been almost a famine in Mexico City; but he abandoned the place the latter part of last week and it is again in the hands of General Zapata's forces. One of the first acts of the latter upon re-entering the capital was to murder Mr. John B. McManus, an American citizen, in his home, which had been sealed with the coat of arms of the United States and over which the Amrican flag was flying. Complications with other nations are multiplying and there is some talk of the European powers proposing to our Government a movement for joint intervention. Holding to the Monroe doctrine, as it does, it is not likely that our Government would entertain the thought of such a course of procedure; but such a proposal might force the United States to take up independently the task of restoring order in Mexico. For our part, we are inclined to think that the reign of anarchy there has been endured long enough and that patience with the Mexican chiefs has about ceased to be a virtue. There are undouhtedly times when the exercise of force in the interest of humanity and peace is the regrettable but unavoidable duty of a nation.

The British Royal Commission on the Civil Service recently declared that the salaries of English Ministers and Ambassadors, which range from $6500 to $57,500, are inadequate, and a new scheme of salaries is proposed. The British Ambassador to the United States now receives $50,000 per annum, and the one to France, $57,500. The United States Ambassadors to the leading nations of the world are paid $17,500 a year.

There are 22 States that provide official residences for their Governors. Some of these States and the cost of their executive mansions are as follows: North Carolina, $125,000; Pennsylvania, $100,000; Kentucky, $97,000; Georgia, $95,000; Illinois, $88,500; South Carolina, $60,000; New York, Alabama, and Washington, $50,000 each; West Virginia, $45,000; Nevada, $40,000; Tennessee, $31,000, and Mississippi, $30,000. The cost of the official residences owned by the other States referred to are not available. The States of Arkansas, Indiana, Iowa, South Dakota, and Louisiana rent houses for their Governors, while Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Vermont make no provision for a Governor's residence.

AN URGENT APPEAL FOR UNFORTUNATE WOMEN.

Under the title of The Social Service League, a letter is being sent to Christians in Louisiana, and particularly Methodists, urging prompt relief for some unfortunate girls who are seeking a better life, and have been thrust upon the public's mercy by recent police raids.

This letter is sent out by the Executive Committee, which is composed, in part, of the following gentlemen: W. W. Holmes, P. E. of New Orleans District, Rev. W. W. Drake, Rev. W. E. Thomas, Mr. Van Carter, Mr. Paul Renshaw, Dr. T. P. Bell, Mr. J. K. Mann, Mr. L. Herman, and other laymen.

We print the letter in full, as the Committee are anxious that it shall come to the immediate attention of Louisiana Methodists, and that they speedily respond to this pressing need:

"Dear Christian Friend: Because we believe you will be interested and can be of valuable assistance to us we are asking that you join with us in meeting a pressing emergency.

"This organization is composed of Christian persons seeking to better the conditions of unfortunate young women and delinquent girls in this city. The immediate work at hand is to alleviate the hard lot of certain young women who have been thrown upon the public's mercy in the recent closing of certain cabarets, or public dance halls, by the police authorities, and who from the jail or house of detention, have no place to go, other than to a worse life. This we want to stop—and do it NOW.

"As a temporary accommodation for such women, we hope to rent a cottage, to be run in connection with St. Mark's Hall; and, in cases where parents or relatives can be located, to assist them in returning to their homes. As Christian people, we believe this is an urgent work that must be met IMMEDIATELY with positive and unstinted effort.

"Already we have two of these girls at St. Mark's Hall, and have supplied their immediate wants by credit purchases, but there are others to be cared for. We have them on our hands; something must be done THIS WEEK.

"To carry on this work we must have finances. We confidently expect the assistance of yourself and others upon whom we are now calling. We ask you to send us a contribution of not less than one dollar by the very NEXT MAIL, if possible. Send remittance direct to Rev. W. W. Holmes, 1011 Cambronne St., New Orleans.

"Faithfully yours,

"The EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE."

Dr. J. L. Johnson, a distinguished Baptist Minister and educator, died at Clinton, Miss., after a long and painful illness, on March 2. He was born in Spotsylvania County, Va., in 1835, and was educated at the University of Virginia, from which institution he was graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1859. He was ordained a Baptist minister soon after leaving college and was a chaplain in the Confederate Army. After the close of the Civil War he was active in ministerial work in the State of his nativity and was for a time connected with Roanoke College, at Danville, Va. In 1873 he was elected to the Chair of English in the University of Mississippi, a position which he filled with conspicuous ability for a number of years. He, later, entered the pastorate again and was also subsequently in charge of Mary Sharp College, in Tennessee, and of Hillman College, at Clinton, Miss. Dr. Johnson was an accomplished scholar, an able and forceful preacher, and a high-minded and widely useful citizen, and he has left behind a worthy and unsullied record. We extend sympathy to the sorrowing members of his family.

ANOTHER "MYRTLE LETTER."

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

Many years ago, when I was in the critical period of life, doubting everything, verifying everything, I made an earnest study of the mythical theory of the life of Jesus. I found that a myth is a mass of legend which has grown up around a nucleus of fact; and that the time element is the essential condition of the growth of a myth. Hercules was an unusually strong man. Those who talked about his feats exaggerated his strength. It became a tradition, and the next generation added to the exaggeration, and in course of time Hercules became a demigod in the imagination of the credulous people. Such a theory is utterly inadequate to explain the life of Jesus. That life was lived in the broad glare of an enlightened age, and the earliest written record of it was too near to the actual events to allow of the growth of a myth.

And yet the principal of the myth applies to a great deal of what passes for history, and almost justifies Napoleon's definition of history as "fiction that is agreed upon." We are now seriously told that Lincoln was a Christian, and a book is advertised, "Abraham Lincoln, the Christian." When he lived, Lincoln made no profession of religion, was never a member of the Church, and as an honest man would have been among the first to disclaim being a "Christian." What sort of Christianity is that which does not confess Christ, stands aloof from his Church, and ignores all the obligations of his service? The idea of Abraham Lincoln being a Christian is pure myth forming under our eyes. A hundred years from now he will have developed into an apostle. I am sure I have no desire to dim the just fame of Lincoln; but such fiction is little short of contemptible.

Washington is treated in the same way. That delightful writer, Mrs. Evelyn Baker Dodd, who wields her polished and sparkling pen only too seldom to please her many admirers, recently wrote about Washington in the Nashville Christian Advocate, and, among other things, she said: "and as a Christian he was like his Lord." Now it is never pleasant to controvert such amiable fiction. One lays himself liable to be criticised as injecting a harsh note into the music. But it seems to me to be a very dangerous thing to make such statements. Let us suppose a case. Let us suppose a young fellow who is a member of the Church, but exposed to temptation, and especially to card playing and dancing. He is fond of reading, and has just been reading "The True George Washington," by Paul Leicester Ford. He has just read that Washington's distillery paid him, in 1798, a profit of "344 pounds twelve shillings and seven and three-quarter pence, with a stock carried over of seven hundred and fifty-five and one-quarter gallons." Farther on that he had "a distinct weakness for dancing," and that "his diary shows him at balls and routs frequently," and that on one occasion "his Excellency and Mrs. Greene danced upwards of three hours without once sitting down." Farther on that Washington was very fond of cards, and an inveterate gambler, never for large stakes, but always for gain.

Now suppose as they assembled for supper, John tells his mother he has been invited to Mrs. So and So's card party that evening, the games to be followed by a dance. His mother exclaims, "O, John, my son, I hope you have no idea of accepting it. You are a Christian, and you know a Christian must have the courage to deny himself such things as the card table and the dance." John is silent, for he respects his mother, yet he feels a strong inclination to go to that party. After supper, as they are sitting in the library, his mother picks up The Christian Advocate and, looking over it, sees the article on Washington by Evelyn Baker Dodd. "John, you must read this," his mother says. "Here is an article on your hero, Washington, by your friend, Mrs. Evelyn Baker Dodd," "Is that so? I'll read that. She can write. Her pen is a diamond. She couldn't be dull if she tried." So he takes the Advocate and reads: "And as a Christian he was like his Lord."

Now Mrs. Dodd does not know anything about young men if she does not know that she has unwittingly helped to break down all that mother's influence, and to encourage a young man to give way to his worldly inclinations. Washington was a "Christian" only in the broad sense that he was a believer in the truth of Christianity and a communicant of the Church. He was a high-toned, honorable man, and no one has ever impeached his integrity or challenged his sincerity. But it is impossible to reconcile his character with the ideal religious life expressed in Mrs. Dodd's paper. In her subconscious mind she was probably thinking of a greater than Washington, Lee. Lee never touched wine or cards or danced or made whiskey. As a young man, about seventeen, he quietly retired from a party because of the cards and dancing and wine-bibbing. Of him it can be truly said that "as a Christian he was like his Lord;" but not of Washington.

All goes well down here. If Germany sinks an American ship, South Carolina is ready to whip Germany all by herself. So Germany had better go slow with her submarine threat.—Central Methodist Advocate.

A FELLOW'S MOTHER.

"A fellow's mother," said Fred the wise,
With his rosy cheeks and merry blue eyes,
"Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump or a bruise, or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has bags and strings,
Rags and buttons and lots of things;
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care—not much, I mean—
If a fellow's face is not quite clean;
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put on a patch you'd never see!

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
And only sorry, if you are bad;
And I'll tell you this, if you are only true,
She'll always forgive you, whatever you do.

"A fellow's mean who would never try
To keep the tear from her loving eye,
And the fellow is worse who sees it not
That his mother's the truest friend he's got!"

THE FOOLISH ROSE.

While I was walking in the garden one bright morning a breeze came through and set all the flowers and leaves a-flutter. Now that is the way flowers talk, so I pricked up my ears and listened.

Presently an elder tree said: "Flowers, shake off your caterpillars."

"Why?" said a dozen all together, for they were like some children who always say "Why?" when they are told to do anything.

The elder said: "If you don't, they'll gobble you up."

So the flowers set themselves a-shaking till the caterpillars were shaken off.

In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose who shook off all but one, and she said to herself: "Oh, that's a beauty. I will keep that one."

The elder overheard her and called: "One caterpillar is enough to spoil you."

"But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful black eyes, and scores of little feet. I want to keep him. Surely one won't hurt me."

A few mornings afterward I passed the rose again. There was not a whole leaf on her. Her beauty was gone; she was all but killed, and had only life enough to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dew-drops on the tattered leaves.

"Alas! I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me."

One sin indulged has ruined many a boy and girl. This is an old story, but a true lesson.—Morning Star.

FITNESS FIRST.

"How are you getting along, Tom?" asked Prof. Marks of Thomas Green, on the occasion of the latter's vacation visit to his old home at Fairhaven.

"Pretty slow," replied Tom.

"Why, are you not still working for the L. B. & C. Railway?"

"Oh, yes," replied Tom, "but I guess I am stuck, and will stay where I am for the next forty years."

"Why, what do you mean? I heard you had advanced rapidly in the office."

"Well, that is the trouble," responded Tom. "When I went to work for the company, I thought I knew too much to remain a simple messenger in the office, so I was exceptionally accommodating and polite to the chief clerk, and when a vacancy occurred above me I used my friends and influence to get the better position. I did my work well, but still thought I should have better pay, and was able to fill a more responsible place in the office, so I spared no effort to get another promotion. A year after I had been with the company, I had been promoted five times, and was getting an exceptionally good salary for one of my age and experience."

"I had heard about that," responded Prof. Marks. "Are you not still occupying that position?"

"Yes, and have been for two years, and that's the trouble. When I had been there a year, owing to the death of one of the men and the illness of the chief clerk and two of the boys being off on their vacations, I was compelled to take charge of the office for a few days. It was there I failed. Matters of which I knew nothing came up for consideration, and my short railroad career had given me no experience to help me out. For three days I struggled with the situation, until every one in the office knew that I was unable to run things. The third day the assistant manager came in, desiring some information which I was unable to give. He was very much surprised, and after asking me several questions and making some inquiries regarding the details of my work, walked out of the room, and in an hour I was relieved of that work and sent back to my old desk.

"The boys in the office had a good laugh on me, and while no one realized more than myself my inability, it took all the courage I had to remain in the office. Now, not only have my superiors lost confidence in my ability, but I find myself discouraged. Had I been content to go a little slower, and been as anxious to learn the details as I was to get more salary, I would now be better off.—Puck.

NOT FOR SALE.

"How much will I sell him for? I wouldn't take a million dollars for that dog; no, siree."

"Why, yes. I'll tell yer why I won't part with him, if yer want ter hear. Sit down!"

"Well, when my boy was a baby, not more'n a year old, I was cap'n of a canal-boat. We was tied up on the Hudson river at Albany. The ice was jest breakin' up an' a-floatin' down-stream.

"My wife use ter put the baby out on deck in a clothes-basket most every day, an' he'd play in that for hours on a stretch, with the dog.

"One day she left 'em a second, and went into the cabin—I'd gone ashore that mornin', when—ker-plunk!—overboard went the basket and baby onter an ice-cake. Whew! it makes me shiver when I think of it. They landed right side up, though, thank heaven!

"Well, sir, that dog barked with all his might, till my wife rushed out ter see what was up; then—would yer b'lieve it?—he jumped in, too.

"I came back jest a few minutes after and my wife was actin' like she'd gone crazy—she was wavin' her arms toward a speck down the river. I looked—my heart most stopped a-pumpin'! I lowered the boat as quick as I could, with my hands shakin' so—an' we put off.

"I saw a clear strip o' water ahead an' we made for it as fast as we could row. When we got within fifty feet o' the baby an' dog, the ice closed in around us.

"I looked over my shoulder. There was a big cake o' ice a-piling on top o' the one where the baby was, an' a-pushin' the basket toward the edge.

"The dog was a-barkin' like mad.

"Splash!

"My wife screamed.

"The basket an' baby was in the water!

"That noble dog was onter his job, though, all right. Yes, siree! He grabbed that baby an' held on like a vise. Managed ter keep heads above water, too, somehow.

"With superhuman strength we pushed, jammed an' broke our way through those ice-cakes. In a few seconds—they seemed like years—we got 'em an' hauled 'em both aboard.

"The baby was all right, though a bit chilled, but the dog was about ter 'cash in'—couldn't 'av kept up much longer—could yer, old boy?

"Sell him? No, siree!"—Our Dumb Animals.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

A dull boy in a certain school was frequently reproached by his teacher, and made little progress. One day he made a first attempt to write. The scrawl was so wretched it amused the boys who sat near him. A gentleman, visiting the school, witnessing his distress, said to him:

"Never mind, my lad, do not be discouraged, and you will be a writer some day. I recollect when I first began, being quite as awkward as you; but I persevered, and now, look! See what I can do!"

He took his pen, and wrote his name in a large, legible hand. Years afterward, when the dull boy had become one of the most celebrated men of his day, he met again the man who had spoken to him those few encouraging words. He said to him:

"It is my firm conviction that I owe my success in life, under God's blessing, to those few words you spoke to me that day when I sat so discouraged trying to write."—Methodist Recorder.

All the problems which confront us, the lack of money, the lack of helpers, the indifference so widespread about us, all these are but a challenge to us for more love, more patience, more sincerity, more courage, more zeal.—Bishop F. W. Keater.

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

Then subscribe to your Church paper and be cured of this ignorance. The Church paper will not only give you helpful information about the work of the Church; it will also provide nourishing, spiritual food fifty-two weeks in the year for both you and your family. You need wholesome reading matter in your home for your children, and if you do not provide them with such, do not be surprised if they acquire a taste for trashy novels and other very objectionable literature. Every Methodist home ought to have in it the Bible, the Discipline, the Hymn Book and the Church paper. The Church paper costs only about 4 cents (some only a little more than 2 cents) per week, which puts it within the reach of almost every family that really wants it. Subscribe to your Church paper and be a well-informed, loyal Methodist. Your pastor will be glad to send in your subscription.—From "Facts, Figures and Photographs for Methodists."

DR. CARROLL'S LATEST CHURCH STATISTICS.

We do not regard exhibits of Church statistics of the various denominations as very accurate or dependable, for the reason that the method of gathering them is not uniform and that they are usually collected by persons who have no special fitness for such work. This observation, of course, does not apply to Dr. Carroll who is a trained statistician; but it should be remembered that he only tabulates the figures furnished him by representatives of the several religious organizations embraced in his report. We have never seen two sets of religious statistics purporting to give the relative strength of the Churches in the United States that were anything like in accord. For instance, there was a wide difference between the Government Religious Census taken in 1906 and issued in 1910 and Dr. Carroll's figures for the corresponding period. But notwithstanding this lack of agreement in Church statistics, they may, we think, usually be accepted as indicating the general trend of things, and consequently examined with some degree of interest and profit.

According to Dr. Carroll's report for the year 1914, the strength and gains of the several leading denominations in the United States are as follows: Roman Catholic, 13,813,137—gain, 139,350; Methodist Episcopal Church, 3,603,265—gain, 187,497; Southern Baptist, 2,592,217—gain, 69,554; M. E. Church, South, 2,005,707—gain, 36,530; Colored Baptist, 2,018,868—gain, 33,916; Northern Presbyterian, 1,442,498—gain, 39,965; Disciples of Christ (Campbellites), 1,363,163—decrease, 452; Northern Baptist, 1,238,323—gain, 18,655; Protestant Episcopal, 1,026,048—gain, 28,641; Congregationalist, 755,088—gain, 4935; Southern Presbyterian, 310,602—gain, 9831.

Grouped by denominational families, the following are the figures for those in the lead: Roman Catholics, 13,813,137—gain, 139,350; Methodists, 7,328,829—gain, 231,460; Baptists, 6,179,622—gain, 122,125; Lutherans, 2,444,970—gain, 56,248; Presbyterians, 2,083,617—gain, 56,019.

It should be remembered that the statistics of the Roman Catholic Church rest upon a different basis from those of other denominations. On this point Dr. Carroll says: "The rule adopted in the Census of 1890, and followed in that of 1906, deducts 15 per cent from the Catholic population and sets down the remaining 85 per cent as communicants."

While, as we have said, the tables of Church statistics vary to a considerable extent, we have never seen such an exhibit that did not place the Methodists in the lead of all the other Protestant denominational families.

The total number of persons belonging to a religious organization in the United States is now 38,708,149, a gain over 1913 of 763,078—an average increase of about 2 per cent. The mistake should not be made, however, of concluding that there are more than 38,000,000 Christian people beneath our flag. In these millions are embraced many adherents of faiths that have little or nothing in common with the Christianity of Christ and the Apostles.

DR. W. D. BRADFIELD CHOSEN.

At the meeting of the Joint Board of Publication of the Texas Christian Advocate, in Dallas on Tuesday, March 9, Dr. W. D. Bradfield, pastor of the Travis Park Church of San Antonio, was unanimously elected editor of that journal to succeed the late Dr. G. C. Rankin. This action was not unexpected, as it was generally known that Dr. Bradfield was being considered for this responsible place. That our readers may know something of the man who is to direct the editorial work of the most widely circulated weekly in Southern Methodism, we will give a few of the leading events of his life.

He was born at Dangerfield, Texas, on July 24, 1866, being a son of Dr. James Y. and Mrs. Lou Cook Bradfield. He attended in his boyhood the schools in his native town, and was converted in 1882 under the ministry of Dr. J. W. Lively and joined the Church at the same time. He was licensed to preach at Sulphur Springs in April, 1885. He attended Vanderbilt University and received the degrees of B. A. and B. D. from that institution. He was married on June 29, 1892, to Miss Carrie M. Lawrence, of Hermitage, Tenn., and was admitted on trial into the Northwest Texas Conference in November of the same year. He has for many years been considered one of the most efficient Methodist pastors in Texas and has filled many of our leading pulpits in that State; and from 1903 to 1906 he was in charge of the Cook Avenue Church of St. Louis. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Polytechnic College, at Fort Worth, and was a delegate to the last two General Conferences.

When the contest for the ownership and control of Vanderbilt University began several years ago, Dr. Bradfield was on the Board of Trust of that institution, and by his open and fearless advocacy of the rights of the Church won the respect and confidence of Southern Methodists throughout the entire Connection. He was discontinued as a trustee by the dominant majority of the Board at the expiration of his term some four years ago. In the various phases of that memorable struggle which have since followed, he has never uttered an uncertain word or wavered in his loyalty to the Church and the cause of Christian education.

We are delighted to see Dr. Bradfield enter the field of religious journalism. We consider his elevation to the tripod in this transitional period a most fortunate thing for the Church. Perhaps in no other sphere of service are men of sound convictions and the courage and ability to maintain them now so urgently needed. As the editor of a weekly periodical which has more than 25,000 subscribers, Dr. Bradfield will have a great opportunity to make his influence strongly felt for good, and we believe that he will measure fully up to it. We pray God's blessings upon him as he takes in hand the new duties to which the Church has called him, and we predict for him a career of widening usefulness in the coming years.

NOISY, BUT NOT NUMEROUS.

So much noise is made by some of the new and heretical faiths in the United States that some people seem to think that they are making great headway. But such in reality is not the case. According to the Church statistics for 1914 gathered by Dr. H. K. Carroll, there were in this country 52,000 Universalists, with a gain of 284; 70,000 Unitarians, with no gain; 4714 adherents of Theosophy, with a gain of 525; 200,000 Spiritualists, with no numerical increase shown; 5365 Christian Catholics (Dowieites), with no gain; 85,096 Christian Scientists, with a gain of 84 church buildings, but none in membership; and 361,000 Mormons, with an increase of 5000. The various little isms also springing up, such as the Apostolic Faith Movement, the Heavenly Recruit Church, the Church of God, etc., are gasping for life. The great body of the American people who are connected with a religious organization are in the Protestant Evangelical Churches and in the Roman Catholic Church. The so-called "New Thought," with its various fads and fancies, is not very dangerous when it sets up its own organization and flies its own flag. It is when it pursues the more subtle course of masquerading as a friend and helper of the Churches with an accredited adherence to the teachings of the Bible and of infusing its insidous poison into the minds of the people through channels thought to be soundly Christian, that it does its most deadly and hurtful work. It is against this adroit method of attack that orthodox Christianity needs to be watchful and to set up its barriers.

PROHIBITION FLYING SQUADRON.

The Prohibition Flying Squadron which is made up of Ex-Governor Frank J. Hanly of Indiana, Dr. C. M. Sheldon, the well-known minister and writer; Hon. O. M. Steward of Illinois, Hon. John B. Lewis of Massachusetts, Dr. Ira Landrith of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. D. A. Poling, who is connected with the Christian Endeavor Movement, and Dr. Carolyn T. Geisel of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, is now operating in this section of the country. These workers were scheduled to spend last Tuesday and Wednesday in Jackson, Miss., where they were announced to conduct several meetings in the Capitol Street M. E. Church, South. They are expected to reach New Orleans on Friday, March 19, and conduct meetings in the First Methodist Church that day at 2:30 and 7:45 p.m., and at the same hours on Saturday. On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock a great prohibition mass meeting will be held in the Athenaeum, and the concluding meeting will be held in the First Methodist Church at the evening hour. The persons composing this company of campaigners are said to be among the most entertaining and effective advocates of temperance reform in the United States, and a great treat is in store for those who are so fortunate as to hear them. The general public is invited to attend all of these meetings.

HOW ABOUT IT?

What about the renewals in your charge, brother pastor? The European war is still going on, and so is the elimination of names from our subscription files. Do not your people need to read their Church paper? Some of the brethren are managing to continue practically all the subscriptions in their fields; but there are others who are letting them nearly all lapse. NOW is the time to lend the Conference organ a helping hand.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The New Orleans District Conference will be held in the Carrollton Avenue Church, April 8-9. The opening session will be held Thursday evening, April 8, beginning at 7:45 o'clock.

Rev. J. Howard Brooks, of Tutwiler, Miss., sends us a club of 6 subscribers, which he states was secured by Mrs. Mae White. We appreciate the kindness of both these friends.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Streater, and their daughter, Miss Ella Rivers Streater, of Black Hawk, Miss., have been appreciated guests of Mrs. R. A. Meek and the Editor at their residence, 5914 Coliseum Street, New Orleans, for the past few days.

Rev. B. H. Rawls sends us the following note on a postal card: "The work is progressing favorably on the Estabuchie (Miss.) Circuit, and we hope that it will continue to do so. We are praying for revivals throughout the charge, and are expecting to have them."

Rev. Robert Paine Fikes, of Brandon, Miss., sent us 10 renewal and 4 new subscriptions from his charge on the 10th inst. We appreciate this fine work in behalf of the Conference organ. Brother Fikes serves a choice flock and success is crowning his labors in his present field.

Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the Parker Memorial Church of this city, delivered an able and impressive gospel sermon last Sunday at 11 a. m. from 1 Timothy 1:15: "This a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."

We are indebted to our esteemed friend, Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., for 11 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate. It is Brother Howell's habit to look after the circulation of the Conference organ in his community every year. He is one of the best known laymen in the Durant District.

Rev. J. J. Garner, of Kilmichael, Miss., gives us several subscriptions from his parish, for which he has our thanks, and thus refers to his work: "We are getting along nicely in this charge. We have a fine Sunday school and a good prayer meeting, and we are hoping to have a successful year in every respect."

From the Morgan City (La.) Daily Bulletin of March 11, we take the following: "Rev. Martin Hebert has been in our community for several days, holding services at Pharr Chapel. His sermons have been of a high order and very much appreciated, and it is with deep regret that we learn that he will deliver his last discourse tonight."

Brother E. W. Smith, of Smithdale, Miss., states that the Advocate has been a weekly visitor to his home for over fifty years. He has no thought of parting company with it now, and has sent us the money for the renewal of his subscription and along with it a few kindly words of encouragement, for which we extend to him our thanks.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. A. F. Moore, Pleasant Hill, Miss., 5; Rev. R. Bradley, Moorhead, Miss., 2; Rev. J. C. McElroy, Mashulaville, Miss., 4; Rev. W. M. Young, Amory, Miss., 10; Rev. J. M. Morse, Brookhaven, Miss., 3.

We are publishing this week a timely appreciation of Judge J. M. Stevens, who has lately been appointed to the Supreme Bench of Mississippi by Gov. Brewer, from the [illegible] of Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Hattiesburg. Judge Stevens will succeed Judge Richard F. Reed, who also is an active Methodist layman, and who has made a most creditable record as a Supreme Court Justice.

Writing from Corinth, Miss., on March 13, among other things, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick says: "I am just on the eve of leaving again for the Texas campaign, including the Texas and Oklahoma State Conventions and the Wesley Adult Bible Class Federation at Waco." Miss Kilpatrick's work as a Sunday school specialist is highly appreciated wherever she goes.

Dr. T. C. Wier, of Starkville, Miss., who is one of the honored veterans of the North Mississippi Conference, has our thanks for a club of 17 subscribers, secured in the fine community of which he is a citizen. Dr. Wier closed his accompanying note with the following appreciated words: "May the blessing of God attend your labors as editor, and be with all your co-laborers in the Advocate office."

Rev. J. W. Faulk is having a fruitful ministry at Sibley, La. He reported 20 additions to the membership of the Church at the first quarterly conference. He is also faring well in a material way, having lately had a big "pounding" given him by the people of the Pine Grove Church. Brother Faulk brought us under obligations to him a few days since for 6 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate.

Under date of March 8, Rev. Algie Oliver writes encouragingly of his work at Eden, Miss. His prayer meeting on the night preceding was largely attended, and was the best mid-week service that he has had since his connection with his present pastorate. Brother Oliver has lately been pressing the claims of the Advocate in his rounds, and his communication brought us 5 new and 6 renewal subscriptions.

The following dispatch was sent from Terry, Miss., to the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News on March 10: "The first quarterly conference on the Terry Circuit for 1915 was held in the Methodist Church at this place last Sunday and Monday. Rev. P. D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson District, preached at both services on Sunday to large congregations, and the Lord's Supper was celebrated at the morning hour."

Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, will attend the meeting of the Annual Conference Secretaries soon to be held in Atlanta, Ga., and has consented to make the opening address in the consideration of the question, "How Can the Conference Secretary of Education Be of Service in Classifying the Institutions of His Conference?" We dare say Brother Selby will have something to say on this subject that will be well worth hearing.

We are in receipt of an attractive card containing the following announcement: "The law firm of Foster, Milling, Brian, and Saal has by mutual consent been dissolved. Messrs. Murphy J. Foster, Robert E. Milling, Irving R. Saal, and Robert C. Milling will continue to practice law at New Orleans and Franklin, La., under the firm name of Foster, Milling, Saal & Milling." The offices of this firm are 619-625 Godchaux Building, New Orleans, and in the Commercial Bank Building, at Franklin.

In a personal note to the Editor, Mr. Homer Turner, a son of Rev. A. W. Turner, who is a student in Centenary College, after expressing his appreciation of the work that is being done in the Advocate in behalf of that institution, says: "I am very much interested in the success of Centenary, as are all our students. We have a good faculty. All the boys love Dr. Wynn. With the help of the Methodists of Louisiana, we hope to have the joy of seeing some new buildings next session, as well as new pupils."

Rev. B. E. Meigs, pastor of our Rankin Street Church at Jackson, Miss., writes: "Our church is doing well, all things considered. We have one hindrance, however, to its future success, namely, our building is too small, especially for the Sunday school, which needs about twice as much room as it affords. Every official in our church takes the Advocate." Good! We wonder how many other charges in our patronizing territory can say this. We should like to have the names of all that can, to be placed on an "Honor Roll."

Rev. J. H. Ingram, of Ruleville, Miss., in a business letter bringing us 7 subscriptions to the Advocate, appends the following note: "Things are moving along well here. No better people can be found anywhere than we have in this charge. They are faithful in co-operating in the work of the Church." We are grateful to Brother Ingram for a kindly invitation to visit him and his worthy flock, and sincerely wish that the way were open for us to do so. We know from experience that a day spent as his guest becomes an unfailing source of pleasant memories.

Thirty subscriptions is the number that Rev. C. A. Northington has given us from his charge—the Corinth circuit—and along with them, a check to correspond. Our hat is off to this worthy young brother, who has for several years shown his friendship for the Advocate by what he has done for it. Referring to his work, Brother Northington says: "Everything is going well with us, but the members of my official board say that they are going to have a new preacher next year." The explanation of this is that the time limit will necessitate the assignment of their present pastor to another field.

Rev. C. F. Emery, who travels what is said to be the largest district in the Mississippi Conference, says: "Everything is moving aloug smoothly in the Newton District. * * * In every quarterly conference and from the pulpit I urge the claims of the Advocate, and I trust that the results are showing up in the office. If they are not, I am sadly disappointed." We highly appreciate Brother Emery's efforts to extend the circulation of our paper. Such work is bound to do great good. If we mistake not, this is Brother Emery's first experience in the presiding eldership; but the brethren are affirming that he wears the harness like a veteran.

A banquet complimentary to Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, was given by friends in the city at the restaurant de Louisiane on Friday evening, March 12. Among those present were: Revs. R. H. Harper, T. V. Peters, F. R. Hill, Sr., W. G. Evans, F. R. Hill, Jr., A. J. Gearheard, G. V. Romano, J. L. Sutton, and W. W. Drake. After the delightful repast had been served, the tables were cleared, and religious matters in general were discussed. Among other things suggested, was the appointment of a committee to try to bring the next General Conference to the Crescent City. The occasion was in every respect a most enjoyable one.

Rev. John L. Williams, our pastor at Greenwood, La., has ready for publication a book entitled, "The Great Teacher and His Teaching." The volume will contain about 250 pages of reading matter, and is adapted primarily to ministerial students and Sunday school teachers. Brother Williams has been a close student of New Testament Greek for a number of years, and those who are competent, after having read the manuscript, have highly commended this series of studies. It will doubtless be remembered by some of our readers that Brother Williams wrote some years ago a small volume, called "Our Brother in Red," which was issued by our Publishing House and which was well received by the public.

In sending in the appointments for his second round, Rev. W. H. Coleman, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, writes as follows: "Notwithstanding the severe business depression, the outlook is most encouraging throughout this district for a year of unprecedented progress in the glorious work of our Lord's kingdom. We organized four new stations and one new circuit in planning for the work of the present year, and we feel grateful for the degree of progress already noticeable in each of these, as well as in all the other charges in our territory. We are to begin a simultaneous revival in all our churches in Shreveport next Sunday, March 14. We have been arranging for it for several weeks and we are expecting a great awakening. Pray for us."

We take the following from a letter written to the Publisher by Rev. M. F. Johnson, of Hartford, Ark.: "We like our new work at this place. I preach at two towns—Hartford and Mansfield—which are eight miles apart, on the Rock Island Railroad. We have good churches at both places. There is good train service, but I keep my horse and buggy, for we prefer driving to making the trip by rail. We have a comfortable parsonage, with a garden, chickens, etc. My wife's parents are living with us now. How I would enjoy visiting New Orleans and seeing the old-time friends! You are fortunate in having Brother Drake as your pastor, for he is certainly one of the choice men of the Louisiana Conference. I should love to see the new church and to worship with you once more."

Several things of much interest in Methodist circles took place at Durant, Miss., last week. The old church having been demolished to open the way for the construction of a new $15,000 house of worship, on Wednesday evening, March 10, the corner-stone of the old structure which had been sealed 44 years ago was opened in the City Hall in the presence of a large congregation. This act was performed by Mr. P. H. Murphy, whose father had sealed this stone at the time of the erection of the old church. The next day at 2 o'clock p.m. Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Lexington, Miss., delivered in the City Hall an able sermon appropriate to the occasion, after which the congregation repaired to the church lot where the ground for the new building was first broken by Col. J. G. Hamilton, whose act in this respect was followed by other officials and gentlemen and some of the ladies. Among those participating in these impressive exercises was Rev. W. S. Shipman, presiding elder of the Durant District. Rev. E. N. Broyles, whose superior leadership, together with the fine work of the women of the congregation, has made the new church enterprise possible, was the general master of ceremonies. There are bright days ahead for the Methodism of Durant.

WANTED—News items concerning the work of the Church in your charge, or a brief report, say about 200 words, for our "From the Field Department." Let us give out the glad tidings of the Kingdom in our own territory.

According to the Missionary Voice, Dr. Egbert W. Smith made the following observation at the Junaluska Conference last year: "La Salle, the most popular confessor of the Middle Ages, has left it on record that of the tens of thousands who confessed to him their sins, not one ever confessed the love of money.

Mrs. ABIGAL LEWIS REAGAN, daughter of Quinna and Martha Lewis, was born on March 8, 1830, in Marion County, Miss.; and died at Holmesville, Miss., on Dec. 22, 1914, and was laid to rest in the China Grove Cemetery. "Aunt Abigal," as she was generally called, united with the Methodist Church, early in life and ever afterwards lived as a consistent, consecrated Christian. She was married to Ralph Reagan at 15 years of age, and of this union were born 12 children. One of these is now a Methodist preacher, and was a member of the last General Conference. She also had a grandson, who is a Methodist preacher, in the Montana Conference. She had one son-in-law, Rev. P. Howard, who was a member of the Mississippi Conference for 50 years. Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr., is her brother; so it will be seen her relatives are among the "salt of the earth" in Mississippi Methodism. She was a quiet, good woman; a good mother, a kind neighbor, and faithful Christian—loved by all who knew her. Her patience and joy in the midst of her blindness the latter part of her life was inspiring indeed to me. I thank God that I ever knew her. Her Pastor,

J. A. WELLS.

Death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Biffle, on Dec. 13, 1914, and took from the family circle our youngest sister, BERTIE INEZ BIFFLE, who was born March 6, 1897. She was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, South. While our hearts are saddened by the sight of her vacant chair and we long for the sound of her sweet voice again, we have learned by faith to bow to our Redeemer's will. She had been in good health, and was sick only 36 hours. We thought of the text, "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." But we feel assured that she has entered into that rest that God has prepared for his children. She has gone to meet her sister, Mrs. Lizzie Aycock, who departed from this world a few weeks before. They were brought up by Christian parents, and taught to love God. Heaven is nearer and dearer to us since they are there. We are sure they will be waiting and watching for us. Cheer up, loved ones, we shall see them again. They are not dead but sleeping, and will awake to be forever with the Lord. Let us so live that we shall meet them in Heaven.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Mrs. WEALTHY ELIZABETH LANIUS was born in Catahoula Parish, La., on August 17, 1844; and died in St. Joseph, La., on March 1, 1915. In early life she united with the Methodist Church and that union was never broken till she went to join the Church Triumphant. In late years she suffered much, being confined to her bed most of the time; but through the years of affliction her love for the Church and faith in God were never shaken. It was the writer's privilege often to visit and pray with her, and from each such visit he was made to feel that "Heaven is nearer, and Christ is dearer." And such was the experience of all who came in touch with this patient sufferer. From her invalid's couch she sent out into the world an influence for good that will live and make the world better till the end of time. To her four children and several grandchildren, she has bequeathed the priceless legacy of a gentle Christian example. A more valuable heritage than this was never bequeathed to posterity. On Tuesday, March 2, in the presence of many friends and loved ones, the worn-out body was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Natchez, Miss., the writer, assisted by Rev. H. B. Watkins, officiating. And there she will sleep in "a calm and undisturbed repose" till the last trump shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible. GEO. FOX.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please allow us space in your paper to express our heartfelt thanks to all who have sent us books for our Leagues. We have received quite a sufficient number to furnish our reading circle good reading for some time. We have now in our library several hundred volumes of the very choicest books that can be had, of which we are justly proud. Our Librarian is kept busy during the League hours.

A WORD FROM THE MEMPHIS CONFERENCE FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The attendance at The Memphis Conference Female Institute of Jackson, Tenn., has been good throughout the present session. The school opened last September with a good increase in its enrollment over the preceding session and the attendance has been unusually steady. Recent new students make the number in actual attendance at present greater than at any preceding time during the session. Our school trip to Mammoth Cave, scheduled for April 1 and 2, bids fair to add considerable inspiration to the session's work. We hope to enjoy the trip, and to be pointed thereby to the great and wise One who gave us our world with all its wonders.

H. G. HAWKINS.

BOILS NEEDN'T BOTHER YOU.
Gray's Ointment puts an end to them right away. This remarkable ointment was first prepared in 1820 by a North Carolina physician. For nearly a century the American people have found it the most effective preparation for all eruptions and abrasions of the skin, burns, cuts, wounds, bruises, boils, carbuncles, ulcers, sores, etc. It speedily heals the skin trouble, and prevents the development of blood poisoning, which not infrequently rises from a neglected sore or cut. "The best remedy I ever tried for risings, and all my friends who have tried it say it beats anything they ever used," writes Miss E. M. Manley, Auburndale, Fla. THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF
Girls! Try It! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.
If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.
Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET
Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.
Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet. Use "TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

METHODISM IN COLUMBIA AND MARION COUNTY.

By H. P. Lewis, Sr.

I have been requested to write what I know about early Methodism in and around Columbia, Miss.

My father and most of his five brothers came to this country from North Carolina about 95 years ago, and settled on Pearl River, near Columbia, where they lived for many years.

About 1822, during a great revival in Marion County, my father was wonderfully converted, joined the Methodist Church, and in a short while all his brothers and his only sister also united with it. One of my father's brothers, Uncle Martin, settled just north of Columbia, a short distance from the old "Stovall Springs," at that time, and for some time previous, a noted watering place. My uncle and most of his large family were members of the Church, I suppose, in Columbia.

About 70 years ago Rev. Henry T. Jones, uncle of our Rev. W. B. Jones, was the preacher in charge in Columbia. Some years previous to that, about 1823, 1824, and afterwards, James Applewhite, Isaac M. Applewhite, J. I. E. Bird, Theophilus Moody, and others were noted preachers in Marion County. Later, Allen Castles, John Bowman, A. B. Nicholson, John Boice, and others preached in Columbia. In 1859 I was pastor there. N. B. Young, was my successor. He was followed by J. A. Vance in 1861, James C. Taylor in '62, D. Merchant in '63, W. W. Hurst in '65, H. C. Buck in '66, E. W. Simmons in '68-9, N. B. Young in '70, and H. T. Jones in '71. In all these years Methodism had an organization in Columbia. Some of the early preachers had, at times, rather rough sailing in Marion County.

Preachers were not the only ones who had experiences that made impressions in those days. A Dutch peddler spent the night with one, William Reagan, near Columbia. Next morning he asked Mr. Reagan what he owed him. "One dollar," said Mr. Reagan. "You does take it in goots," said the Dutchman. "No, I don't take it in goots, I take it in money." "We don't pay in money, we pay in goots," said the man. Mr. Reagan went for his stick, which was near by. The man begged Mrs. Reagan to keep her husband from hitting him, paid the dollar, gathered his pack and made for the door. Mr. Reagan gave him a kick which helped him down the steps. That peddler never called on Mr. Reagan afterwards. On another occasion a peddler was riding horseback near Columbia with his pack under him. He saw something cross the road ahead of him. He asked a man what it was. "A cat," said the man; "people catch them, tame them and they make nice pets." "Me have one pet," said the Dutchman. He dismounted, caught the cat, mounted his horse again and rode on, bragging on his pet. The thing did all he could, in his way, to convince his captor that he did not want to be made a pet. The Dutchman did not go far before he decided he did not want that pet, so he threw it down, and rode on. After a little while he said, "Me mell dat ting a mile."

Methodism, in Columbia, never amounted to much until some enterprising school men moved there, some 35 or 40 years ago, built a fine schoolhouse and a nice Methodist Church. Since then, Methodism has flourished in Columbia. Education and Methodism run well together. As a rule, Methodism does not flourish where superstition and ignorance abound.

Columbia entertained our last Conference finely. Brother Sharbrough makes a splendid Conference host. We were charmed with Bishop Denny.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To cure Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gall stones, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,

Box 17M, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Rheumatism

is a disease of the blood. Medical authorities have so proclaimed it for years. It must therefore be treated through the blood. CAR-DA-RUMA is a scientific preparation of a well known Southern physician who used it in his private practice many years with marked success. It contains nothing of an injurious character. It eradicates the disease through nature's channels. Its ingredients are expensive, but in order to introduce it in your locality we will on receipt of fifty cents send you, post-paid, a regular two-dollar size bottle with a coupon entitling you to a rebate of fifty cents on your subsequent purchase in case you require more than one bottle. CAR-DA-RUMA is not a cure-all but a prescription for Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Sciatica, and Lumbago. It is positive in its effects and has many remarkable cures to its credit. Our treatise on Gout and Rheumatic Ailments sent free upon request.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney.

Children's Day will be more generally observed this year and the offering is due to be larger than in the past, because it is known that all tne money goes directly into our Sunday school work.

Hernando expects to report three Wesley Bible Classes, registered at beadquarters and doing full work in a very sbort time. One organized class backed up by enough prayer can start a revival of vital godliness that the winter winds can not wither.

In our minutes we report 102 churches witbout Sunday schools. Several of this number have union schools, but let us do our best to organize a Methodist school in every one of these churches, or else our persistent neigbbors will train our children and quietly take them from us.

Durant is plucky. Tbe old church has been torn down and tbe contractors promise that the new building will be ready for occupancy within one hundred working days. Superintendent Lanfair expects his school to grow big enough to fill every one of the rooms by the time the church is completed. I for one say, "Hurrah for Broyles and every one of his loyal supporters!"

Look out for Children's Day programs in a few days! Should you fail to receive a sufficient number, write me at once and your wants shall be supplied. Preachers and superintendents deserve a lot of credit for doing this work for the children, but some patient, loving, good woman is the one that will be crowned in "that great day." Tbat God may bless the woman who makes this day a success in her church this year, is my prayer.

OLD-TIME REMEDY MAKES PURE BLOOD

Purify your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has been and still is the people's medicine because of its reliable character and its wonderful success in the treatment of the common diseases and ailments—scrofula, catarrh, rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, that tired feeling, general debility.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been tested forty years. Get it today.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy, thick with a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

The Christian ideal is not freedom from work, but strength to do it; not freedom from temptation, but power to overcome it; not freedom from suffering, but joy in an abiding sense of the Father's love.—H. W. Watkins, D. D.

Cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

Devotion to a great cause makes a great life.—Dr. W. H. P. Faunce.

But to undertake to plan our lives without the couscious seeking of God's aid is unwise. No one has the foresight necessary to such an undertaking. All-seeing wisdom alone is equal to this task. Therefore, how mistaken is he who, in laying his plans for another year, does not join Paul in asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"—Christian Observer.

Don't be Thin --Scrawny

Have a Figure of Curves

No woman need be flat chested, thin or angular—my picture proves that. Yet for years I was a pack of bones, had absolutely no form, no bust. I couldn't help but feel that I was the laughing stock of my more fortunate friends. I was miserable, but determined that I should have what was rightfully mine—what every woman is entitled to—an attractive form, a full, perfectly proportioned bust and clear skin. Oh, the different things I tried, the nostrums I took, the time and money I wasted. But at last I found the way, and it was so simple.

Now I want to give you the benefit of my experience. You may have tried just as many unavailing methods as I did, but now success is yours. A womanly form, attractive face and the happiness of a full figure are now yours. You can't fail if you do as I did. A well proportioned figure, a beautiful bust, clear complexion, sparkling eyes and better health in general are assured you.

Yes, dear friend, I mean what I say. You can't afford to doubt and you won't. You want what I have found, what I struggled so hard for and what I now promise for you.

Write me today, enclosing a 2c stamp and I will gladly, willingly, tell you without further charge how I was able to do these things for myself. There is only one right way, and for your future good and happiness you must let me tell you about this method. Do not delay—you may lose this address. Just mail your letter to Mrs. Louise Ingram, Suite 365, 408 Adams St., Toledo, Ohio, and I will answer by return mail.

Have YOU subscribed? To what? The Council Daily. Price 25 cents. Order from Mr. George Thornburgh, care of Masonic Temple, Little Rock, Ark., AT ONCE.

Presidents.

Urge this upon every woman in your auxiliary. In this way only can your society be informed of the new plans and methods at once. Urge subscriptions at your meetings and then appoint some one to act as agent and send her around to get subscribers just as you would do for The Voice. Work for this because it will not go of itself, and it needs your support as much as you need its information.

WILL YOU PRAY?

The Council convenes in Little Rock, April 14-22. Great issues involving the extension of the kingdom will be considered there. A great responsibility rests upon these women. The issues cannot be met except in the strength of God. Shall we leave these women to bear their burdens alone, or shall we enter into their labors through the ministry of prayer?

THE WOMAN'S CONGRESS OF MISSIONS.

The Woman's Congress of Missions is to be held June 6-13, 1915, in the Exposition Auditorium at the Civic Center, Larkin and Hayes Streets, San Francisco, Calif.

This Congress, which is to present Missions in all their aspects, is being held under the joint auspices of the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Federation of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Boards in the United States.

A large committee of California women are working enthusiastically on all local arrangements and they will present two missionary pageants. There is to be an exhibit of literature, a series of Study Classes and Conferences, large inspirational gatherings, and addresses by experts in the field of women's missionary enterprise.

A WORD FROM THE HOME BASE SECRETARY.

For two months past the Home Base Secretary and her office force have worked to the utmost limit of time and ability to supply the women of forty Conferences of Southern Methodism with the literature necessary for inaugurating and conducting the work of the Missionary Society in accord with the revised Constitution and By-Laws. It has not been possible promptly and fully to meet everybody's needs, and there has been need for much patience on the part of those who were waiting for supplies.

Since the demand on the office is so increased by reason of the Council's plans, and because of the fact that all departments obtain their literature here, there are some points on which it may be necessary to secure the co-operation and full understanding of those who write to us for literature.

In the first place, auxiliary leaders should put forth their utmost efforts to secure the literature for their monthly programs through the regular channel of supplies in their Conferences, and not write to the Home Base Secretary, except as a last resort. It may be that in some emergency the proper source of supplies may not be found, and the Home Base Secretary is glad to help, for she is set for the upbuilding of every society in the Church. Leaflets for special programs will be supplied for ten cents.

Furthermore, please give the Home Base Secretary a reasonable length of time to fill your order; and this should never be less than a week. So many request "a reply by return mail," which means that somebody waited until the last moment to plan the program for the meeting; and it is often impossible for this lack of forethought to be remedied at this end of the line. There are so many miscarriages and other unforeseen delays in the mail and unavoidable interruptions in the office that any one runs a great risk of not receiving literature when orders are made on such short notice.

Please do not order Auxiliary Report Blanks, except the books for Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer (price, 25 cents), from the Home Base Secretary. (There are no books for the Recording Secretary.) The blanks for quarterly reports of all other officers than the Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer, which are obtained from the books, will be sent by the Conference officer; and if you do not receive these, write to her for them.

PLANT FOOD CROPS AND A GOOD LARGE HOME GARDEN

CUT THIS OUT AND MAIL

If you do you will always be safe, no matter how low the price of cotton or tobacco or fruit, or any other crop that you depend on for money may go. The cotton growers, the fruit growers, the vegetable growers, the tobacco growers, in fact, all of the "one crop" folks have been playing a dangerous game which the war in Europe showed up and put hundreds of thousands in trouble here in the South. Play safe in 1915 by planting food crops and a home-garden.

STOP PLAYING THE ONE CROP GAME

For it will surely break you sooner or later, no matter what the crop is. Get down to business in 1915 and play safe in the future. Have corn in the crib, meat in the smokehouse, hay and forage in barn or stack, and plenty of vegetables in the home garden.

CALOMEL DYNAMITES YOUR LIVER! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and You Don't Lose a Day's Work

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working; headache and dizziness gone; stomach will be sweet and bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and can not salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of Calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

A DESPONDENT, LAZY FEELING

Shows your need of a good tonic. Get the time-proven Wintersmith's Tonic—stimulates the appetite and builds up a run-down system. 50 years success.

"If we are in distress and the distress is relieved, we may be no better than before. If we are in distress and learn to hold true in spite of the distress, we are vastly better than before."

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS.

If your Back is aching or Bladder Bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acids of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

A Nervous Woman Finds Relief From Suffering.

Women who suffer from extreme nervousness, often endure much suffering before finding any relief. Mrs. Joseph Snyder, of Tiffin, O., had such an experience, regarding which she says:

"Six months I was bedfast with nervous prostration. I had sinking spells, a cold, clammy feeling.—could not stand the slightest noise. At times I would almost fly to pieces; stomach very weak. My husband insisted on my taking Dr. Miles' Nervine, and I began to improve before I had finished the first bottle until I was entirely cured."

MRS. JOSEPH SNYDER,
262 Hudson St., Tiffin, Ohio.

Many remedies are recommended for diseases of the nervous system that fail to produce results because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven its value in such cases so many times that it is unnecessary to make claims for it. You can prove its merits for yourself by getting a bottle of your druggist, who will return the price if you receive no benefit.

MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

THE COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

There are a few things which seem necessary to the success of a country Sunday school.

1. The Sunday school should be held every Sunday. Going to church and Sunday school is more a matter of habit with many people than is commonly supposed. Why not cultivate the habit of going to Sunday school every Sunday? When the habit is formed and it is definitely understood that there will be a session of the school every Sunday, there will always be enough children and young people present to hold the session. But people cannot be expected to ride one or two miles on an uncertainty, but the same persons will ride twice as far to church or Sunday school if they are assured their trip will not be in vain. In addition, what valid reason can be given for not having Sunday school every Sunday?

II. Be satisfied with nothing short of the best organization. The adopted system will not only have to be adapted to the country community, but to each individual school as well. But this is not hard to do. Scores of schools have done it, why not we?

1. Why not have a Cradle Roll? There are babies in the country as well as in the towns, and the mothers love them as well, sometimes seemingly better, and the same good effects always follow. The enrollment cards, enrollment certificates, special day mementoes, birth-day cards, promotion certificates, all can be given out at the session of the Sunday school or church services, or sent through the rural mails. The Home Department can be conducted in the same way with equally good results. Further, here is a good excuse for those long-deferred friendly visits so frequently promised.

2. The organized Bible class and Teacher-training classes are thoroughly practicable. In one school of which I have had knowledge, and which met every Sabbath, after the smaller children had been taught their lessons, they were permitted to play around the church building while the fathers and mothers and older persons gathered in Bible classes and Teacher-training classes. The plan worked admirably.

III. Be satisfied with nothing short of the very best equipment.

1. Every child should have his own lesson paper. If it is purposed that Bobbie study his lesson from John's paper, either Bobbie will come without a lesson, or John will quit the school. Is it worth it? What does the lesson paper cost? One hen in the barn yard laying one egg every two months, at the present price of eggs, will pay for Bobbie's lesson paper for a whole year. Shall these dire results happen for the sake of so small a sum?

2. There should be plenty of song books—all of a kind—and of "standard make." The appearance of the song books in the average rural Sunday school would be ludicrous were it not so serious. With usually less than a dozen in the whole school, it is impossible for the superintendent to take one book and give out a song by number merely. It must be selected with a view to its "universality." With our own Publishing House offering books of the highest grade for only $15 per hundred, it does seem that every school might own a good supply of song books. Again, these books should always be the note edition, never with words only. The additional cost is small, while the results are large. Watch next Sunday. If the children have not previously been reproved for taking the note editions of the song book, it will be observed that every one of them, even those who cannot read, will pick out the note editions, leaving the word edition. This is significant. The fact that a great many of the congregation do not understand music makes no difference. Ninety per cent of all persons singing, sing by position rather than from a technical knowledge of music; hence it will also be observed next Sunday that grown people will take the note editions of your song books from the children for themselves. Now since song forms so large a part of the child's life, should we not be willing to appeal to it for the sake of the child?

3. Take a collection every Sunday. Why not? The school needs the money. The child needs the training. The usual excuse, "no money in the country," has passed into a by-word. We use it without ever stopping to think whether it is true. Besides, money in a specific sense is not necessary. Some years ago a Sunday school was organized in a small community. The people were far from being wealthy. But the superintendent determined to put his school on as high a plane as possible. Among other announcements he made the first Sunday was that at each session of the school a collection would be taken for expenses. Those who had no money were to bring eggs. Before the year was out; he had not only supplied his school with every thing needful, from lesson-papers, up and down, but had supplied the little congregation which had been formed as the out-growth of the Sunday school, with a full supply of hymn books, and had money in his treasury. Some Sundays during this period his only offering was eggs. To-day a splendid church building stands just across the road from the little schoolhouse.

IV. Observe the special days, such as Children's Day, Missionary Sunday, Promotion Day, Rally Day. The observance may be far from what is desired—rather disappointing sometimes; but every festival observed adds just that much more interest and helps the school to hold the scholars.

V. And last, but not least, be sure to send the most hopeful of the officers and teachers to some Sunday school convention or institute where Sunday school leaders can impart instruction and infuse inspiration. Pay all expenses. Be sure to add the name of the pastor to this list. A hundred per cent will be the return.

TO THE PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS IN THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Brethren: Dr. Chappell writes that the Children's Day programs are now about ready. The new Discipline provides that the fourth Sunday in April, or as near thereto as practicable, shall be observed as Children's Day. It has been the policy of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board to advise that it be held as early as the third Sunday, in order to avoid conflict with the preparation for the closing of public schools. Any school in the Conference can obtain these programs free that will get the indorsement of the presiding elder to its application, and promise to send the collection on that day to the Treasurer, Mr. W. A. McKennon, Shreveport, La. Send your orders with the presiding elder's indorsement direct to Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas, and the programs will be sent and charged to the Sunday School Board.

Our Board pays for the literature of needy Sunday schools, the school in the State prison, and helps to support a Sunday school worker in Arizona. The Board would like to plan some kind of field work for next year. And all this must be done out of 50 per cent of the Children's Day funds, or 75 per cent in case we maintain a worker in the field. Let me, for the Board, urge you to begin your preparation in time to hold the exercises at least by the fourth Sunday in April.

Fraternally,
H. N. BROWN.

THE GARY PLAN FOR RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.

Mr. William Wirt, superintendent of schools at Gary, Ind., has evolved and is applying a method of school work in his schools that is attracting attention everywhere. His provision for the religious instruction of children is worthy of the attention of religious educators. According to this plan, each pupil is allowed to express his preference for religious instruction in any of the churches. Thereupon the children are sent regularly at a certain hour agreed upon to the churches of their choice for an hour's instruction during the school period. Accurate records of attendance are kept by the instructors at the various churches and reported to the schools. Absences from the period of religious instruction or excuses for absences can be secured only on presentation of cards from parents. Children not availing themselves of the opportunity for religious instruction must spend their hour in other assigned work. At present the churches are providing only one hour per week for religious instruction, but Professor Wirt is willing, if the teaching work of the churches is up to standard, to give their children an hour daily for religious education. The greatest difficulty in the way is the unpreparedness of the churches to avail themselves of this marvelous opportunity.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MARRIED.

IS YOUR BLOOD GOOD OR BAD?
Blood Germs Are Overpowered By Mighty Vegetable Remedy and Expelled from the Body.

Twenty-four hours after you start to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, poisonous matter and blood impurities begin to leave your body through the eliminative organs.

So powerfully penetrating is this temperance remedy that through the circulation of the blood it reaches every fibre, muscle and joint, dissolves the poisonous secretions and drives them out of the body.

It brings new activity to the liver, stomach and bowels in a short time, thus causing sallowness, indigestion and constipation to disappear.

It enters the tiny blood vessels of the skin, bringing with it fresh vitalized blood, and abiding faith in its wonderful cleansing power has come to thousands, when pimples, boils, carbuncles, rash, eczema, acne and other skin troubles dried up and disappeared.

Good blood means good health; good health means strong men and women, full of vigor and ambition, with minds alert and muscles ever willing. Any medicine dealer will supply you with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in either liquid or tablet form. Remember it is not a patent medicine, for its ingredients are printed on the wrapper. And it's a pure glycerine extract of roots made without alcohol.—Adv.

The most valuable book for both men and women is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A splendid 1008-page volume, with engravings and colored plates. A copy will be sent to anyone sending 3 dimes or 30 cents in stamps, to pay the cost of wrapping and mailing only, to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"The Savior the world craves is not a Savior who shall explain away, but one who shall take away the sin of the world."

"It is by dint of the homely virtues and through their patient exercise among inconspicuous scenes that saintly lives are fashioned."

"He best preaches the truth of the cross who leads another sinner to its foot. He most fully sets forth the love of Christ who loves the souls for whom he died enough to lead them to him."

GOOD IN SPOTS.

The Philadelphia North American reports Billy Sunday as having made the following ringing utterance in one of his recent sermons in the Quaker City:

"We have produced in America a type of men who are religious in the best sense of the word in their private lives, but who in their professional, commercial, social, and industrial relations, where other people are concerned, do not seem to think that their religion need necessarily enter.

"In other words, this idea of religion has produced men whose private lives are good, but whose public lives are rotten, vile, bad.

"While they are true to their marriage vows and virtuous, they are rotten in politics. We have produced men who, while they would not shoot a man with a pistol, will sit in New York City or Philadelphia and by a vote in the board of directors' meeting set in motion forces which ultimately may take a man's life out on the Pacific slope months afterward.

"While they wouldn't hand you a dose of poison, they'll sell you adulterated goods that kill people a thousand miles away. If your religion doesn't make you sell straight goods, then it doesn't amount to three whoops this side of perdition in the pews, either.

"Men who would not pick the pockets of one man with the fingers of their hand will, without hesitation, pick the pockets of 80,000,000 people with the fingers of their monopoly or commercial advantage.

"Men in whose hands the virtue of your wife or daughter would be as safe as in your own will every year drive hundreds of cases of virtue over the line into vice by the pressure of the starvation wages they pay.

"Men who will gladly draw their check for $10,000 and give it to a children's hospital, see nothing ridiculous in the fact that the $10,000 for the children's hospital came out of $200,000 made from a system of child-labor which crushes and kills and maims more children in one year than the hospital will heal in twenty."

In spite of his somewhat too lurid language, the distinguished evangelist here sets forth impressively some truths which cannot be too strongly emphasized. It is undoubtedly the case that there are men whose private lives are comparatively clean, who in politics seem to be quite unscrupulous. We have sometimes seen this fact so outstanding that it well-nigh staggered us. Sam Jones was wont to tell of a mayor of a city who was given to doing things officially, of which he said he disapproved as a private citizen. With a twinkle in his eye, the Georgia revivalist would then say: "Some of these days the Devil will get the mayor, and the private citizen will be in a bad fix." That some persons have a queer kind of business conscience is also true. And Mr. Sunday is clearly right in holding that it is better for large employers of labor to be considerate of those who work for them than to be philanthropic toward them after their health and lives have been wrecked. Or, as Ruskin has expressed it, it is nobler to be just to our fellow-men than to be charitable toward them.

This is one reason why we dislike to see our church papers become boosters of multimillionaires who have made their fortunes by questionable methods, and paraders of their ostentatious philanthropy. With God, the value has departed from all giving, no matter how large, when it is done "that it may be seen of men." The patronage and influence of men and women of colossal wealth is one of the perils of the Church in this most opulent age of the world's history. Jesus never truckled to the rich and great of earth, and neither should his Church, which represents him in the world, do so.

EASTER SUNDAY AND OUR ORPHANAGES.

Both of our Orphanages—the one at Ruston and the one at Jackson—are asking that collections be taken in their interest on Easter Sunday, April 4. In the case of the first-named institution, the Louisiana Annual Conference at its recent session by formal resolution ordered that this be done, and every pastor and Sunday school superintendent in the State is expected to co-operate in carrying out this plan. As Brother Vaughan, the Manager, has stated in the Advocate, an assessment is now no longer imposed for the maintenance of the Home at Ruston, and unless Easter Sunday and "Work Day" are made to count for much it is difficult to see how the funds are to be secured to keep it going. This noble charity must now depend upon the voluntary offerings of the people of Louisiana, and our pastors should see that it is impressively brought to the attention of their congregations. This is a cause which we cannot afford to neglect. Having taken these needy and dependent children into its care, the Church must make adequate provision for their support. Not to do so would be to fail in the discharge of a duty than which there is none higher or more sacred.

The Mississippi Orphanage is also in urgent need of funds, and we are carrying on another page an appeal from the local Trustees, which we trust will be read from every pulpit in that State, that our people may be informed as to the situation and given an opportunity to furnish the money and supplies necessary to meet its imperative requirements. The times are stringent, but this is a call which must be met, even if it costs sacrifice to do so.

Brothers Vaughan and Williams are merely our agents. The obligation to care for the children in the Homes under their direction is as much ours as it is theirs. We cannot evade this responsibility. Let us, therefore, meet it faithfully and fully. Let every Methodist Church and Sabbath school in Louisiana and Mississippi take a collection for this cause on Sunday, April 4, and forward it the next day. How better could we honor our risen and reigning Lord and attest our devotion to him?

THE WORK OF THE FLYING SQUADRON.

The work of the Prohibition Flying Squadron in New Orleans last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday attracted considerable attention and was, in our judgment, productive of much good. The speakers came in three groups: on Friday Dr. Chas. M. Sheldon of Topeka, Kansas, and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, the well-known Christian Endeavor leader, spoke in the First Methodist Church at 2:30 and 7:30 p.m.; on Saturday at the same hours the speakers were Dr. Ira Landrith, of Nashville, Tenn., and Ex-Senator W. R. Webb, of Bell Buckle, Tenn.; and on Sunday the Squadron was represented by Ex-Governor Frank J. Hanly of Indiana, Hon. O. W. Stewart of Illinois, and Hon. John B. Lewis of Massachusetts. As soon as one of these groups had finished its work, it immediately left to meet engagements in the carefully wrought-out schedule of appointments made months in advance. The purpose of this movement is to hold effective prohibition meetings covering a period of three days in the capital of every State, in every large educational center, and in every important city in the United States. The campaign has been under way since the early part of last autumn and is expected to continue for several months yet. It has no direct connection with the Anti-Saloon League, though it is working for the same purpose as that organization. It was planned and is being led by Ex-Governor Hanly, who is the animating spirit of the movement.

All of the speakers connected with the Squadron that were heard in New Orleans delivered helpful and informing messages, but Governor Hanly made by far the most profound impression. He is a man of striking personality, of virile intellect, of scholastic attainments, and is a forceful and eloquent orator. Better still, he seems to be an earnest Christian, with a strong faith in God and fully consecrated to his service. We do not remember ever to have heard a layman speak whose utterances were more deeply spiritual, or more in accord with the teachings of the Master. His address at the First Methodist Church last Sunday evening was thrilling, convincing, and inspiring. Some whose opinions are entitled to weight pronounced it the most effective prohibition speech to which they had ever listened.

Governor Hanly is a distinguished layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the fraternal messengers from that denomination to our General Conference at Asheville in 1910, and is the author of the brilliant little volume, "My Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," which is an eloquent and unanswerable argument to show that Christ was Divine. The temperance cause has in him a supporter and advocate whose influence in its behalf is certain to be strongly felt in the coming years, if his health and strength continue. He believes with his whole heart in national prohibition and confidently predicts that it will be secured in the future not remote.

TRIFLES.

Annette Morrison Stubbs.

Only a thought from a noble soul,
But it fell on fertile ground;
And its influence deepened and widened and grew,
Till it spread the world around.

Only a self-denying act,
But it touched a hardened life;
And the world is the richer because that one
Has ceased from the noise of strife.

Only the little things of earth
May be in our power to do;
But the blessing of these, if truly done,
Shall not fail for me or for you.

HEEDED CHRIST'S CALL.

The impact of the late Earl of Shaftesbury on his day was so mighty that 40,000 mourners, many of them in tears, followed his body to its final resting place. This great earl had all that wealth, position and culture could give. Possessing unique literary tastes, he was tempted to devote his energies to the realm of letters. In this the gifted wife at his side would have found noblest satisfaction. The great man viewed the gorgeous panorama that lay in imperial vision at his feet. He saw and felt the charm and fascination of association with the master intellects of the British Empire. On the other hand, he saw the condition of the masses, the hard-ground working classes, kept down by the pressure of British law. After niature thought he decided to identify himself with these lowly ones. Consecrating all his majestic powers to this end, he went to work to secure parliamentary enactments for the betterment of their condition. For forty long years he fought battles in and out of Parliament in behalf of these classes, rejoicing that he could be the apostle of hope and help to the sons of toil and the sons of crime.

The motive of such a life, involving work of the most exacting type, self-repression, and misrepresentation, was born out of devotion to a modest Jew who was cradled in a manger at Bethlehem, but who "from his cross of shame now rules the world." What can infidelity or agnosticism say against such a life, a life that realized that—

"The drying up a single tear has more
Of honest fame than shedding seas of gore?"

—The Presbyterian.

DR. MUNHALL'S TESTIMONY.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, the noted evangelist, in concluding an article in the last number of "The Fundamentals," received a few days since, says:

"In going among the churches as I do, I find three things increasingly true. First, ministers and people in large numbers are awakening to the fact that the so-called "new theology" and up-to-date methods are utterly barren of spiritual results. Prof. A. H. Sayce once said, 'Higher criticism saves no souls.' Second, because of this indisputable fact, very many are turning again to the doctrines of the historic faith, for it is seen that they are still workable and produce results as in former times. Third, great numbers of ministers are seeing that their ministry is a failure unless it results in the salvation of souls. They really feel as did the late Henry Ward Beecher. While conducting an evangelistic campaign in Brooklyn tabernacle one day, I met Mr. Beecher. As he held my right hand in both of his, he said: 'I hear you are having a great blessing in your meetings with Dr. Talmage. I very much wish we could have you for a campaign in Plymouth Church.' He trembled as he held my hand. He then said, 'But I fear my people would not stand for it.' Then, after hesitating for a few minutes, he added, 'I would like to see an old-time Holy Ghost revival in Plymouth Church before I go hence.' He then broke down and cried as if his heart would break. Three weeks later, to a day, his body was laid in the grave.

"Life and opportunity are ours. Men are dying, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, lost in the ruin of sin. Redemption is an accomulished fact, and salvation is possible for all. We have been chosen to tell out the message of life and hope; and are assured of glorious success if faithful; if unfaithful we had better never been born."—Alabama Christian Advocate.

COME IN, REST AND PRAY.

It is a benediction to the city's life to see on the crowded thoroughfare of the business streets now and then a church with the invitation over its door, "This church open daily—come in for meditation, rest and prayer." It reminds one of the Master's invitation, "Come ye yourselves apart, and rest awhile." The rector of Grace Protestant Episcopal Church, Broadway and Thirteenth Street, New York, recently received an anonymous appreciation of its "open door" in the following lines. They are printed here because they apply to many a church, and to encourage those to which they do not apply, to make their ministry more manifest:

O House of God, which stands so calm and fair
Amidst the turmoil, and the noise and strife,
Within thy doors are hope, and peace, and rest;
Without, the struggle, and the pain called life.

How wonderful is it to turn aside,
And kneel before thine altar, lost in prayer,
Yet know that just outside lic tragedy
And strangely mingled laughter and despair.

Well art thou named, thou stately Church of Grace,
So calmly standing 'midst life's wild alarms;
May we, like thee, wait, trusting, in our place,
May we be folded close in God's own arms!

STRENGTHEN OUR INTERIOR DEFENSES.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

Recently there was issued from Washington, D. C., the following dispatch:

> "Minister Beinsch, at Pekin, reported to-day that a new steamship line between China, American Gulf ports and New York is about to be started by Chinese finauciers. The line will be operated by a joint stock company of Chinese and American capitalists, and dividends will be guaranteed by the Chinese government in return for advantageous freight rates on certain products."

This significant press dispatch has seemed to escape the notice of most people during this time of war and rumors of wars, but it means more, probably, to our country commercially than all the matters in Europe which have engaged our attention. It is especially significant in connection with the rapid development in material things of the South-Atlantic and Gulf States. The turning of the Gulf Stream in the Atlantic Ocean would not more signally affect the forces of nature than will this turning of the current of Oriental traffic affect commercial and industrial conditions in the Southwest. In China there are above four-hundred-millions of people who need our products, especially our cotton, and they have products which our people want. This trade with the Orient has been diverted from the South hitherto by the freight rates which were required by railway lines. On water lines there are no tracks to be kept in repair, and, hence, water rates will be far cheaper. Moreover, the element of time must be taken into account. These shipments from China will land at Southern ports nearly as quickly as Chinese importations have heretofore reached the points on the Pacific coast; and, therefore, they will more speedily reach their final destination.

All this means an accelerated movement of industrial development and material prosperity in our section. It also means a larger volume of immigration to the South than we have ever known before. It may be possible that the Chinese problem will become as acute in our Gulf ports and the interior regions back of them as it now is in California.

Moreover, when the war in Europe has ended, vast multitudes of people from European countries will fly to our shores. The burdens of taxation, which must follow the war inevitably, will be too heavy for them to bear. Want of capital will incline them to flee from the habitations in which, herctofore, they have lived and labored. Their eyes will be directed to the South, as the European emigrants of a generation ago looked to the West. "Where the carcass is, there will the eagles gather." And the South will be the richest commercial carcass in America. Hence multitudes from both Asia and Europe will come to live among us.

Lands will advance in price and larger crops of foodstuffs will be produced than ever before. The Europeans and the Asiatics will not give much attention to the growing of cotton—at least not until they have been in the South for some years. They will give their attention at first mostly to the growing of grain, vegetables, poultry, fruits, and live-stock.

The prospect of such a future development will doubtless be very pleasing to many of our people. The hope of gains of a material sort will command their enthusiastic interest. But our people should be warned beforehand that all these things will bring moral perils as well as material prosperity. Paganism will burst in upon us from the Orient, and a Continental type of religion will come upon us from Europe. Hereby a great strain will be brought to bear upon our social and religious institutions.

For example, men will incline to relax the law of the Sabbath which the people of the South have been accustomed to respect more scrupulously for many years past than have the people of other sections of our country. Sabbathless people coming among us, impelled by the desire to secure earthly goods, will be inclined to demand the prevalence, in our section, of the "Continental Sabbath." Many of our people will be quite ready, for the sake of gain to accede to this demand. But we cannot afford to exchange the Christian Sabbath for any amount or any kind of material prosperity. The want of such an institution as the Sabbath is one of the most grievous curses of pagan lands, and one of the sorest needs of European nations. We know what comes from the lives of men dwelling in Sabbathless countries, and we cannot afford to invite these evil consequences to our own shores. Wherefore, before this tide of immigration has become too strong to resist, we must strengthen the defenses of the Sabbath day. The man who does not see this necessity is stupid indeed, and he who sees it and does not care for it thereby evinces his utter lack of both piety and patriotism. Whatever men may think about it the institution of the Sabbath, the life of a pure Christianity and the observance of the holy day are inseparably bound up together. If the Sabbath perish, religion will perish with it; and, hence this Sabbath question goes to the very roots of our civilization.

But the question of the Sabbath is only one of many moral and religious issues which we must prepare to meet. We want a vigorous, brotherly, and zealous Christian life to meet the millions of emigrants who are certainly coming to our shores, on their arrival in our section. Met by such a loving and fervent Christianity they will know that they have come to a new world, indeed. And it is to a new world that they need to come in order to find a new, nobler, and happier life than they have ever known in the lands from which they will come. On the other hand, if they are met with a low, luke-warm, and worldly type of Christianity, they will be deprived of one of the greatest blesings which they ought to find in America, and they will become curses both to themselves and to us.

We should also give them a higher type of education than they have known. It should be a pronouncedly Christian education. They have had enough of mere educational secularism; and the result has not been good for them or the world.

The Chinese have had the philosophy of Confucius and if we are to give them the arid systems of modern materialism, such as Herbert Spencer and men of his type have propounded, their case will be no better in America than it has been in China. They should meet here in our colleges and universities more elevated systems of thought. Our institutions of learning should breath an atmosphere of Christian faith and exhale a sanctifying influence of Christian life.

The immigrants coming from Europe have been cursed by rationalism and ritualism in the lands they will be leaving soon. They should find something better in our institutions when they come among us. They should be met by a Christianity which is neither paralyzed by skepticism nor stupefied by superstition.

The world has tried both rationalism and ritualism, and both systems have utterly failed to supply an edequate source of moral life. At best, ritualism is a local thing, and rationalism is a transient mode. Neither is able to bring the highest blessings to the human mind and heart. But evangelical Christianity, being neither local nor transient, is effective for the highest good in all lands and at all times. It is Christianity of this sort which has prevailed heretofore in the South, and it is of infinite importance that it should continue to prevail among us with even greater power than ever.

Let us get ready for the multitudes who will be coming among us. Let us prepare the way of the Lord before their approach, and make straight paths of righteousness and peace for their stumbling and tired feet. They will be seeking refuge among us, and we ought to furnish them something more than a refuge from political and social ills. We ought to prepare for them a solace for their souls as well as a retreat for their bodies. But we cannot do this if we surrender our best things and accept in the place of them the worst things which these immigrant people may bring with them. We cannot do them real and enduring good unless we ourselves are good.

Before their coming we need a great revival of religion that shall fit us for rendering to them the most Christian service and the most spiritual ministries. Both for their welfare and ours we must proceed to strengthen the interior defenses of our civilization without delay.

MOVEMENT INAUGURATED TO WORK OUT CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMS FOR SALOON FIGHTERS.

To prevent a reaction when the saloon shall have been abolished, and to carry out a more constructive program in the fight on the saloon than has yet been attempted, a new movement, national in character, has just been launched which has the endorsement of labor leaders, United States senators and congressmen, social workers and men of national reputation in religious work.

The movement is being directed by Charles Stelzle, who was formerly in charge of the Social Service Department of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. The program outlined by Mr. Stelzle includes the organization of democratically administered social centers in which the people will help govern the affairs of the organization, instead of having them controlled from above; the establishment of temporary labor exchanges to find work for those losing their jobs through prohibition legislation; and, the exhaustive study of the liquor problem from the economic standpoint. Mr. Stelzle has already made a preliminary study of the latter subject.

Two specialists have been at work for nearly a year making studies of how workingmen spend their spare time, and of how many men will be thrown out of work if the liquor industry should be destroyed. It has been asserted by the saloon interests that the abolition of the liquor traffic will create a labor panic. Many workingmen are, therefore, voting for the saloon, not because they themselves patronize it, but because they sincerely believe that they will lose their employment should the saloon be legislated out of existence. The study already made, proves the fallacy of this statement, although there is no doubt that an economic adjustment will be necessary when the saloon is wiped out. It is to meet this situation fairly and honestly that the new movement has, in part, been inaugurated.

Mr. Stelzle carried his investigation into European countries, studying social centers in the leading cities abroad, and interviewing the most prominent social workers and labor leaders with reference to various aspects of the liquor question.

He has secured the names of over one hundred labor leaders of national reputation, who have endorsed the proposition that a "Labor Officials' Temperance Fellowship" be established in this country, similar to the one already organized by British labor leaders. At the Toronto Convention of the American Federation of Labor a temperance mass meeting of over 4000 workers was organized by Mr. Stelzle and held in Massey Hall. This was said to be the greatest labor temperance mass meeting ever held in America.

In an announcement containing the program of the new movement, the statement is made that "if the fight on the saloon is to be permanently successful, there must be a constructive program which will help meet the workingman's social need. If the saloons are closed, something else must be opened. While chief emphasis must be placed upon building up the home, a clearly-defined, well-articulated program for social centers should be advocated. The character of such enterprises will greatly vary, but in general they may consist of labor temples, school buildings, municipal centers, grange buildings, public libraries, town-halls, churches, or specially erected social centers adapted to the peculiar local needs of the people. It is proposed to furnish the best personal service to committees desiring to establish such centers."

Headquarters have been established in the Fifth Avenue Building, New York.

HELP THE ORPHANS!

Easter Offering for the Methodist Orphanage, at Jackson, Miss.

In times of financial depression, such as that now prevailing throughout our section, the benevolent institutions supported by the voluntary contributions of our people are likely to suffer greatly. We become so intent upon the struggle to meet the pressing demands of our own families, or to fortify against threatened losses in our business, that we forget the needs of the great Christian benevolences, that under ordinary circumstances share with our immediate families the fruits of our daily toil.

To the institutions involved, this condition sometimes becomes disastrous, and always is more serious than we are apt to think. For while the diminished amount of our own moderate contributions may seem to be a small matter, the loss in the aggregate assumes large proportions. A drought is serious not because it stops the flow of a single fountain; but because the same conditions apply to all the springs of the land, and the waters of even the mightiest rivers run low.

This fact reinforces the appeal of our orphanages and hospitals at such a time, and gives urgency to the plea that those who have not given should share their means with the dependent ones, and that those who have been accustomed to give should put forth increasing effort that the springs of their generous giving may fail not.

Such considerations justify the appeal to our friends for special generosity in their support of the Methodist Orphanage in Jackson—an institution that Christian liberality has brought into being, and that is dependent upon the voluntary contributions of our people for its support. It is the cry of 215 dependent children for food and clothing and the other necessities of life.

It is suggested, and earnestly requested, that our people throughout the State make a special effort on the approaching Easter Sunday to contribute, and secure from others, a liberal offering for this institution. Let us make the gladness of the Easter time more joyous still by following the example of Him who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE SALOON.

By Homer Turner.

The saloon breeds vice, shame, and sin—
The hang-out of all crime.
The saloon kills man—old, young, brave;
Its black hand leads but to the grave.
How many battles shall it win?
Come, it is time
To fight this demon; time to save
Your boys and mine from Satan's snare,
And trust them to our Father's care.

Do you sit idly by, my friend,
And see him onward fly;
Hear him shriek, and with grimy claws,
Snatch your boys—beyond reach of laws?
Pray stop, and a helping hand lend,
Or else they die—
Gasping and bleeding in his claws;
Those sons of yours—their mothers joys.
For God's sake FIGHT to save our boys!

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION

Rev. J. M. Henry, D.D., Presiden

Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Sec

Rev. C. A. Battle, Treas., Baton Rouge, La

(This Department is conducted by Rev. W. W. Drake, Conference Secretary of Education, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Publicity Commissioner.)

Dr. Anderson to be in Louisiana.

Dr. Stonewall Anderson, General Secretary of Education of our Church, has accepted an invitation from Dr. Wynn to preach the commencement sermon at Centenary on Sunday, June 6. Dr. Anderson has also promised to spend some time in Louisiana in co-operation with the Conference Board of Education during the spring. These visits of this capable leader of the educational interests of our Church may be made to give effective help to our campaign for our own institutions.

A Special Campaign Edition.

By the courtesy of Dr. Meek, the publicity department of the Board of Education will be in charge of a special edition of the Advocate early in April in the interest of our Educational Campaign. A number of excellent articles have already been promised, and the edition will set squarely before the Methodists of Louisiana the educational situation, with special reference to the pressing needs of Centenary and practical and feasible plans for its establishment upon a firm and permanent foundation. We would like to see the influence of this edition widened so as to reach as many of our people as possible. In order to do this, arrangements have been made with the publisher to send out extra copies at a very low rate for distribution. Any preacher can obtain these copies at a little over two cents a copy and it is worth while to spend a few cents to get the matter of this edition into the hands of those who do not take the Advocate. These papers will be sent out in any number for two cents a copy, plus five cents for the bundle, for any number less than one hundred. For one hundred or more, add ten cents instead of five. Thus ten copies would cost twenty-five cents, twenty-five copies fifty-five cents, fifty copies $1.05, etc. What pastor or presiding elder will hesitate at these figures to invest a few cents to get the campaign laid before his people? We ought in this way to circulate two thousand copies in our Conference. Let the orders for these extra copies be sent in as early as possible.

Wanted! A Mailing List.

The action adopted by the Louisiana Conference in reference to the Centenary campaign includes the following very definite paragraph: "The preachers are further requested to send in a list of all adult members to the President of Centenary College by March 1 so that he may send out literature explaining the situation and needs." The time for sending in these lists has already expired, and so far only about a half dozen pastors have sent the lists in. Dr. Wynn has the matter containing information and appeal nearly ready to be sent, but so far lacks anything like a complete mailing list. Let these lists be sent in at once, so that our people throughout the State may all see the situation together and get ready for a truly great forward movement.

How to Hinder.

The Methodists of Louisiana have undertaken a great and inspiring task in the effort to equip and endow Centenary College and place it upon such a basis that it can do effectively the work of Christian Education for our boys. Fortunately the Conference is united in this great and worthy purpose. The differences of the past have been laid aside, it is to be hoped forever. No voice is heard to speak out openly against what, to the great majority, seems a necessary and pressing work: that of providing adequately for a greater future for our institution which has had such a glorious past. It is well to face at this time the fact that a hearty, united and enthusiastic effort, "A LONG PULL, A STRONG PULL AND A PULL ALL TOGETHER," is the only way to success against the difficulties that we must meet. To hinder the success of this movement, active opposition is not needful; it is only necessary that there should be a good deal of indifference and a few discouraging voices. If the prosecution of the plan, unanimously adopted by the Conference, meets anywhere with the response from the pastors or other influential leaders, "It can not be done," "Look how past efforts have resulted;" or if such leaders speak slightingly of the work being done by the college, the present effort, which in any case has many obstacles to meet, will be seriously hindered if not defeated. To be indifferent or to sound a pessimistic note at this time would be a betrayal of one of the vital interests of Louisiana Methodism, and a serious injustice to the brave men whom we have entrusted with the responsibility of caring for our educational work. It is a good time now to paraphrase Lord Nelson's order and say emphatically, "LOUISIANA METHODISM EXPECTS EVERY MAN TO DO HIS DUTY."

March 19, 1915. C. A. BATTLE, Treasurer.

A study of the above report shows several facts. In the first place, the reports have so far come in rather slowly. Up to this time only sixteen charges have reported and only two of them, First Church, New Orleans, and McDonoghville, have reported in full. These are the honor charges so far. Felicity is the only charge that has yet reported anything on the regular assessment in response to the request on behalf of Mansfield. The reports on the Special by districts show that the charges reporting have been from the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Districts except three, Many in the Shreveport district, and Bienville and Ringgold in the Ruston district. Some of those already reported will have supplemental reports later. Let the matter be pushed and reports sent in rapidly during the next two weeks; the call is important. Let those who can, also report on the regular assessment, as previously requested.

"It Can Be Done."

The following verse has been going the rounds recently, and is good to repeat in connection with our campaign:

"There are thousands to tell you it can not be done;
There are thousands to prophesy failure;
There are thousands to point out to you, one by one,
The dangers that wait to assail you.
But just buckle in with a bit of a grin,
Then take off your coat and go to it.
Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing
That can not be done—and you'll do it."

THE NEGLECTED RICH.

(From the News-Scimetar, Memphis, Tenn.)

That the people of the well-to-do and the rich classes are in need of attention from pastors of all denominations, and that they are, as a class, a neglected factor in religious work, is the declaration of Bishop W. B. Murrah. He is urging all Memphis clergymen to devote more time and attention to the rich.

"It is a well known fact that organizations of both religious and civil bodies are devoted almost entirely to the uplift of the poor, the criminals and the outcasts," said Bishop Murrah. "What the Church to-day needs most is organizations devoted to the care of the rich and the well-to-do.

"This is a class of society that has been shown the least consideration as a class, and is perhaps now even more in need of attention than any other class in the world. Given an equal amount of attention on the part of the Church, this class of people would become the strongest working power in the world, and anything that was needed could be accomplished through them.

"With its aid the criminal would be banished, at least to a great extent; the poor would be afforded better conditions; labor would be bettered and brought into a closer and better understanding with capital, and the home and social relations would be brought to a higher standard.

"The power of the rich as a factor in Church circles has never been quite fully estimated or realized. The rich as a class and individually need something to do. The solution for this is interest in Church work. Given a working basis in this field of endeavor, their accomplishments would be well-nigh endless.

"It is all well and good to care for the down-and-outs and the criminals—and I think there is no work more commendable—but my observation is that the pastor of to-day, who is alive to the issues of the hour, will devote more time and attention to the great and powerful but sadly neglected rich."

Christian faith is a grand cathedral, with divinely pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory, nor can you possibly imagine any. Nothing is visible but the merest outline of dusky shapes. Standing within, all is clear and defined; every ray of light reveals an army of unspeakable splendors.—John Ruskin.

IS IT SCHOLARSHIP OR UNBELIEF?

Various forms of belief contrary to the orthodox standards of the Church have been put forth in these modern times in the name of scholarship. To call one a traditionalist has been to brand him as out of date, while to portray some new (?) theory that contravenes the generally accepted view has thrown around one the glamor of scholarship. If one dares to disagree with such theories be is pitied as one who simply does not know the new truth which these modern investigators have brought to the light. It seems never to occur to these advanced (?) thinkers that a clear-cut thinker with trained powers of mind may dare to disagree with these modern views after he thoroughly understands them.

This is no new device of Satan. Paul had to meet it in his day, and there has scarcely been a generation since that has not been more or less pestered with it. The hero of Athens, scholar as he was, trained his guns upon the "wisdom of the world;" and found that it was inimical to the simplicity of the gospel which he preached. The Greeks were conceded to be the wisest people of their day, in this worldly use of the term, but Paul said to them: "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom." And after he had come to know them better he wrote in his second epistle: "Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of the conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world." He does not hesitate to say that "the world by wisdom knew not God." He further affirms that "the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God." He cautioned the Colossians: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit." That this is no appeal against man's using his mental powers, or developing them to the highest efficiency, goes without saying. The whole spirit and movement of the Christian religion has been to banish ignorance and to quicken and train the mental faculties. This truth is seen in the individual who embraces Christ; it is seen in the community and in the nation where the Christian religion has made its influence most strongly felt.

Yet there is a truth in connection with these Scriptures that commands us to pause. What is the truth at which Paul is driving, the truth that has made itself manifest in connection with some of the highest intellectualities of every generation since the day of Christ? It is the simple old truth that there is such a thing as a mind alienated from God. What the apostle calls that "natural mind," or the mind of the "natural man," needs to be regenerated. It is not alone in the realm of man's moral conduct that fallen man is perverted. What we call more specially his thinking capacity is thrown in a false attitude toward the truth. This is especially true when the mind turns its attention toward the questions of life, and attempts to grip the relations of man to God and eternal things. And when a man gets false conceptions of his relations to God, this fact vitiates his conceptions of man in his relation to his fellowmen.

It is from this standpoint that the apostle exhorts the Romans to be "transformed by the renewing of their minds." In his view this was necessary for them to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." It is not surprising, therefore, that the wisdom of the world should come into conflict with Gospel truth, and it is not surprising that scholarship that roots itself in a heathen philosophy should mock at the doctrines of Scripture.

One of the most serious points of conflict here is with reference to the supernatural. The wisdom of the world has ever been disposed to dispute that there is such a thing, but the Word of God assumes it from Genesis to Revelation. The philosophy of the world attempts to account for religion upon a purely rational basis and always approaches the question from the human side. The revealed Word represents God as making the truth known to men, and the Christian religion is a revelation made to man from the divine. And the whole purpose of the gospel demands this conception of it. Man is not evolving out of the powers that are in him a life that meets and satisfies the aspirations of his spiritual nature. There is in him no self-sufficiency for these things. The gospel would not deserve the name, if it did not reach down to man a helping hand, if it did not bring to his life a power from above to deliver him from the thralldom of sin into which he has fallen. Paul was not ashamed of it because 'the gospel is the power of God"—the power of God thrown into and underneath human life to lift it into fellowship with God—"unto salvation to every one that believeth." This is the essential purpose of the gospel, and every effort of rationalism to dispute it must result in confusion.

It is this rationalism that is masquerading largely to-day in the name of scholarship. In its essential nature it is unbelief. It is a pride of intellect that has always lifted itself up against God. It is the besetting sin of academic men. It flourishes in the atmosphere of institutions of learning that divorce themselves from religion; and, while it floats a banner that is respectable in the eyes of men, it is the same old principle of unbelief that constituted the essence of the first sin and has been at the bottom of the world's woe ever since.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

GETTING IN LINE.

The Baltimore Southern Methodist says: "The Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church has taken a poll of the daily papers of this country with the following result: Of the 2160 written to, 679 responded, 366 favor national prohibition, 200 are opposed to it, 397 favor local prohibition, 176 are opposed. Ten years ago it would have been unthinkable to have considered the possibility of such a showing only a decade away."

But these are only the frame of the picture; the picture is never twice alike.—E. R. Sill.

And long to he a good girl now.
Lord, Lord, will some one show me how?
Why, men have trod the burning track
Of sin for years and then gone back;
And cannot I for sin atone,
Or did Christ die for men alone?"

The Northwestern Christian Advocate, in reply to this statement, calls attention to the fact that the M. E. There are said to be 20 organized Southern Methodist churches in Memphis, Tenn., with an aggregate membership of 8500. Of these churches, First Church, which has a down-town site, is the largest. It has 1900 members and a Sunday school enrollment of 1400. The additions for the past four years have been 300 annually, and the contributions have amounted to more than $25,000, and last year reached the sum of $30,000. The man who more than any one person has been instrumental in building up this magnificent congregation of Christian workers is Mr. J. R. Pepper, who as a useful layman has no superior in Southern Methodism.

DR. I. H. COOK—AN APPRECIATION.

Dr. Isham Henry Clayton Cook died in the early morning of January 22, 1915. In his going away the world lost a friend and servant of man, and the Methodist Church a member of untarnished reputation and an official of unswerving devotion. To a splendid family was left, in his good name, a richer legacy than can be measured by material values.

His candor made his character transparent. He formed his own judgments, and lived his convictions. We expected to find him on the right side of all moral questions. Policy never dictated his course. His father following the flag of the Confederacy, and his grandfather fighting under the flag of Great Britain, never showed sterner fiber than did Dr. Cook in meeting moral issues in social and civic life.

But his heart was tender, and his hand was always extended its largess to bestow. During the writer's pastorate of four years in Hattiesburg he crossed the trail of no physician so often as Dr. Cook's in the poverty-stricken homes. When I went to him at one time for a contribution to replace a horse which a poor man had lost, I found that he had already raised a good sum for the same purpose. He has taken the coat from his back to cover the sufferings of the needy.

To him the Bible was God's chart, showing the way through life to heaven. The Church was the God-given spiritual mother, bringing into being spiritual babes, and caring for spiritual children. He loved its services, and its services. How often have his eager face and his responsive "amens" been an inspiration to the preacher! His unctuous prayers have often led the worshipers into the very holy of holies. He served the Church many years as a steward, and was a member of the Board of Trustees of Court Street Church at the time of his death.

The paternal grandfather of Dr. Cook, Frederic Cook, came to America as a member of the Hessian troops, and for his service under the British flag in the War of the Revolution received a land-grant from King George III. After the war he settled in South Carolina where he spent the remainder of his days. Col. Joseph Cook, the father of Dr. Cook, came to Mississippi, was married to Miss Mary Ann Clayton, and settled in Jasper County where he spent the remainder of his days.

The subject of this sketch was born at Paulding, Miss., July 31, 1853. He received elementary instruction in a private school, and was a student one year at the State University. The degree of Doctor of Medicine was conferred on him in 1875 by the Louisville Medical College. He began his professional life in his native county, but moved in 1882 to Perry County, and located at Augusta. It would require the sweep of a radius of thirty miles to cover the scope of his practice while living at Augusta. The exposure and excess of labor incident to this practice probably hastened the coming of the end. In 1897 he moved to Hattiesburg where he continued to do an extensive, though less laborious, practice.

On December 20, 1877, he was married to Miss Sarah A. Stevens, daughter of Captain Benjamin and Annetta Stevens, Augusta, Miss. Of this union ten children were born, namely: Joseph Benjamin (deceased), William Felder, Evlyn Stevens (now Mrs. O. S. Lewis), Mary Clayton (now Mrs. Leo H. Martin), Emily Annette (Mrs. T. L. McWilliams), Susan Elizabeth, Isham Inman, Cora Lillian, Elise, and Henry Grady. These, with their mother, have suffered a great loss, but are rich in the legacy of so noble a life. Death had no terrors, and the beyond had no clouds, for him.

THE BOY WHO FORGETS.

I love him, the boy who forgets!
Does it seem such a queer thing to say?
Can't help it; he's one of my pets;
Delightful at work or at play.
I'd trust him with all that I own,
And know neither worries nor frets;
But the secret of this lies alone
In the things that the laddie forgets.

He always forgets to pay back
The boy who has done him an ill;
Forgets that a grudge he owes Jack,
And smiles at him pleasantly still.
He always forgets 'tis his turn
To choose what the others shall play;
Forgets about others to learn
The gossipy things that "they say."

He forgets to look sulky or cross
When things are not going his way;
Forgets some one's gain is his loss;
Forgets, in his work time, his play.
So this is why I take his part;
Why I say he is one of my pets;
I repeat it, with all of my heart:
I love him for what he forgets!

STELLA'S VICTORY.

Stella Vinton had been down town all alone for the first time in her life to make some purchases for her mother. She had walked down and was riding home. Mrs. Vinton told her that she might have five cents for herself if there was any change left; but she had been obliged to spend every cent.

She sat in the car with her fare in her hand, waiting for the conductor to come for it. He came along presently, and she held it out toward him, but he did not see it, and went on to the front of the car.

"He has forgotten me. He is not coming for my fare. I shall give it to him when I get out," she thought.

"No, I wouldn't; it is his place to come for it," the tempter suggested.

"That would be cheating. You have had your ride and ought to pay for it," whispered conscience.

"Of course; but it is not my place to make the conductor take it."

"It is everybody's business to be honest."

"Mama promised me five cents, too."

"But she would not like you to get it in this way."

"She need never know. I would not tell her."

"But you would know, and Jesus would know; and you profess to be a Christian."

"So I do; and I will be. I won't cheat."

Just then the conductor called out Baker Street, and Stella arose to leave the car. As she did so, she put the five cents in the conductor's hand.

"Thank you," he said smiling.

Stella went home and told her mother of her temptation. Mrs. Vinton opened her purse, and taking out a twenty-five-cent piece, put it in Stella's hand.

"This is for my honest little girl," she said, kissing her. Stella had double reason to be glad she had gained the victory.—Apples of Gold.

SAVED BY A THISTLE.

Billy, a bright-eyed boy, in his eagerness after flowers, had wounded his hand on the sharp, prickly thistle.

"I do wish there was no such thing in the world as a thistle," he said, in a hot temper.

But his father said calmly, "And yet the Scottish nation think so much of it that they engrave the thistle on the national arms."

"It is the last flower that I should pick out," said Billy. "I am sure they could have found a great many nicer ones, even among the weeds."

"But this thistle did them such good service once," said the father, "that they learned to esteem it very highly. One time the Danes invaded Scotland and they prepared to make an attack upon a sleeping garrison. So the Danes crept along barefooted, as still as possible, until they were almost on the spot. Just at that moment a barefooted Dane stepped on a great thistle, and the hurt made him utter a sharp, shrill cry of pain. The sound in the still night awoke the sleeping Scotch soldiers and each man sprang to arms. They fought with great bravery and the invaders were driven back with great slaughter. So, you see, this thistle saved Scotland, and ever since it has been placed on their seals and emblems as their national flower."

"Well," said Billy, "I could never suspect that so small and ugly a thing could save a nation."—Pleasant Hours.

THE WHOLE CLASS.

"It is such a rainy day I don't believe I'll go to school," said Charles B— to his mother.

"Why, my son? You are not afraid of the rain, I hope?"

"O, no!"

"I thought you loved to go to school."

"So I do, when the other boys are there; but you know that Willie and Frank are out of town Joseph is sick, and it is so very rainy the others cannot come so far."

"Then I should think that there would be all the more need of your going to encourage your teacher."

"Yes, I know it; but it is rather hard on a boy to be the whole class in school."

"Don't you have your lessons learned?"

"Yes, but to tell the truth, it gives the teacher such a chance to ask me close questions when she has me all to herself."

"Well," said Mrs. B— to Charley, after he had returned home from school, "were you the whole class to-day?"

"I was the only scholar."

"Was it as hard as you thought it would be?"

"Why, no, it wasn't. The teacher said, 'Charley, it is hardly fair for you to answer all the questions, so you may ask me every other one.' So I did, and it was very nice. Sometimes she got to asking me home questions, too, and before I knew I was talking just as easy as could be. I never had such good recitations as these all by myself."

In after years Charley looked back on that rainy day in school, when he represented the whole class, as the turning point in his life, for from it he learned the habit of perseverance under difficulties.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE CHAMPION OPTIMIST.

We award the championship diamond belt for optimism to a resident of one of the rural districts.

As the story goes, an old man was sitting on the roof of his house during a flood, watching the waters flow past, when a neighbor, who possessed a boat, rowed across to him.

"Hello, Bill," he said.

"Hello, Sam," replied the other, pleasantly.

"All your fowls washed away this mornin', Bill?"

"Yes, but the ducks can swim."

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, they said the crop would be a failure, anyhow."

"I see the river's reached above your windows."

"That's all right, Sam. Them winders needed washin'!"—Western Christian Advocate.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

Dear Brother Meek: I herein send you the round of quarterly conferences for the Baton Rouge District; likewise a few notes of progress:

J. J. Kelly leads the district, with about 50 accessions to the Church thus far. He is looking for a revival in his church in Hammond this year.

John Sholars, at Kentwood, has things well in hand, and the work begun last year is moving forward nicely.

Our work at Tangipahoa, is very promising. That is the youngest work in the district, and likewise has the youngest man in the Conference in every sense; but, though young, his youthfulness is no bar to the advancing of the Kingdom.

Mangum, on the Denham Springs charge, is bringing things to pass. If grit, determination, consecration and faith will accomplish the work, we will see great results on that charge. Mangum knows how to work the "Duplex" and he is succeeding admirably.

Every man is at his post. All are doing well, though they are handicapped somewhat by the financial pressure, but no complaints are made. The various charges of the district are inclined to advance rather than to take a backward step. Some of the charges have made a good forward stride in providing for their pastor. First Church, Baton Rouge, has advanced the salary $200 and now becomes a $2000 appointment. Battle is moving along finely. That splendid people are able to love their old pastor, and love the new one at the same time. Cudd, at Keener Memorial, is forging ahead with his work, and this congregation bids fair to become one of our leading appointments.

The finances, as a whole, are somewhat behind what they were at this time last year. This makes it hard upon the preachers. The "Centenary Special" has had the right of way throughout the district. On this round, the Advocate, will receive special attention.

Yours fraternally,

H. W. BOWMAN.

ENLARGE YOUR DAY

Thousands of people have already learned how to enlarge their days; how to increase the time they can devote to profitable recreation and pleasure without sacrificing work that must be done.

They first discovered that the quickest and most satisfactory way to go "down town" was by the telephone.

Next they applied the same principle to their "out of town" business and social trips, and found it was even more satisfactory and proportionately much cheaper.

WITNESSES WHO KNOW NEEDED.

Dr. Mark A. Matthews, of Seattle, Wash., is one of the best known and most effective pastors in the United States. He formerly wrought in Georgia and Tennessee, but went to the Northwest several years ago and has built up in Seattle what is said to be the largest Presbyterian Church in the world—a church which has between 5,000 and 6,000 members, and which is noted throughout the Nation for its many worthy activities and its large gifts to the various Christan benevolences. Dr. Matthews has been honored by being elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church and is considered one of the most aggressive and resourceful leaders in that growing denomination. He has lately been doing some preaching in New York City, and in one of his discourses made the following ringing utterance, which is so fully in accord with some of the editorials that we have published in the Advocate within the past few months that we have yielded to the temptation to let our readers see it:

"While there are no Robert Ingersolls outside of the Churches to-day throwing stones from the sidewalk, there are hundreds of Ingersolls in cap and gown, teaching in Presbyterian and other schools, and some of them preaching from Presbyterian pulpits.

"As evil-doers, as destroyers of the faith, the real Ingersoll did not compare with the cap-and-gown liberals in our institutions. Not all are Presbyterian, but far too many claim to be. The weakness of the Protestant Churches to-day is the weakness of their leaders. What sort of witnesses are they, anyhow? They witness to the fact that they think this and that about the Incarnation, the Virgin Birth, the Resurrection, the Ascension.

"The world doesn't care what these cap-and-gowns think. Witnesses must know. The Presbyterian Church has need for teachers and preachers who know, and who will make others know, not merely think. What kind of testimony can men give who think they think? Who doubt they doubt?

"Europe is at war because of a lack of real Christianity, because of too much liberal religion, too many cap-and-gown professors and preachers whose convictions are mere intellectual think-sos. Liberal religion in Europe and America has failed, but real Christianity has not. Why is Unitarianism losing five per cent a year, fifty per cent a decade, and why are bodies that are really Christian growing as never before in years?

"I have on my bookshelves scores of lives of Christ, some of them written by Presbyterians, that are intellectual, and nothing more. I never read them. I wish I hadn't bought them. They were written by the cap-and-gown seminarians, who can neither proclaim Christ as he is, nor teach others to do so. The Presbyterian Church and others have the opportunity of their existence. America is the force and the forum. All the world is the audience. The world waits on us. But we must proclaim a Christ we know, not one we think, and we must live the life of a Christian, not one that tricks itself out in liberal garments."

THE QUESTION OF BILLY SUNDAY'S COMPENSATION.

Though criticised for many things, perhaps the point at which Billy Sunday has been most severely attacked is that which relates to the financial side of his ministry. Much ado is made over the large sums that are paid him at the places where he holds meetings by those who do not like him, and the insinuation is thrown out that the "almighty dollar" is what he is after. We have never had the least sympathy with such suggestions. Like charges have been made against all the evangelists of distinction that have wrought in the Church in our day, and many ministers of eminence have been similarly arraigned in past centuries. John Wesley did not escape this accusation, and we find the Apostle Paul defending himself from it in his epistles to the Churches. To be sure, Mr. Sunday has at some places received sums of considerable size for his work, but the gifts footing them up were voluntary, and it should be remembered that he carries with him a large corps of helpers who have to be supported and paid, and that his meetings are usually quite lengthy. If the people who listen to Billy Sunday have confidence in him and wish to show their appreciation of the service which he renders by giving him more money than ministers ordinarily receive for their labors, we fail to see why he should be condemned for accepting it. It has not been charged that he lives extravagantly or applies his money improperly; and, if he should have a surplus, for our part, we are willing to trust him to put it to a wise use.

The Philadelphia North American, in a recent issue devoted a lengthy editorial to a discussion of this subject, from which we take the following:

"There are two conclusive answers to the charge that Billy Sunday is heaping up a fortune. First is the fact that there is not a thing in this world that he wants that money can buy. His tastes are simple, his home life modest: he seeks no expensive pleasures, and is devoted absolutely to the work that is undermining his health. The second fact, attested by scores of instances in every place he visits, is that his philanthropy is bounded only by the extent of his income. As a Philadelphia business man who knows him intimately remarked to us the other day, 'Billy Sunday does not save or spend the big sums he gets; he administers them.'

"It is impossible to learn from his own lips of his gifts, but the examples are numberless. In Pittsburgh he secretly paid a $4000 mortgage on the house of a faithful assistant in the revival. In Ohio a woman sent him a check for $50. One of the committee, knowing her circumstances, told the evangelist it was more than she could afford, and was rather hurt when the sum was not returned. But a week after the party had left the town there came through the committeeman's bank a check payable to the woman for $850—the amount of the mortgage on her home—and it was signed 'W. A. Sunday.'

"In Scranton he persuaded an employer to take back a defaulting book-keeper—and then, having inculcated the lessons of repentance and forgiveness, made good the $700 defalcation.

"A letter that reached Billy Sunday one day a few weeks ago got a curious answer. It was from a young woman in a little town near Camden. She wrote how she and her mother, a helpless invalid, delighted in reading about the wonderful meetings and what a sorrow it was to them, that they could not hope to be present, even once. Would he not write to them?

"The next morning he slipped away from his house in Spring Garden Street and went over to New Jersey and found the poor little home. For an hour he talked with the mother and daughter, prayed with them and read the Bible to the sufferer, and left them radiant with happiness. That night the sick woman begged her daughter to read again the chapters Mr. Sunday had read. When the book was opened there lay between the leaves a check for $100.

"This incident, related to us by a Philadelphian who heard of it from a friend of the family, is not novel. None of these things has ever been made known by Sunday himself, but he never visits a town without leaving behind him dozens of like cases, which gradually become known and which account for a large part of the 'fortune' he is charged with making.

"Putting aside all differences as to the merits of the theology he preaches, we say again that Billy Sunday will not get more in Philadelphia than he has been worth, if only his effort and sacrifice are considered. If it were possible to measure the good he has done—in popularizing religion, in invigorating church activity, in stimulating civic righteousness, in awakening the spirit of charity and brotherhood, in making home brighter and lives better—it would seem, we think, that the offering is as sound an investment as a community ever made."

BISHOP WATERHOUSE COMES EAST.

Bishop Waterhouse left his home in Los Angeles, Calif., some ten days ago and after stopping in Houston, Texas, to confer with the presiding elders of the German Mission Conference, reached New Orleans last Saturday morning and remained here through the Sabbath. He occupied the pulpit of the First Methodist Church on Sunday at 11 o'clock a.m., and was heard for the first time in the Crescent City. His text was Ecclesiastes 12:13, and the discourse was a strong and illuminating one. It was listened to with close attention by a large audience and called forth many expressions of high appreciation. The Bishop has a fine presence, an excellent delivery, a ready command of choice English, and is an able expositor of the Scriptures. The traditions as to the unusual pulpit ability of Methodist Bishops will not suffer at his hands. While in the city the Bishop was chiefly the guest of Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, who is an Emory and Henry man.

On Monday morning Bishop Waterhouse left for West Point, Miss., where he had an engagement to meet the presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference; from there he went to Corinth, where he was booked to preach the annual sermon for the North Mississippi Woman's Missionary Conference, which is now in session at that place; thence he will go to the Holston and North Carolina Conferences to confer with the presiding elders of those bodies concerning the work, and later he will attend the various Board Meetings and that of the College of Bishops to be held in May. He expects to remain in the East for more than three months, and to be with the brethren in a number of District Conferences. It is his purpose to devote a considerable share of this time to the work in North Mississippi, and to give the German Mission Conference the ten days from June 17 to June 27. The Bishop was looking well, was in a genial and happy frame of mind, and spoke encouragingly of the work of the Church, which is much on his heart. He is one of Southern Methodism's wisest counselors and safest leaders.

MRS. W. H. HARRISON DEAD.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the death of Mrs. W. H. Harrison, which occurred suddenly at the family residence at Starkville, Miss., on March 14. Sister Harrison was the wife of Rev. W. H. Harrison, an esteemed superannuate member of the North Mississippi Conference, and was the daughter of the late Hon. Charles Barnett of Noxubee County, who was one of the leading citizens of Mississippi. The funeral service was conducted on the 15th inst. by Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, assisted by Dr. T. C. Wier, and the interment was made in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery at Starkville. Besides her husband, the deceased is survived by two sons by a former marriage, Mr. J. Moss Harrison, who is employed in the Treasury Department at Washington and Mr. Walter Harrison, a prominent attorney in the same city; and also by another son, Dr. W. B. Harrison, a physician at Matson, Miss., and a daughter, Mrs. A. W. Reynolds, of Starkville. Sister Harrison was an earnest, active Christian, and possessed many noble traits of character. To know her was to esteem and love her. She made her influence strongly felt in the Master's service and will be greatly missed in her community. We extend our deepest sympathy to Brother Harrison, and pray that the Heavenly Father may comfort him and the other sorrowing loved ones in their sore bereavement. We trust that some one will furnish the Advocate with a fitting memoir of this faithful wife and mother at an early date.

OPEN TO AN ENGAGEMENT.

Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, is acquainted with a gentleman who was formerly a Roman Catholic priest and a professor in Jesuit colleges, but who has repudiated Romish teachings, and who now desires to attach himself to some Protestant institution where he can teach the Ancient or Modern Languages. He is a cultured man, and Dr. Werlein believes that he would be a valuable addition to any school that may need the service of such an instructor. Any letters of inquiry addressed to Dr. Werlein, 5830 Prytania Street, will receive prompt attention.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. F. Walton, of Bunkie, La., is planning to improve greatly our church at that place, and possibly this work may be accomplished before the assembling of the Alexandria District Conference there next July.

Prof. W. H. Smith, the State Superintendent of Education in Mississippi, was booked to address the Y. M. C. A. at the A. and M. College, near Starkville, last Sunday afternoon. Brother Smith is a member of our Church at Durant, Miss.

The work at Merryville, La., is prospering under the leadership of Rev. J. W. Booth. Merryville is now a station, and has made an assessment for ministerial support equal to that carried by all the churches on the charge last year.

We regret to learn that Mrs. Ike Jones, of Black Hawk, Miss., who is one of the most active workers in our Church at that place, has lately been seriously ill. We hope that ere this she is better, and that she will promptly regain her health.

A note from Rev. W. W. Woollard, of Columbus, Miss., bearing date of March 22, informs us that Rev. A. P. Leech has recently been quite ill. We regret to learn of the sickness of this honored veteran, and we trust that the attack will be of brief duration.

Keep in mind the Louisiana State Sunday School Convention, which will be held at Baton Rouge, April 13-15. A feast of good things is embraced in the program that has been arranged for that interesting occasion by Mr. Van Carter, our capable State Secretary.

Dr. F. R. Hill is having his usual success at the Felicity Street Church of this city. He is having good congregations, the services are spiritual, and members are being constantly received. Southern Methodism has scarcely had in its entire history a more efficient pastor than Dr. Hill.

Rev. F. H. McGee, of Cockrum, Miss., says: "Our work is progressing well. We are serving a fine people. They have treated us royally since we came among them in the beginning of the year." Brother McGee's letter brought us 6 subscriptions, for which he has our hearty thanks.

Rev. W. W. Perry, our hustling young pastor at Haynesville, La., sent us two lists of subscriptions last week. He reports his work as progressing reasonably well. No preacher in our patronizing territory has done more for the Advocate during the past two or three years than Brother Perry.

The Methodists of Knoxo, Miss., which is one of the appointments of the Fernwood charge, of which Rev. W. H. Saunders is pastor, have begun the erection of a modern house of worship. The work is under the direction of Mr. Z. Z. Linton, superintendent of the Fernwood Lumber Company.

Bishop J. H. McCoy has transferred Dr. W. F. Packard to the West Texas Conference and assigned him to the Travis Park Church of San Antonio, to succeed Dr. W. D. Bradfield, who has been elected editor of the Texas Christian Advocate. Rev. H. M. Whaling, Jr., took Dr. Packard's place at Marlin.

Rev. W. S. Henry, of De Ridder, La., is hoping to go forward with the task of constructing the new church at that point, in spite of the existing financial stringency. Brother Henry attended the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension in Alexandria on March 17, in the interest of this enterprise.

We know of no church anywhere that issues a neater weekly Bulletin than our First Church at Baton Rouge, La. This congregation has paid and pledged $72.85 on its assessment of $110 for the "Centenary Special." It is not always the case that a church located at the site of a great State institution shows such loyalty to the educational work of the Church.

Two Missionary Institutes will be held in the Alexandria (La.) District in the near future: one on the west side, at Boyce, and the other on the east side, at Jena. A vigorous evangelistic campaign is now on at Alexandria, where Dr. G. E. Cameron is pastor, and an effort will be made to extend the revival spirit into every other pastoral charge in the district.

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, have our thanks for three or more subscriptions sent in since the last issue of the Advocate: Rev. T. M. Bradley, Shelby, Miss., 3; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Poplarville, Miss., 5; Rev. J. T. Lewis, Greenville, Miss., 8; Brother H. R. Caldwell, Mount Olive, Miss., 3; Rev. W. W. Murray, Pelahatchie, Miss., 5.

Miss Mollie Higginbotham, the Advocate's good friend at Mer Rouge, La., sent us last week 1 new and 9 renewal subscriptions from that choice community. We scarcely need to say that we highly appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ. If our paper had such a friend among the members of every church, its circulation would soon be very much larger than it is.

Rev. E. G. Wood, of Standard, La., says: "I am having a great beginning on this charge. I have received 17 persons into the Church on profession of faith since January 1. It is my expectation to hold a revival at each appointment by the first of May. I will write you more fully concerning my work later." We like the ring of this message. The pastor who starts the year with a revival is wise.

Dr. G. E. Cameron, of Alexandria, in a note written on March 22, says: "Assisted by Dr. D. L. Coale, we are in the midst of a wonderful revival here. From the beginning until yesterday the meeting steadily increased in power. There have been conversions at almost every service, and yesterday (Sunday) was a climacteric day, with 200 or more professions of faith. Great numbers are joining the Church."

Rev. C. H. Herring, of the Woodville (Miss.) Circuit, reports that the weather and other things have seriously interfered with the work in his charge. Up to March 16, he had been able to preach at only one of his appointments, but he has managed to visit all his people and keep busy in the Master's service. He has the interests of the Advocate in mind, and has promised us a list of subscribers in the near future.

Rev. R. V. Fulton writes hopefully of his work on the St. Helena (La.) charge. He was cordially welcomed back for another year, and his people are kind and attentive. He has introduced the envelope system of caring for the finances and thinks that it promises to be a success. Brother Fulton has been remembering the Advocate in his rounds, and his letter brought us four subscriptions, for which he has our thanks.

The Commencement sermon of the Methodist Training School at Nashville, Tenn., will be delivered in McKendree Church on May 16, by Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, of Macon, Ga. The service of consecration in the afternoon will be led by Rev. T. C. Ragsdale, pastor of McKendree Church. The Annual Address will be delivered by Dr. T. N. Ivy, Editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, on Wednesday morning, May 19.

Rev. J. G. Johnson, of Black Hawk, Miss., in a business note to our office bringing us six additional subscriptions from his charge, makes the following reference to his work: "The outlook is still good for the coming year. We are planning and praying for a revival at each church." No better people can be found anywhere than those whom Brother Johnson serves. His Acona church has been declared by some to be perhaps the best rural church in Mississippi.

A dispatch from Summit, Miss., to the Times-Picayune on March 22 reads as follows: "The congregation of the Pisgah Church, four miles west of here, has just had a new house of worship completed, and Rev. W. N. Thomas, the pastor here and also of that community, preached the first sermon in the new structure yesterday, March 21." The people of that neighborhood are to be congratulated upon having brought this worthy enterprise to completion.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, writes: "Matters at the College are moving along smoothly. Our Commencement sermon will be preached in the chapel at 11 a.m., Sunday, June 6, by Bishop E. D. Mouzon, who will also deliver the sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association at the evening hour on the same day. The Annual Address will be delivered by Hon. J. S. Sexton, of Hazlehurst, Miss., on Tuesday morning, June 8."

A note from Rev. T. M. Bradley, of Shelby, Miss., informs us that Mr. T. J. Poitevent, who is an esteemed and useful citizen of that community, has been quite ill for along while. We regret very much indeed to learn this, and we pray that Brother Poitevent may soon begin to improve and that his health may be fully restored. Such men are all too scarce, and neither the State nor the Church can well afford to lose them. Brother Bradley reports that his work is in an excellent condition.

Mrs. J. L. Dantzler, formerly of Moss Point, Miss., but who now resides at 4920 St. Charles Avenue, this city, was severely burned by the overturning of an alcohol lamp in her home on March 17. At first it was thought that she could not survive the injuries sustained, but she has gradually improved, until at this writing a more favorable view is taken of her condition. We extend sympathy to Brother Dantzler in this anxious hour, and pray that his beloved wife may be spared to him and have a speedy and complete recovery.

In a business note to our office bringing 2 new and 4 renewal subscriptions, Rev. J. S. Purcell, President of the Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose, Miss., says: "Our school will close on April 27. The Commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. J. R. Jones, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Meridian. The session has been quite a success." Brother Purcell is enjoying a visit from his mother, Mrs. James Purcell, formerly of Blackhawk, Miss., but who for some years has been residing at Plain Dealing, La.

Rev. W. W. Williams, the efficient manager of the Mississippi Orphans' Home at Jackson, Miss., in a personal note to the Editor, says: "We are all well at the Orphanage. We are reducing our number as fast as we can find good homes for our children. We are praying and trusting that God will supply our needs. There are other needy children whom we are being urgently importuned to take, but we cannot do so until we get more money." This noble institution is doing a monumental work, and the Methodists in the two Mississippi Conferences ought to rally enthusiastically to its support.

We are indebted to Brother A. B. Campbell, the superintendent of our Sunday school at Eupora, Miss., for the following note: "Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, our Sunday School Field Agent, was with us last Sunday, March 14, and made two addresses. He is the livest Sunday school wire that we have had in Eupora in a long while. His talks were full of an enthusiasm that was contagious. He has a great message and delivers it in a practical and businesslike way. He is an organizer and a builder. We are better and stronger for having had him with us."

Rev. H. W. May, the energetic presiding elder, sends us the following note concerning the work in the Alexandria (La.) District: "I am pleased to say that the work of the year has begun auspiciously. I am closing the first round with great hope. The assessments for the support of the ministry are equal to those of last year, notwithstanding the prevailing financial depression. The brethren are busy in their various fields and the indications are that substantial results will follow their efforts. The 'Every-Member Canvass' is being emphasized and the beneficial effects are already in evidence."
